Firms faced with such a large fall in output and such a sustained recession are cutting capacity instead of waiting for an elusive recovery. Firms have gone bankrupt. Others have scaled back, not just temporarily but by scrapping and not mothballing unused productive potential. The latest growth forecast figures were available to the House this morning. The Minister will be particularly interested in what those figures reveal. We now know that the percentage change in GDP since the beginning of the recession in the second quarter of 1990 is 3·5 per cent. in the negative. In terms of billion pounds per year in 1992-93 rates, that is a loss of £21 billion.

That is the range of the problem confronting us. The Minister claimed that the Government had transformed the business environment. I should like to tell the House how Trade Indemnity—the United Kingdom's leading independent credit insurer, as it tells us—believes the business environment has been transformed. According to Trade Indemnity, 30 per cent. of United Kingdom firms are now working at half capacity and there appears to be no evidence of recovery in the United Kingdom economy. It says that construction failures rose 9 per cent. quarter on quarter and that service industry failures rose by 6 per cent. quarter on quarter. It also says that business failures in the northern region, the region which Conservative Members often claim somehow survives the recession more satisfactorily than other regions, rose by 19 per cent. quarter on quarter, providing the worst figures in the country. According to Trade Indemnity, prospects for the economy still appear weak and the danger of United Kingdom businesses being unprepared for the upturn in the economy is severe.

On 16 February, Peat, Marwick McLintock announced that there was an 8·2 per cent. rise in liquidations between 1991 and 1992. That is the scale of the problem. The Minister should have addressed that problem, but he did not. It is the Labour party's contention that the root cause of our problem is the failure to take investment seriously. I must tell Conservative Members that that is not something which divides this side of the House but something which we have in common: we believe in investment in our nation's industrial base and in the potential skills and abilities of our fellow citizens.

The Government should be leading the effort to rebuild our industrial base and to renew our public services, but they deliberately and wilfully march off in the opposite direction as though recession were somehow good for the national soul. As that former Chancellor who left the present Prime Minister with the unenviable heritage of 15 per cent. interest rates and 11 per cent. inflation once said, "If it isn't hurting, it isn't working." As the Prime Minister invites us to consider his inheritance when he became Prime Minister, it seems only fair that we should consider the inheritance of the present Chancellor when he assumed that post. Just because no one on either side of the House has said anything favourable about the present Chancellor in this debate, that does not mean that he does not have the same right as the Prime Minister to complain about his inheritance.

If no one else will stand up for the Chancellor I suppose that it falls to me to do so—because he has a defence. As my hon. Friend the Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) said, the Chancellor did not choose the rate at which we entered the exchange rate mechanism; nor did he choose the timing, which was just before the annual meeting of that key factor in the management of international economic affairs, the Conservative party conference. The present Chancellor did not impose ruinously high interest rates on British industry; nor did he maintain them for such a long time; he was only the Chief Secretary at the time and, as the present Chief Secretary would no doubt confirm, that means that he should not be blamed at all. The Chancellor's defence should be to say loud and clear, "I think that you have to consider, first, my inheritance as Chancellor: we had 15 per cent. interest rates and inflation was just under 11 per cent.—what to do, what to do?"

People who moan about the mess that they have inherited usually go on to demonstrate how things have got better since they took over. Is such a defence open to the Prime Minister and his Chancellor? The United Kingdom's economy has shrunk by 3 per cent. since the Prime Minister took office. That failure to achieve growth has happened under the regime of the Prime Minister who reportedly told The Independent that "growth" was the happiest word in the English language. I suppose that we could say that that puts love, sex and money in their place. Each to his own.

The hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) spoke about the OECD's forecasts for the five years from 1989 to 1994. The OECD forecasts that the average growth of the G7 economies will be 9 per cent. Over that time, the British economy will have grown by less than 1 per cent. That clearly shows that the problem has a particular and peculiar British dimension that the Government should address. Investment in Britain has collapsed. It fell by 14 per cent. in the past three years and the Government forecast that it will grow by only 0·25 per cent. this year.

Private credit agencies have told us much about business failures. The Conservative party, the party of enterprise, has presided over the destruction of the enterprise for which the Conservatives claim to stand. The United Kingdom recorded 62,000 business failures in 1992, compared with 47,000 in 1991. That is an increase of 31 per cent. on 1991, which itself recorded a rise of 65 per cent. on 1990. The Conservatives are the party of business failure rather than business opportunity.

The housing market has also been hit by the recession. United Kingdom house prices have fallen by 7 per cent. since the recession began, leaving many families trapped in homes that are worth less than their mortgages. In the depths of a recession one would have thought that the balance of payments would give the Government at least some joy and that they could point to some cause for optimism. That is not possible either. The latest figures for December 1992 show the biggest monthly rise in the balance of payments deficit for two and a half years. It is a rise of £1·5 billion, which is up on November and three times the figure for December 1991.

The end of the year figure for 1992 was £12 billion. That is despite cheaper exports and more expensive imports. Given its position on the economic cycle, that figure shows that there is something structurally wrong with our economy. Did the Minister say a word about that? He did not.

Probably the most important issue and certainly the most important for the parliamentary Labour party is what all this means for our people in terms of jobs and the country's employment base. Does any Conservative Member recognise the following quote?

"The scourge of unemployment has afflicted the industrialised world more harshly than at any time for 50 years. Britain has suffered as acutely as any country."

If any Conservative Member would like to intervene to say where that quote comes from, I shall be happy to give way. No one does. It is from the Conservative party manifesto of 1987, the manifesto on which Conservative Members fought the 1987 general election. That, and the subsequent text, gave the clear impression that the Conservative party was to reduce unemployment, but nothing of the sort has happened. Since the Prime Minister took office, unemployment in the United Kingdom has increased by 1,290,300, from 1,704,800 in October 1990 to 2,995,100 in January 1993—an increase of 76 per cent. The unadjusted figures for the same period show an increase of 83 per cent.

Mr. Jenkin: There have been Conservative Governments who have reduced the rate of unemployment, but naturally no Conservative Government have ever promised to abolish the economic cycle. Can the hon. Gentleman draw the attention of the House to a single Labour Government who have left office with a lower rate of unemployment than that which they inherited from their predecessors?

Mr. Brown: The hon. Gentleman is trying to apply to me a test that the Minister and other Conservative Members who took part in the debate would not accept for themselves. When they were asked about the periods that they accepted for the statistics that they used in the debate, they would say that a fair starting point was 1985 or 1981. If one examines closely the record of the last Labour Government and makes allowances for the disastrous overhang that they inherited from the Anthony Barber boom regime which preceded them and for the oil crisis, it is fair to conclude that unemployment was being reduced as they left office to just below 1 million.

We all know that there was a disastrous upturn when the nature of the Government changed in 1979. The Labour party and the last Labour Government can take some pride in their record on employment, but the Conservative party can take no pride on that issue. Indeed, it seems to be the Conservative view that it should not be an issue for government at all, except as an aspect of policy on inflation. It is noticeable that when the Conservative Government claim to have inflation under control we have massive unemployment and, when they begin to think that they should do something about unemployment, inflation starts to go up again. That has been a persistent problem for the Conservative party in government and I have yet to hear a convincing response from Conservative Members on that issue.

Mr. Jenkin: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Brown: I do not wish to eat into the time of other hon. Members who wish to contribute to the debate, but I will give way to the hon. Gentleman a second time.

Mr. Jenkin: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. It is fair for the Conservative Government to take credit for the fact that in the United Kingdom a higher proportion of the population are in full-time or part-time work than is the case in virtually any of our European competitors. Will the hon. Gentleman at least give us the credit for that?

Mr. Brown: The hon. Gentleman should come to my surgery on a Saturday morning or a Friday night and explain that to the substantial number of my constituents who are out of work. They do not want to know that other people are in work. They want to know why they cannot have a job. It is not that they do not want to work—they want a job.

Let me say a little more about the sort of jobs that Conservative Members seem to support. There are 29 claimants chasing every vacancy, and regional variations are substantial. The experience of the 1980s tells us that many of the long-term unemployed withdraw from the labour force during a recession and do not find their way back during recoveries. Many of the 1·6 million people who have lost their jobs in the past two and a half years may never return to the labour market. That is a human tragedy and one which is a direct result of the policies that the Government have pursued. The Labour party, in opposition and in government, is committed to bringing that to an end. The enduring cost of the recession in scrapped capital and labour is likely to be about 3 per cent. of GDP or £20 billion a year of lost output.

[Mr. Brown]

Conservative Members have talked about low wages in other economies, such as that of Taiwan, as a cause for the success of those economies. They did not mention Taiwan's massive and intelligent industrial investment. Nor did they mention Taiwan's strong manufacturing base. They did not tell us about Taiwan's strong commitment to education, including industrial education, and to training. There are more students in higher education in Taiwan, as a proportion of the population, than in the United Kingdom. The Conservative party and the Government seem to believe that by keeping British citizens poor the economy will recover. We have heard much from Conservative Members about the importance of keeping wages low. They argue that, somehow, that makes people rich, but I do not follow the argument.

I shall give an example that has been provided by a Conservative party supporting newspaper, the Newcastle Evening Chronicle, in an advertisement for a job. I think that Conservative Members will like my example because it is the sort of job of which they approve. The job is for a chauffeur-handyman to work in a large house in the Gosforth area. The applicant must have a clean driving licence and at least one letterheaded reference relating to a similar job. The job requirements are chauffeuring locally, travelling long distances and looking after the upkeep of the house. He must have some gardening experience and some painting and decorating experience. There will be daily yard sweeping and gravel raking. He will be required to go out to undertake many odd jobs, including walking the dog and purchasing the shopping. The applicant will be expected to wash and valet the cars. There are many more duties. Understandably, a polite and patient manner will be required. The hours from Monday to Friday are 8.30 am to 6.30 pm. The successful applicant must be available to be on call for 24 hours if necessary. The pay is £150 a week. Despite the requirement to be on call for 24 hours, the advertisement states that some overtime might be available. Finally, it is a necessity that the applicant has his own car. I expect that Conservative Members think that that is a good job. The real test is not political ideology but whether any of them would apply for the job. Would any of them undertake it for £150 a week? We know that they would not.

At least that job was in the country, which is more than can be said for the jobs of those who run our pensions at the Department of Social Security offices at Longbenton. Apparently the Government are proposing to dismiss those workers—and to have the details of about 22 million pensioners sent by satellite transmission to the Philippines so that workers who are paid about 38p an hour can undertake the work instead. That might lead to a saving of money, but it means the permanent loss of jobs in our economy. Not content with seeing manufacturing jobs go abroad, the Government are planning to see how many service sector jobs can be sent abroad as well. What they expect the economy to consist of and what they expect people to live on once they have done that, they do not tell us. There was an opportunity for the Minister to explain that to us, but he did not take it.

The Government's failure to intervene in just about any area of the economy was starkly demonstrated this morning with the collapse of the Taurus system and the subsequent resignation of the chairman of the stock exchange. That is a matter for both the Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry. Surely the Minister could have said something about the Government's response to that significant event. If other major trading centres can run computerised trading systems, it is pathetic if it is not possible to get such a system running in this country. It is important that Taurus is in place and that it comes on stream. The failure of the private sector to manage this for itself should be of great concern to the Minister, yet he did not mention it. I shall give way to him if he wants to say that the Government take the matter seriously and intend to intervene directly to ensure that Taurus does come on stream.

Mr. Leigh: The tone of the debate on that issue was perhaps sent by the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), who told the House that in his view the City of London should be towed away and put in the middle of the Atlantic.

Mr. Brown: The City will note that the Minister felt that he could safely respond to my hon. Friend's remark but not to the point of greater interest to those who work in the City and believe that Britain has a future in the financial services sector—the importance of Taurus. Many people outside the House would have expected the Minister to say something more constructive and to deal with the heart and core of the issue, rather than with my hon. Friend's theoretical threat.

Reference has been made to the 1988 top rate tax reduction, which many of my right hon. and hon. Friends feel contributed to the country's current problems. Those reductions were accompanied by lower interest rates—though not for very long—and by substantial credit relaxations. Dynamic young Conservatives lectured in the late 1980s on the need for "gearing"—the Conservative code for borrowing up to the hilt. The Conservative party's heroes of that time were the Reichman brothers, Mr. Godfrey Bradman, and others who were supposed to turn base metal into gold.

We were told that there would a trickle-down effect —that giving the rich more money to spend would somehow help the rest of us and stimulate economic growth. All that Conservative policies stimulated was asset price inflation, and interest rates quickly increased. There were 10 successive quarters of negative growth. The policy designed to produce economic growth was at least partly responsible for exactly the reverse occurring, paralleled by a massive rise in unemployment and in the public sector borrowing requirement. As Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Prime Minister spoke of wealth trickling down through the generations. The Conservative Government's achievement is to ensure that debt will go trickling down through the generations—debt incurred at least in part not for investment but for pre-election tax cuts.

If the experience of the late 1980s taught us anything, it was that giving money to the rich to help the rest of us is not just idiotic but positively damaging. Negative growth, rising unemployment and a massive deficit are the peculiarly British dimensions to the present crisis. Output has fallen 3 per cent., while that of our competitors is still growing. Unemployment in Britain is rising twice as fast as in competitor countries. Consumer spending has fallen 2 per cent. below the level of two years ago and investment 15 per cent., while imports have risen 4 per cent. The only real increase in demand is the recession-led 8 per cent. rise in public expenditure since 1990-91. I have not noticed the Chief Secretary to the Treasury taking credit for that—presumably it was his predecessor's fault.

The challenge facing the Chancellor on Tuesday is whether he will take the measures to get this country back to work. As my hon. Friend the Member for Dagenham rightly said, the Chancellor must focus on employment as a key issue in the management of the British economy—one which requires the attention of the Government. However, the Prime Minister's recent statements in the House do not give us much hope for the future. When asked about employment at Leyland DAF, he said that matter was for the receiver. That could be an epitaph for our manufacturing base.

This country needs investment in its infrastructure and in the skills and abilities of our fellow citizens. It also requires investment in our public services. Many hon. Members have spoken of the need for Britain to become a clever country. I say to the House that it will never do so while we have a stupid Government.

2.18 pm

Mr. John Townend (Bridlington): I shall have to disappoint the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, (Mr. Brown), because I am happy to support my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his policies. It is strange that the hon. Gentleman did not mention that this country—which, according to the Opposition, is in a terrible mess—exports a greater proportion of its gross domestic product than any other industrialised nation.

When we debate the economy, we must look around the world, because what happens in the rest of the world has a great effect on this country. Apart from the United States of America, where a floating dollar and high interest rates have produced significant growth, the outlook is pretty bleak. Japan, after a stock exchange crash and the collapse of property values, is teetering on recession. But Europe is the disaster area. That is bad news for the British economy, because Europe is now our largest market. Germany, led by Chancellor Kohl, has mishandled reunification. As a result, Germany's public debt is increasing, interest rates are high, unemployment is rising and the recession is deepening.

The countries that remain in the exchange rate mechanism have interest rates at a level appropriate not for their economies but for the German economy. France, with low inflation, has the highest real interest rates in history and has been driven into recession; unemployment stands at more than 3 million and the socialist Government will be thrown out lock, stock and barrel.

The situation is even worse in Italy, which is in a mess economically and politically. Corruption and mafia influence permeate big business and the political parties. It is not a pretty sight. In Spain, unemployment is rising, the prestige of the socialist Prime Minister is falling and that country, too, is in a mess.

Let us consider the situation in this country. We have the lowest inflation rate in my lifetime. Because we are no longer in the ERM, we have a competitive pound, the lowest interest rates in Europe and low corporate and personal taxation. We enjoy first-class industrial relations, with the number of days lost through strikes the lowest for years. Because we opted out of the social chapter, industry has the advantage of not being weighed down by the social costs of Europe.

Our stock exchange is buoyant. It is always ahead of the game when it comes to the economy—just as the bookies are at election time. We have all the ingredients for a successful economy once the recovery gathers speed. The Government deserve proper credit for that.

Let us consider how things would have been if a Labour Government had been elected last summer. Does the Labour party, never mind anyone else, really think that, under a Labour Government, inflation would be as low as it is today? Labour made it clear that it would have kept Britain in the ERM. There would have been realignment, but interest rates would be higher than they are now and the pound would not be as competitive.

In the general election, Labour was honest in saying that it would increase the burden of taxation. Industry would have carried the burden of not only the social chapter but a minimum wage. Tens of thousands more jobs would have been lost and many more businesses would have gone bankrupt. The result would have been disastrous. There would have been no recovery and this country would have been stuck with the deepest recession this century.

There are three outstanding problems and we should not make any secret of them: a large budget deficit, a big balance of payments deficit and high unemployment. Two of those problems are interconnected—unemployment and the balance of payments deficit. High unemployment is not caused just by recession. It is made worse by the deferred effect of the computer revolution. That is noticeable throughout the financial services industry, banks and insurance companies. Even with a strong recovery, those jobs will never come back.

While I fully support the Prime Minister in our need to expand our manufacturing base, we must be clear that it will not provide jobs, although it will provide wealth. The new robo-factories will not provide all that many jobs. Service industries, and small businesses in particular, will have to provide them. A large hotel will employ many more people than many manufacturing industries and, if it provides services for international tourism and earns foreign exchange, it is just as important to our economy.

Unemployment is interconnected with our balance of payments deficit. Our problem is not so much the fact that our exporters are not successful; it is the amount of goods and services that we import. If we could make significant progress in winning a larger share of our own market, we would help to solve both problems. I can tell my hon. Friend the Minister quite openly that the Government have to be prepared to cheat for our industry in the way that the French cheat for theirs. We also need a change of culture among many of the buying public, as many of them still think that it is best or smarter to buy foreign goods.

Since 1979, British industry has made great strides, as many of my hon. Friends have said. Whereas 10 or 15 years ago, one might have argued that British goods were not competitive or of the right quality, today many British goods are of the best quality in the world and are competitively priced. Yet we still have a prejudice against them. I think that Dixons, the large retailer, sells videos that are made made in this country but sold under a Japanese-sounding name.

My constituency is an example. I represent more pigs than people, because the largest pig production in the country is in my constituency and we produce the finest pigmeat in Europe. Although our bacon was not of the highest quality 15 years ago, I defy anyone today to find bacon of a higher quality or more competitively priced than English charter bacon. Is it not a disgrace that 50 per cent. of bacon bought in retail outlets is from Denmark or Holland? My wife cannot buy British bacon in our local shop. The retailer told her that the cash-and-carries stock only Danish bacon.

I could speak for some considerable time on how to deal with the budget deficit, but I am delighted that the Government have made it clear that it is their number one priority to deal with that problem in the next year.

Because of the problems that we have faced in the past few years—no one denies them—it has become fashionable to write off our economic success of the 1980s, which was based on two pillars of economic policy. The first was progressively to reduce the budget deficit and to bring it into balance—fiscal rectitude, which is something that I have believed in all my life. The second was to reduce inflation by controlling the money supply and letting the pound float.

I am delighted that the Government have returned to those two fundamentals. We have a floating pound and our situation has improved enormously since September. Inflation is low and we are paying more attention to monetary targets. I am convinced that if we stick to those policies our prosperity will return and, as a result, we shall be able to have a long period of non-inflationary, sustainable growth, which will be of the utmost benefit to our people. In this world of changing circumstances, it is clear that economic might, not military might, is all important.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has done a magnificent job in rescuing our economy. I hope that he will set out his strategy in his Budget and that when he introduces his December Budget it will be clear to everyone that this country has recovered.

Filton Airfield

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

2.31 pm

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise in the House the many and serious concerns felt by thousands of my constituents at the decision by British Aerospace plc to impose a commercial airport on the engineering complex occupied by British Aerospace, Rolls-Royce and a number of smaller firms at Filton and Patchway. Before I deal with the various areas in which the Government can be or should be involved, I feel that I should set the background to the unprecedented situation in which my constituents now find themselves.

Since the war, and the decision by the city of Bristol to develop its regional airport at Lulsgate to the south of Bristol, it has generally been accepted that airport development at Filton is neither necessary nor desirable, and there has been steady residential development around the airstrip since that date. On a number of occasions, residential development has been opposed by British Aerospace on the ground of safety. Indeed, I recollect an occasion in the 1980s when I was called in by British Aerospace to oppose residential development in the area known as Catbrain in the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Sir J. Cope), the Paymaster General—whom I am delighted to see in his place—purely on the grounds of safety and noise. On that occasion, British Aerospace was successful in using its local Members of Parliament and its industrial muscle to prevent housing development. On other occasions, it was less successful, and housing development continued to its present level, with further major development planned.

Nevertheless, fears that all of the trend of post-war decisions in relation to the airstrip might be reversed by British Aerospace persisted. That is why, on 3 August 1989, with no other hint that any such development might be contemplated, British Aerospace replied to the chief environmental health officer of Northavon district council in a letter—which I shall, of course, be prepared to table—that is, with hindsight, marked by the opacity of its language and ending with the statement that "the airfield will continue to be used only for purposes in connection with the Filton Aerospace Company's businesses."

Needless to say, on that date, those businesses did not include the operation of a commercial airport.

With the establishment of RUCATSE—the working group on runway capacity to serve south-east England—to consider the future of airport capacity for the south-east, considerable fears of airport development at Filton were created and a local organisation was formed to campaign against such an airport—CAFCA, the campaign against Filton commercial airport.

On 8 November 1991, the campaign wrote to Sir Graham Day, the then chairman of British Aerospace, pointing out a few of the objections that would be felt locally to such a development, and specifically asking him to give an assurance that Filton would not become a commercial airport. That assurance was given.

On 12 December 1991, a briefing meeting for right hon. and hon. Members who have connections with British Aerospace through their constituencies was held at British Aerospace headquarters in the Strand. I was present with about 20 other right hon. and hon. Members. Sir Graham Day, as chairman, and Mr. Dick Evans, the chief executive, addressed us on the conditions and prospects of the company, and the ways in which they saw the business developing. Mindful of my constituents' concerns, I asked the chairman and the chief executive, as they stood in front of the assembled hon. Members, whether they had any plans to develop any of the company's sites as airports. I received a categorical assurance from Mr. Dick Evans, with the concurrence of Sir Graham Day, that on that date—12 December 1991—the company had, and I quote Mr. Evans' words from memory, "no interest whatsoever in airport development". So categorical was this assurance that, within days, I was able to reassure the officers of CAFCA that although it might be necessary, as reinforcement, to maintain the campaign against potential airport development a little while longer, I had been assured that they need have no fears in this respect.

A few days later, I received a rather strange phone call from Mr. Charles Drace-Francis, chief public relations adviser to the company. He asked me, and I still have a note of the telephone conversation in my files, please to keep Mr. Evans's remarks regarding the potential development of Filton confidential. He claimed that he was phoning from British Aerospace headquarters.

Since I had no reason to doubt the company's bona fides—it is, after all, one of the largest employers in my constituency—I decided, on behalf of my constituents, to pursue the matter in another way. Since I was prepared, as a friend of the company, to abide by Mr. Drace-Francis's words, I wrote to the managing director of the Filton site, Mr. Chris Geoghegan, on 10 January 1992, pointing out that British Aerospace's apparently eager acceptance of the opportunity to look at the possibility of a commercial airport had raised considerable suspicions among my constituents and others living around the airport which it would take some time to dissipate. I offered myself and my position in the House to help the company allay those fears and suggested that we meet within the next month or so to see to what extent our approaches could be co-ordinated.

Had I been more suspicious of what, until the end of 1991, had appeared to be a wholly honourable company, I should perhaps have been more concerned when I received no reply to the letter and had to press several more times eventually to get a meeting, at which I received no information. Had I been more suspicious on behalf of my constituents, I should perhaps have been surprised that when the BBC wished to make a short film about commercial flights from Bristol and, therefore, wished to film at Bristol Lulsgate airport and at Filton, I was refused facilities to film at Filton. I am sure that you, Madam Deputy Speaker, will appreciate that it is difficult for a Member for Parliament to conceive of such duplicity by the principal employer in his constituency, as has since been revealed.

On Friday 5 February this year, British Aerospace announced that it intended to impose an airport on Filton with virtually immediate effect and that it had no intention of applying for any form of planning permission as, in its view, it did not need it. I found out about that decision half an hour before it was announced to the press.

I subsequently found out that the licence granted to the company by the Civil Aviation Authority to operate an airport had first been granted on 11 October 1988, long before every single event and every single statement that I have so far listed. I also subsequently found out that, despite all the statements made by officers of the company and all the honeyed words that it had used in every communication on the subject, the company had arranged for inspections of the proposed airport facilities by the Civil Aviation Authority on 19 July 1988, 14 September 1988, 7 March 1990, 7 February 1991 and 1 April 1992. Four of those inspections took place before the statement by the chief executive of British Aerospace plc to assembled Members of Parliament to the effect that no airport development was even contemplated. It is now up to British Aerospace and, in particular, the present chief executive, Mr. Dick Evans—as the chairman of that company at that meeting has moved on—to justify their conduct.

It is, of course, possible that when the company made its series of statements, which I have listed, between 1989 and 1991, the chief executive had no knowledge of the fact that his underlings had already applied for and obtained a licence to run an airport. It is, of course, possible that the airport licence applied for in 1988, and renewed after each of the inspections by the Civil Aviation Authority, was a joke and never intended to be proceeded with. I am sure that many people would prefer either of those explanations to the perhaps more obvious one—that a statement by the chief executive, with the concurrence of the chairman, of one of Britain's major companies to an assembly of Members of Parliament, should now be proved to be wholly false and directly contrary to the facts as they should have been known to those two senior executives at the time. I shall leave the conduct of Sir Graham Day and Mr. Dick Evans to the judgment of history.

I now deal with the issue that is the purpose of the debate—the consequences for my constituents. Since the announcement by British Aerospace that it had held a licence to operate at Filton since 11 October 1988, I have been to see the Civil Aviation Authority and my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping. I have been assured—and I naturally accept the assurance—that any secrecy that surrounded the proposal for Filton airport and any stealth on the part of British Aerospace was not shared by the CAA. That was confirmed in a letter from the chairman of that body to my right hon. Friend the Member for Northavon.

The Civil Aviation Authority is obliged to publish any successful application for an airport licence. Unfortunately, it is obliged only to publish it in the widely read periodical known as Air Pilot, which lists all licensed aerodromes. In addition, it was obliged to publish British Aerospace's application on 1 July 1992 for permission to levy airport charges in the equally widely read periodical entitled "The Official Record of the United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority", series 6 part II. Should we be surprised that Northavon district council, within whose boundaries the Filton airstrip lies, did not feel it necessary to take out a regular subscription to those publications? Although it now does so, it is far too late to correct the damage done.

My first question to the Minister, therefore, is whether he intends to arrange for wider publication in future of CAA applications that are so damaging to the interests of a substantial community. My hon. Friend's answer will be of considerably wider interest than he may think. In its application to the Civil Aviation Authority, British Aerospace listed nine other airstrips that it regarded as airports and over which it could, therefore, claim the same rights to impose commercial airports without any form of planning permission, environmental assessment or meaningful public consultation.

The airstrips are as follows: Hatfield, in the constituencies of my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security; Chester, in the constituency of the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones); Liverpool, in the constituency of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden); Woodford, in the constituencies of my hon. Friends the Members for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton); Dunsfold, in the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health; Brough, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran); Warton, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack); Samlesbury, in the constituencies of my hon. Friends the Members for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) and for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans), whom I welcome to the debate; and Prestwick, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie). They have been warned.

At least licence applications are published. Other matters that are equally germane to the development of an airport are not. When the CAA receives an airport licence application, it has to consider that application against a thick book of guidelines for United Kingdom airports and to decide whether to grant the application, and what variations from its guidelines to accept if it decides to grant a licence. Although the guidelines can be made available to the public, the public are not entitled under present regulations to know what variations from the guidelines have been permitted by the CAA in granting a licence and, therefore, to what extent the safety or the environment of the public have been compromised in the licence as granted. It should be remembered that the CAA is not concerned—it is not obliged to be—with public safety. It is charged by legislation only with considering the safety of aircraft and the people inside them.

My second question is whether, for the sake of public reassurance, my hon. Friend the Minister will now, or in the future, require the CAA to publish the exceptions it makes to its own guidelines. Regrettably, the Department of Transport, like members of the public and myself, has been duped by British Aerospace into aiding the campaign of public reassurance that has been mounted over the past four years while British Aerospace prepared its ground. Correspondence from the Department in the latter months of 1991, copies of which I have sent to the Department and which I am prepared to table, contains such statements as:

"there is moreover no question of any major runway development taking place . . . without public consultation and a full enquiry into any objections",

and

"there is no question of local authorities not also being able to feed in Members' views on the implications of development",

and

"RUCATSE is carrying out only a generalised survey of the possible implications of the airport's development in the longer term . . . It is not a substitute for the planning processes, and before any major runway development took place at whatever site, there would need to be a planning application, and opportunity for all concerned to put forward views",

and

"there is no question of any major new runway development taking place, at any of the locations being looked at, without full public consultation. If British Aerospace were at some future date to submit a planning application for Filton's development as a civil airport, those with views would naturally be able to bring them forward."

It is clear that if those statements by the Department of Transport are to have any meaning, my hon. Friend will have to look, within the context of the law that he has to operate—I accept that that acts as a straitjacket—for ways in which to convince British Aerospace that the only honest way in which the development can proceed is after a normal planning application and, if necessary, a full inquiry.

I make two general observations. A recent study of population density in the immediate area of the runway at a number of existing airports gives Filton a residential density of 37 per cent. compared with 12 per cent. for Bristol Lulsgate, 13 per cent. for Stansted, 27 per cent. for Manchester, 29 per cent. for Heathrow and 23 per cent. for Gatwick. The population density at Filton is 28 per cent. greater than that at Heathrow, 60 per cent. greater than at Gatwick and 185 per cent. greater than at Stansted.

Is such an airport really to be imposed without the populations concerned even having the chance, as part of the planning process, to have their say? I hope that the Minister will make it clear in his reply that this Government do not represent the ability of big business to ride roughshod over the hopes, environment and property of many thousands of ordinary people who believed that they had some protection against being shoved around in this way. That is what my constituents will be looking for from the Minister this afternoon.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Steve Norris): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) for raising the important matter of British Aerospace's plans for Filton, and I am delighted to see in his place my right hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Sir J. Cope), the Paymaster General. The airfield is located in both my right hon. Friend's and my hon. Friend's constituency.

Developments at airports usually require a balance to be struck between economic benefit and environmental impact. I hope to be able to reassure my hon. Friend that in this case his constituents' concerns have not been forgotten or ignored. I can also reassure him that the Civil Aviation Authority has handled its role in the matter in a way that is totally in line with the obligations placed upon it by Parliament.

First, I will say something about the CAA's role. One of the main duties of the authority is to ensure the safety of civil aviation in the United Kingdom. In exercising that duty, the authority is responsible for the licensing of aerodromes under the Air Navigation Order 1989. An aerodrome needs a licence if it is to be used for the purpose of public transport flights or certain other types of operation. The authority is required—I stress "required" —to grant a licence if it is satisfied that the applicant is competent to run the aerodrome and that the aerodrome is safe.

When considering an application for a licence, the authority is concerned solely with safety matters. It cannot take environmental or other, non-safety, matters into account. The system quite properly makes a clear distinction between planning matters and safety issues. The question whether the applicant has or has not obtained planning permission for his activities plays no part in the authority's decisions on licensing. I am sure that that is as it should be. This is why the Air Navigation Order makes no provision for public consultation on licensing decisions.

My hon. Friend has pointed out that the authority is charged with considering the safety of aircraft and people inside them rather than public safety. I hope that he will accept that the best way of ensuring the safety of people and property on the ground is to ensure that aircraft take off, fly and land as safely as possible. There are, of course, additional safeguards, in which the CAA is closely involved. The CAA advises local planning authorities on the safety of proposed developments in public safety zones, which may be established at larger airports. It is also closely involved in the process of safeguarding operational surfaces on the approach to airport runways.

The authority's decisions have been duly notified in the required manner and I can assure my hon. Friend that the authority has carried out its licensing duties in accordance with its statutory responsibilities.

The Civil Aviation Authority has also granted British Aerospace permission to levy airport charges. Under the Airports Act 1986, an airport exceeding a specified annual turnover threshold becomes subject to economic regulation by the authority and is required to seek permission to levy airport charges. The authority may refuse to grant permission only on grounds specified in the Act. Last year, British Aerospace applied for and received permission to levy airport charges at Filton, and the application was publicised as required. Again, the authority has acted according to its statutory duties.

My hon. Friend has asked whether the Government will arrange for wider publication of successful licence applications and of applications for permission to levy charges. I take his point that the periodicals in which these currently appear are not found in the average home or doctor's waiting room, and I believe that there is a good case for making the information more widely available. I see that my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) is in his place. He will convey to my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping my concern that he should consider with the Civil Aviation Authority whether wider publication can be achieved. Variation of licences is a separate issue, but I am sure that my noble Friend would be happy to look at the matter further in consultation with my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West.

The planning issues in this case are a matter for Northavon district council in the first instance and, in the event of an appeal, for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend has not so far been involved in the matter, as Northavon has not yet formally challenged the view of British Aerospace that no planning permission is required.

Parliament has rightly decided that it is for local authorities to determine planning applications, having regard to conditions prevailing in the locality, and indeed to decide whether permission is required, but it may be helpful if I restate the types of issues that local planning authorities have to consider in such cases. The purpose of the planning system is to control the development and use of land in the public interest. It is a fundamental principle of development control that planning powers can relate only to the use of the land in question.

The granting of permission by the CAA to an airport operator to levy charges automatically confers certain permitted development rights under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. The general development order grants a general planning permission for specified classes of development. This means that a specific consent from a local planning authority is not required. Those "permitted development rights" largely apply to minor developments, to developments that are controlled through other approval procedures and to developments by statutory undertakers and local authorities in the performance of their statutory duties.

In the case of an airport operator that is a statutory undertaker, "permitted developments" that do not require specific planning permission include the use of buildings within the airport perimeter in connection with the provision of air transport services. However, major development proposals, such as the construction or extension of runways or the construction of passenger terminals, would require planning permission. Moreover, a range of less substantial development—such as an alteration to an operational building—may be carried out only after consultation with the local planning authority.

In order for a planning application to be required for the intensification of the use of an existing airport, it has to be established whether what is being proposed constitutes a material change of use. As they say in the planning world, that is a matter "of fact and degree". In some cases, it will not be unreasonable for there to have been a general increase in flights, consistent with general trends in aircraft activity. It is no easy task to judge those matters, and I repeat that it would be wrong for Ministers to attempt to fetter the judgment of local planning authorities.

There are new provisions in section 192 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 which enable someone proposing to carry out development to ask the local planning authority to decide whether it would be "lawful" for planning purposes. It is open to British Aerospace to use this procedure if it wishes. If the council gave an adverse decision, the company would have a right of appeal to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. You, Madam Deputy Speaker, will understand that, for that reason, I cannot comment further on the planning merits of the proposal.

I sense that there is some misunderstanding among British Aerospace's critics about the relationship between what is proposed now and previous investigations into whether Filton might be used more intensively. The working group being chaired by my Department, the so-called RUCATSE working group, considered Filton airport, along with Bristol airport at Lulsgate, at an early stage of its work. However, RUCATSE concluded that, because of their location, the two airports were unlikely to be able to cater for much of the expected increase in demand for air transport in the south-east.

I emphasise that there is no connection between British Aerospace's current proposals and RUCATSE. They are on quite different scales of magnitude. RUCATSE was looking at Filton in the context of a wide-ranging study of options for handling an additional runway's worth of capacity. The document from the Civil Aviation Authority —CAP 570—which forms the basis of the RUCATSE study, spoke of the possibility of half the theoretical capacity of a runway being centred at Filton. By contrast, what British Aerospace is proposing now does not constitute anywhere near such a significant increase in capacity or activity.

When RUCATSE was considering Filton, the Government gave assurances that major runway development could not take place there without full public consultation within the planning procedures. Some of my hon. Friend's constituents have suggested that we are going back on that assurance. I assure him that that is not so. As I have explained, British Aerospace is not now contemplating an increase in activity on anywhere near that scale.

By any standards, the option explored in RUCATSE would have constituted major runway development. It would have necessitated substantial additional investment in new terminal capacity and other facilities. By contrast, the present plans utilise the runway which has existed for some 40 years, and the resulting increase in passengers could be accommodated without new building.

Of course, local residents are concerned about the possible level of disturbance that scheduled services might cause. It is perhaps regrettable that so much housing has been built under the runway approach at such a long-established and substantial airfield, but, as I have said, I fully recognise the concerns of local residents. As we believe that local matters are best discussed and resolved locally, noise abatement measures at airports other than Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are the responsibility of the owners or operators of aerodromes. We expect aerodrome and aircraft operators to reduce, so far as is practicable and reasonable, the disturbance caused by their operations. British Aerospace is aware of the concerns of the local residents. I understand that the company wishes to enter into a legally binding agreement with the local planning authority. The details of such an agreement would, of course, be a matter for the parties involved, but I am told that it would restrict the number of aircraft movements at Filton. I understand that British Aerospace intends to offer a ceiling on annual movements of the same order of magnitude as the level of movements a few years ago, though I appreciate that the mix of types of movement within the total might be different.

I believe that it is also British Aerospace's intention to restrict the type of aircraft using Filton to small, quiet, modern aircraft that meet the latest standards on noise. The largest aircraft allowed for commercial flights would be the BAe146. Those aircraft are much less noise-intrusive than the F111s and other military aircraft that have previously operated at Filton; they are widely known as "whisper jets".

We know from experience at London City airport that such operations over a built-up area need not cause undue disturbance to local residents. I accept that there is no night flying at London City, but it has similar restrictions on the types of aircraft and a more generous ceiling on movements. The airport operators have worked hard to cultivate good relationships with the neighbouring community. The local authority has moved from an initial stance of opposition to the airport to one of support. I am encouraged that British Aerospace appears to be taking a similarly responsible approach to environmental issues.

Concern has also been expressed about the effect of these proposals on Lulsgate. I understand that concern, but I trust that my hon. Friend will understand that we do not consider that it would be helpful to direct from the centre on whether services should be provided at one location or another.

The Government certainly do not wish to see British Aerospace ride roughshod over the interests of my hon. Friend's constituents, but the company has a valuable resource at Filton. Circumstances outside its control mean that it cannot rely solely on using the site in the same way that it has in the past. The company has a responsibility to the people who work at the site, as well as to those who live in the vicinity. Decisions concerning the future of the airport must take account of those conflicting pressures. I believe that the company and the local community should now make every effort to come to mutually acceptable working arrangements. I wish them every success in doing so.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute past Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young People (Recidivism)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the comparative reconviction rates within two years of young people who complete their sentences in custody and those who participate in full-time, away-from-home community service programmes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available figures for young offenders released from custody relate to those released in 1986 and are published in table 9.1 of "Prison Statistics 1989", Cm 1221, a copy of which is in the Library. Information relating to the number of young offenders who participate in full-time, away-from-home community service programmes is not available.

Dogs

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will inquire from each of the police forces in England and Wales and thereafter publish the costs to the police of kennelling stray dogs and any other associated costs during the most recent 12-month period;

(2) if he will inquire from each of the police forces in England and Wales and thereafter publish the costs associated with policing the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, during the first year of the Act, distinguishing (i) the total spent in kennelling dangerous dogs, (ii) the cost of veterinary fees, (iii) the purchase of protective clothing and equipment and (iv) the estimate of the cost of time spent by police officers being trained to identify the types of dog covered by the Act, in seizing dogs and preparing evidence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that my right hon. Friend has been provided with information on the costs to the Metropolitan police of policing the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 and of dealing with stray dogs.

Similar information in respect of provincial police forces in England and Wales is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Strangeways Riot Trials

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the prison staff responsible for security at Manchester crown court were involved in the specifications for the building of the cells, holding and toilet areas to contain the prisoners on trial for the Strangeways riot.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison staff responsible for the security at Manchester Crown court were not involved in the specification for the building of the areas used to contain the prisoners on trial for the Strangeways riot.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on prison staff at the Crown court, Manchester there have been since the trials relating to the Strangeways riot first commenced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been nine reported incidents of alleged assault on prison staff by defendants in the Strangeways riot trials at Manchester Crown court.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the cost of radios, televisions and multigym facilities provided for the five prisoners who recently escaped from Manchester Crown court.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The television was borrowed from the Greater Manchester police. The prison service provided 11 radios at a total cost of £65 and a multigym at a cost of £3,000.

These items were provided for all the prisoners on trial in connection with charges arising from the Manchester prison disturbance. The prisoners concerned were held in police accommodation not designed for this purpose and which did not have normal regime facilities found in prison service establishments.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions the prison officers were given in respect of confrontation with the prisoners on trial for the riot at Strangeways prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The inquiry mounted by the prison service will investigate all circumstances of the escape of five defendants on trial at Manchester Crown court, including any instructions give to prison staff supervising the trial. It would be wrong to comment further while these inquiries are in progress. All prison officers receive training in how to deal with confrontation with prisoners, including the use of force where that is necessary to maintain control.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the toilet area at Manchester Crown court had been inspected and security arrangements accepted before being handed over to the prison staff prior to the recent escape of five prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The toilet area at Manchester Crown court is part of the original complex built in the 1960s, long before formal arrangements regarding specifications and acceptance of physical security elements of the building were set up between the Home Office and the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Police (Discipline)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers retired on sickness grounds while disciplinary action involving them was under consideration in each year since 1980.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information about retirements following the laying of disciplinary charges have been collected only since 1991.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 430, what were the ranks of the police officers who retired in 1991 after disciplinary charges had been brought against them, but before those charges were heard; whether they retired on fully accrued pension terms; and whether any enhancements were provided.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Retirement from the police service, whether on grounds of ill-health or otherwise, is the responsibility of police authorities and details are not collected centrally.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who will run the new-style secure units planned by his Department;

(2) who will have responsibility for the operation and oversight of the new-style secure units proposed by his Department;

(3) what arrangements will be made for inspection and monitoring of the new-style secure units planned by his Department;

(4) what consideration he has given to the location of further secure places for young people;

(5) what he estimates will be the capital costs of the new-style secure units planned by his Department; and who will pay these costs;

(6) what regime he intends shall be provided in the new-style secure units planned by his Department;

(7) what proposals he has for the reintegration of young people into family and community after a period in the new-style secure units proposed by his Department;

(8) how many places (a) in total and (b) in each unit will be provided in the new-style secure units for young people being planned by his Department;

(9) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of secure accommodation for young people in (a) England and (b) Wales during the last three years;

(10) what will be the costs per week of places in the new-style secure units planned by his Department; and who will pay these costs.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be making a statement to the House about his proposals for more effective measures to deal with persistent juvenile offenders.

Unlawful Killings

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the incidence of all categories of unlawful killings, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The available information is for notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales and is contained in the table. Figures for 1992 as a whole are not yet available.

Unlawful killings[1] recorded by the police England and Wales: 1979-1992.

Year	Number of offences
1980	857
1981	794
1982	887
1983	739
1984	844
1985	875
1986	893
1987	982
1988	971
1989	1,036
1990	1,088
1991	1,143
12 months to June 1991	1,121
12 months to June 1992	1,071

[1]Comprises, murder, manslaughter, infanticide, child destruction, causing death by reckless driving, and causing death by aggravated vehicle taking (from 1 April 1992 only).

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish guidance on fire safety for small residential care homes before 1 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We sent draft guidance to the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association for comments by 26 March. The guidance will then be considered further and issued as soon as possible.

Homerunner Bus Service

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department's officials will have discussions with those responsible for operating the Homerunner women-only bus service in Bradford with a view to funding the service indefinitely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Homerunner women's safe transport scheme commenced in November 1989 funded jointly by the Home Office, through the Bradford safer cities project, and the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority, Metro, for a period of 12 months. Further funding from safer cities, Metro and Bradford metropolitan borough council allowed the service to continue until March 1992 to enable the Homerunner steering group to seek funding from local sources to secure the future of the scheme. Exceptionally, safer cities grant was contributed to a further year's funding to enable the service to operate until March 1993, while Homerunner continued to make arrangements for alternative funding.

When the safer cities programme was established in 1988, it was intended that the modest amount of grant funding for each project would act as pump-priming and not to finance schemes on a long-term basis. It has consistently been made clear to the Homerunner scheme that the safer cities grant could not continue indefinitely.

Bradford safer cities final year as a Home Office project is 1993-94 and its steering committee has concluded that, in the light of the more limited grants budget available and the previous history of funding the Homerunner scheme, it could not recommend a further grant for the scheme.

There are no other Home Office grant-giving initiatives available which could assist Homerunner and in these circumstances a meeting with the operators of the service would serve little purpose. However, I hope that funding will be found from local sources to enable this service to continue.

Safer Cities Project, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his proposals for the future funding of the safer cities project in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: By the end of this financial year, Bradford will have received safer cities grant funding of over £1 million since the safer cities project was set up in November 1988. In 1993-94 grant funding of £100,000 has been allocated to Bradford and in that year the project will have access to further funds for work specifically directed at leaving in place long-term arrangements for multi-agency crime prevention work. I hope that the safer cities investment will provide a platform for local crime prevention efforts to become self-sustaining after March 1994. In the light of this, I will not be reconsidering my plans to make the safer cities model available to new locations. There is nothing further I can usefully add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member's previous question on 9 February, at column 531.

Relate

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the funding in real terms for Relate for each year from 1983-84 to 1993-94.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The Home Office grant in aid to Relate for each year from 1983-84 to 1993-94 is set out in actual terms and real terms, using 1991-92 as the base year.

1983-84	788,000	1,254,957
1984-85	827,460	1,254,183
1985-86	864,570	1,242,609
1986-87	890,500	1,239,974
1987-88	912,870	1,204,902
1988-89	935,910	1,151,478
1989-90	958,890	1,106,408
1990-91	1,006,840	1,076,408
1991-92	1,107,500	1,107,500
1992-93	1,511,400	1,449,784
1993-94	1,530,500	1,428,811

In real terms there has been an increase of 13·85 per cent. in the grant during the period in question: the actual increase is 94·2 per cent.

Relate has also received £48,000 from the Home Office and £10,000 from the Department of Social Security.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Social Protocol

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to the statement of the Attorney-General, Official Report, 22 February 1993, column 241, in the absence of incorporation of the social protocol into United Kingdom law what further legislation would be necessary to enable payment of the EC administrative costs of the protocol.

Mr. Garel-Jones: If the administration expenses were included in the Community budget, the United Kingdom would charge its contribution direct on the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. If the Community budget were not used, the United Kingdom contribution to any expenses would be met from voted moneys on the authority of the Appropriation Act alone.

Colonial Governors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the colonial governors who are currently exempt from paying income tax on the salary they receive; what is their current salary; and what other non-taxable benefits they or their families receive.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

The following governors are paid salaries and allowances by the territory which are not liable to United Kingdom, or local, tax. Their annual salaries and non-taxable allowances are as follows:

	Salary	Other benefits
Bermuda	B$117,150	B$68,900 Accountable entertainment allowance
Gibraltar	£50,636	£5,609 Duty allowance £8·51 per day table allowance—paid by MOD
Hong Kong	HK$1,912,200	HK$463,200 Entertainment allowance
Cayman Islands	Cayman $90,804	£6,311 Diplomatic service allowance—DSA—paid by FCO

The governors of St. Helena, Turks and Caicos and Montserrat are paid a local salary by the dependent Governments, and a salary supplement based on the salary of a diplomatic service grade 4 officer which is abated for notional United Kingdom income tax. Their annual salaries and non-taxable allowances are as follows:

	Salary	Other benefits
Montserrat	EC$83,136[1] Salary supplement paid by FCO £11,808	£370 Difficult post allowance—DPA £1,578 Representational supplement allowance—RSA £15,684 Frais—paid by FCO EC$6,000[1] Entertainment allowance—paid by Territory

India

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the proposal by the Indian Government to legislate for a human rights commission.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Narasimha Rao, told my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 25 January that legislation to establish a human rights commission in India would be introduced during the current session of the Indian Parliament. The commission would be composed of internationally known independent human rights experts.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what access arrangements have been agreed by the Indian Government for Amnesty International and other agencies to Punjab and Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Narasimha Rao, told my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 25 January that the Indian Government had decided to allow some access in India to Amnesty International and Asia Watch, although they could not go to states where there was trouble and where the visit could itself lead to tensions. But as things calmed down, such organisations could gradually be able to travel more widely.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to ratify the 1981 United Nations inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The situation remains as set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 16 November 1992 at column 79.

Armenia and Azerbaijan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the state of diplomatic relations with Armenia and with Azerbaijan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has been in full diplomatic relations with both Armenia and Azerbaijan for over a year. Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow is accredited to both Yeravan and Baku. We intend to open a mission in Baku later this year.

UNESCO

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has held recently regarding British membership of UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met a group of hon. Members on 25 February. We continue to follow closely matters at UNESCO and our officials have frequent contacts with the organisations's secretariat, member states and other interested parties. The question of the United Kingdom rejoining UNESCO remains under review.

Iran

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the outcome of the Government's review of export licensing criteria for Iran, announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 479.

Mr. Hurd: The Government's consideration of the criteria that should be applied in exercising rigorous scrutiny of export licence applications for Iran is now complete. The Government have decided to apply henceforth the following criteria in considering applications for the export of licenseable goods to Iran:

(i) With two exceptions we should not approve licences for any goods or technology on the Military or Atomic Energy Lists (Schedule 1, Part 3, Group 1 and 2) of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992 (as amended). The exceptions are:

(a) goods essential for the safety of civil aircraft and air traffic control systems;

(b) radioactive material in the form of sources for medical equipment and deuterium labelled compounds for medical use.

(ii) We should not approve licences for any equipment (including the exceptions to the complete ban mentioned above) where there was knowledge or reason to suspect that it would go to a military end-user or be used for military purposes.

Existing export licences, approved under the old guidelines, will remain valid. We shall support efforts among supplier countries, in particular the G7 and our European partners, to promote a harmonised approach to effective controls on the export of dual-use goods to countries of particular concern.

Vietnamese Migrants

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Vietnamese migrants.

Mr. Hurd: The orderly repatriation programme is proving most successful; since it started in November 1991, a total of 487 Vietnamese illegal immigrants have been repatriated from Hong Kong. There were only 12 new arrivals in Hong Kong in 1992 compared with 20,207 in 1991.

Since the start of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' voluntary repatriation programme in 1989, some 35,000 Vietnamese migrants have been screened out and returned home voluntarily, more than 26,000 of them from Hong Kong. There has been no substantiated report of persecution.

At present rates of return and resettlement, the Hong Kong camps should be empty in about three years.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Strangeways Riot Trials

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on who decided on an open door policy during the trials at Manchester Crown court of the riot prisoners from Strangeways prison.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The phrase "open door policy" is not recognised, but it is established policy that criminal trials should take place in open court and be freely reported. During the trials in question, the courtroom in use was kept locked outside operational hours, as were all the courtrooms; circulation of court users segregated; and perimeter doors properly secured, when not in use. All fire escape doors were alarmed so as to alert security staff should they be opened.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the security arrangements for the cells and holding areas at Manchester magistrates court, Crown square.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Security arrangements for magistrates courts are taken into account during the planning of the buildings and in any modifications to those buildings, after consultation with the appropriate authorities. Details of these measures cannot be revealed, as it would not be in the interests of the security of a building to do so.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which Government Department commissioned the plans for the holding area, the cells and the toilet areas prior to the recent escape of five prisoners from Manchester Crown court; who checked the plans; what assessment was made of their specifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government Department responsible for commissioning the plans for those areas was the Department of the Environment—Property Services Agency, north-west region—on behalf of the Lord Chancellor's Department to standards recommended by the Home Office.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what evidence he has of a breach of security regarding a blueprint relating to construction details of the Manchester Crown courts; and what action he has taken.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is believed that a plan, which is currently in the possession of the police, was stolen along with a number of other items during the course of a burglary of one of this Department's offices in 1990. There is nothing to link the theft of this plan and the incident of 17 February 1993 when five defendants escaped from the custody suite of Manchester law courts, but the incident is still the subject of police investigation. Following the burglary, police advice was sought over security measures to protect against burglary and various recommendations were introduced.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what security measures were included in the refurbishment of Manchester Crown court prior to the recent escape of five prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There was consultation with the police and prison service during the planning of the refurbishment of Manchester Crown court which was completed in 1990. Additional security measures were introduced, again following consultation with the police and the prison service, in connection with the case in question. Details of these measures cannot be revealed, as it would not be in the interests of the security of the building to do so.

Commercial Court

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has now had the opportunity to consider the Kennedy report on the number of judges required for the commercial court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The report was received by the Lord Chancellor on 10 February 1993 and he and the Lord Chief Justice are now considering the advice it contains. The advice is concerned with the work, deployment and numbers of High Court judges in all the jurisdictions in which they sit and does not relate solely to the commercial court.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insider Dealing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of his Department's investigations into David Abell, chairman of Suter, in respect of allegations that he was involved with insider dealing; how long this investigation took; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Inquiries under section 442 of the Companies Act 1985 and under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 into share transactions involving, inter alia, Mr. David Abell were begun in July 1988. These inquiries were concluded on completion of the Companies Act inspections in October 1992, the report of which was published in January 1993. No proceedings are contemplated against Mr. Abell or any other persons as a result of these inquiries, which in total cost £501,000.

Coal and Energy

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the countries he and his ministerial colleagues have visited to discuss coal and energy issues since taking office; how many days each visit took; and if he will name any colliery visited.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Since April 1992 I have made the following overseas visits during which energy issues were discussed:

Russia and Azerbaijan—5 days
Belgium (twice)—1 day each

In addition, my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy made the following visits to discuss energy issues:

USA (twice)—4 days and 2 days
Belgium (twice)—1 day and 2 days
Portugal—1 day
Norway (twice)—1 day and 2 days
Italy—2 days
Austria—3 days
Germany—1 day
Japan—2 days
China—2 days

The Minister's first visit to the United States was to see United States coal mining techniques and practices, and promote the export of United Kingdom mining equipment. It included a visit to federal No. 2 mine and Blacksville mine, both in West Virginia.

Visits by other departmental colleagues did not generally involve energy issues.

Owners Abroad

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will refer the bid for Owners Abroad by Airtours to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 February 1993]: I announced my decision not to refer this bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 24 February 1993.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received as to the effect on small tour operators of a takeover of Owners Abroad by Airtours.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 February 1993]: All representations received are treated in confidence. All relevant considerations were taken into account in the Director General of Fair Trading's advice to me and in my decision not to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Coal Research Establishment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the current research being undertaken by the coal research establishment; when each piece of research was commissioned and by whom; and when the research will be completed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The current research undertaken by the Coal Research Establishment chiefly covers activities related to the British coal topping cycle, the Point of Ayr coal liquefaction plant and a number of other projects related to the coal industry and industrial uses of coal. As British Coal owns and manages the coal research establishment, I have asked the chairman to respond in more detail to the points raised.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Libraries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the public library book fund for each local authority in (a) 1982, (b) 1987 and (c) 1992, at 1993 prices.

Mr. Key: Readily available information on book fund expenditure comes from statistics collected by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Expenditure is expressed in pounds per 1,000 population. The table is presented on the same basis with figures adjusted to 1992-93 prices.

Scheduled Monuments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to bring forward proposals to amend the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 to prohibit the ploughing of scheduled monuments.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The present position is that the Ancient Monuments (Class Consents) Order 1981 gives general permission for normal ploughing on scheduled sites which were under the plough during the five years up to October 1981. Specific consent is required for deep ploughing and for the ploughing of previously uncultivated sites. Certain aspects of the order are currently being reviewed, but I see no case for any general prohibition. New trends in agricultural practices can offer new opportunities to protect archaeological sites and monuments through co-operation with the farming community.

EDUCATION

School Places

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out for (a) each education authority in England and (b) in total (i) the number of available places in primary and secondary schools, respectively, (ii) the total number of children on the school rolls and (iii) the number of places considered appropriate.

Mr. Forth: It is estimated that there were some 4·5 million primary school places and some 3·5 million secondary school places in England in 1991. Information on the number of places available in each local education authority is not available. The numbers of pupils being taught in maintained primary and secondary schools in each LEA in England in January 1991 are shown in the table. It is for LEAs in the first place to decide on the number of school places considered appropriate, in the light of local need.

Under-eights (Teachers)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to change the training of teachers for the under-eights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is considering reforms to the training of primary teachers, including possible changes to the training of teachers specialising in the early years of primary education. He intends that these reforms should be introduced in September 1994. Proposals will be issued for public consultation in a few weeks' time.

National Curriculum Council

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the current occupations of the members of the National Curriculum Council.

Mr. Forth: The current occupations of the members of the National Curriculum Council are as follows:

Chairman

MR. DAVID PASCALL: Manager, BP Exploration Control and Business Simplification Programmes.

Members

MR. JOHN BURN: Headteacher, Longbenton Community High School, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

MRS. PENNY COOPER: Headteacher, The William Brookes School, Much Wenlock, Shropshire.

MR. BRIAN HUTCHINSON: Community Affairs Manager, BAT Industries plc.

MRS. ANN LOCKE: Lecturer in Child Language Pathology and Education, University of Sheffield.

MISS BRENDA LOFTHOUSE: Headteacher, All Saints Church of England Primary School, Wellingborough, Northamptonshire.

MR. JOHN MCINTOSH: Headmaster of the London Oratory School.

MR. GRAHAM MACKENZIE: Chief Executive, United Engineering Steels (Holdings) Ltd.

DR. JOHN MARKS: Director, Educational Research Centre, London. Also a member of the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

PROFESSOR DAVID REGAN: Professor of Local Government, Faculty of Law and Social Sciences, University of Nottingham.

PROFESSOR ALAN SMITHERS: Director, Centre for Education and Employment Research, University of Manchester.

DR. ROGER VAUGHAN: Chairman and Chief Executive, Swan Hunter Shipbuilders.

MR. ANTHONY WATES: Headteacher, Tavistock County Primary School, Tavistock, Devon.

MRS. JENNIFER WISKER: Chief Education Officer, Somerset LEA.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the composition of the National Curriculum Council, broken down by the profession or group which each member of the council represents; and if he will state for the teacher members their teaching experience and, if relevant, the age group of the schools in which they currently teach.

Mr. Forth: The members of the National Curriculum Council are selected as individuals rather than as representatives of professions or groups. The professions of the current members are as follows: five are head teachers of primary or secondary schools, four work in further and higher education, four are industrialists, and one is the chief education officer of an LEA. The Department holds the following information on the five members who are head teachers:

MR. JOHN BURN: Headteacher since 1980 of Longbenton Community High School, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, an 11-18 school. He is a chemistry graduate who has taught in comprehensive schools for 26 years and has been a Head of Department and Deputy Headteacher. He was also a Senior Lecturer in science for 4 years in a teacher training college. He is a member of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education.

MRS. PENNY COOPER: Headteacher since 1988 at The William Brookes schoool, Much Wenlock, Shropshire, an 11-18 school. Mrs. Cooper was a Modern Language teacher at a number of mixed comprehensive schools in London and Shropshire and prior to her current appointment she was a Senior Teacher at Ludlow CE School, Shropshire, with rsponsibility for curriculum and professional development.

MISS BRENDA LOFTHOUSE: Headteacher, All Saints Church of England Primary school, Wellinborough, Northamptonshire, a 5-11 school. Miss Lofthouse started teaching in a village primary school in Bedfordshire in 1971. She has also taught in a special school, a junior and a primary school in Northamptonshire and became a Deputy Headteacher in 1976.

MR. JOHN MCINTOSH: Headmaster of the London Oratory School—an 11-18 grant maintained school. Previously an Assistant Master and Deputy Headmaster at the same school.

MR. ANTHONY WATES: Headteacher, Tavistock County Primary School, Tavistock, Devon, a 5-11 school. Mr. Wates has taught in primary schools in Kent, Plymouth and Singapore for the Service Children's Education Authority. Prior to his current appointment he was headteacher of St. Peter's Church of England Primary School, Plymouth.

Special Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to increase the funding allocated by his Department to the Office for Standards in Education to cover special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: The following sums have been transferred to Ofsted to cover programme and running cost expenditure for all its activities for the next three financial years, including establishing and running the new inspection system for schools.

Financial year	£ million
1995-96	133

Within the total sums made available, it is a matter for Professor Sutherland to plan what resources are needed to discharge his statutory duties to arrange inspections and report on special educational needs.

Deaf Awareness Week

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about the extension of the Deaf Awareness Week recently held in Liverpool schools; what plans he has to encourage the extension of this scheme to other local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received no representations about Liverpool schools' participation in the extension of Deaf Awareness Week. I am sure that other local education authorities will have noted this promotion of deaf culture and signing and that this will inform their decisions about how best to make appropriate provision for children with impaired hearing.

Rugby Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to give a decision on the formation of a joint sixth form for the Harris Church of England school and the Bishop Wulstan school in Rugby.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects to reach his decision on the proposal in the near future.

Student Loans

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the number of graduates who are unemployed and are unable to repay, or are having difficulties repaying, student loans; and what provisions are made for this.

Mr. Boswell: Figures are not available on the number of graduates who are deferring repayment of student loans specifically because of unemployment. The Student Loans Company's annual report 1992 records a total of 16,746 borrowers who had deferred repayments in the last academic year. Any borrower whose gross income, for whatever reason, does not exceed 85 per cent. of national average earnings can defer repayments for a year at a time. These deferment provisions mean that borrowers are under no obligation to repay loans until their income reaches a level where they should be able to afford to do so.

Under-fives

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will publish a league table indicating public education provision for under-fives in Europe.

Mr. Forth: The centrally available information given in the table shows that public and private participation rates combined as separate participation rates are not available. There are also some differences between countries in the distinction drawn between education and day care. If the United Kingdom figure is broadened to include nursery schools, nursery classes, infant classes, pre-school play groups and group day care, the participation rate of three and four-year-olds rises to over 90 per cent.

Proportion of the age group in education (per cent.)

	1989 Ages[1] 3 to 4
Belgium[2]	96
Finland[3]	18
France	99
Germany	52
Ireland	27
Italy (estimated)[3]	76
Netherlands	49
Norway	40
Spain	53
Sweden	42
United Kingdom	46 (50)[3]

[2] 1988 data.
[3] 1991 data.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what studies he has commissioned on indefinite exclusions of pupils from maintained and grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Li Ka Shing

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the formal or contractual arrangements which exist between (a) Mr. Li Ka Shing and (b) Norinco and United Kingdom Government agencies or bodies, including those in Hong Kong.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

Prerogative Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions on which Ministers have exercised prerogative powers in the last 18 months; and how this was reported to Parliament in each case.

The Prime Minister: In the main, specific functions are conferred on Ministers by Act of Parliament. Statute now covers much of the ground which in earlier times was covered by prerogative powers. However, the common law still recognises some prerogative powers as residing in the Crown and some of these are, by convention, exercisable by Ministers. Examples of areas where the prerogative still plays a part are foreign affairs, defence and the regulation of the civil service. Particular examples of the exercise of prerogative power are the issue of a passport or the grant of a pardon or reprieve under the prerogative of mercy. It is for individual Ministers to decide on a particular occasion whether and how to report to Parliament on the exercise of prerogative powers. The relationship between statutory powers and prerogative powers can be very complex and it would be impracticable, and would lead to disproportionate cost, to list all the occasions when action was taken under the prerogative.

Minority Languages

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister which department is responsible for the work and advice leading up to the adoption of the European charter for regional or minority languages by the Committee of Minorities.

The Prime Minister: The Welsh Office took the lead in the discussions on the text of the charter, but consulted all other Departments with an interest.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers and Departments are responsible for (a) policy in regard to the provision of secure places for young people in England and Wales and (b) providing such places and the relevant finances.

The Prime Minister: Policy on the provision of secure accommodation in England and Wales, and the allocation of capital grants for such projects, are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health and the Secretary of State for Wales respectively.

Local authorities are responsible for providing secure accommodation and for meeting the running costs.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister when the secure places for young people announced in 1991 will be available.

The Prime Minister: The provision of secure accommodation is the responsibility of local authorities. The Government remain committed to their target of abolishing the practice of remanding juveniles to prison by 1995-96 and will provide the necessary capital resources to achieve this.

St. David's Day

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to make St. David's day a bank holiday in Wales.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to make St. David's day a bank holiday in Wales.

Attorney-General

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral statement by the Attorney-General of 22 February, Official Report, cloumn 736, whether the Attorney-General attended the meeting of the Cabinet on Thursday 11 February.

The Prime Minister: The Attorney-General did not attend the meeting of the Cabinet on Thursday 11 February.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Incitement to Murder

30. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his policy of prosecutions for incitement to murder.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown prosecution service would need to be satisfied in such cases that the available evidence was sufficient to provide a realistic prospect of a conviction. If justified on evidential grounds a prosecution would normally be required in the public interest.

Departmental Library

31. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will obtain for his library a copy of a book the title of which has been given to him.

The Attorney-General: My Department has a copy of the book.

Crown Prosecution Service

32. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the way in which evidence is considered by the Crown prosecution service when it is deciding whether to proceed with a prosecution.

The Solicitor-General: The evidential requirement is that there should be sufficient admissible, substantial and reliable evidence that a criminal offence has been committed by an identifiable person and the evidence provides a realistic prospect of a conviction.

Lawyers (Government Service)

33. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General what role his Department has in advising on the qualifications required of lawyers in Government service.

The Attorney-General: The lawyers management unit in the Treasury Solicitor's Department, for which I have ministerial responsibility, has a co-ordinating role in advising the Civil Service Commissioners, and the employing Departments, on any questions relating to the qualifications requried by Government lawyers in England and Wales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poverty

37. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the World bank's elimination of poverty strategy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The executive directors of the World bank reviewed implementation of the bank's poverty reduction strategy on 26 January and decided that a progress report should be published annually.

Sub-Saharan Africa

38. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom aid to sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991-92, sub-Saharan African countries received over £334 million in bilateral aid. This excludes certain other flows including those from the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to grant a 4 per cent. annual increase in development aid to sub-Saharan Africa in each year for the next decade.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 10 February 1993, at column 664.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that funds allocated to long-term developments in sub-Saharan Africa are not diverted for projects in eastern Europe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our policy is to keep separate our aid programme to developing countries and our assistance to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Funds allocated to long-term development projects in sub-Saharan Africa are not diverted for projects in central and eastern Europe or the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Minister for Overseas Development has made to the International Development Association's 10th replenishment on its 1994 to 1996 budget concerning its annual aid targets for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement was reached on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association in December 1992. Donors agreed that between 45 and 50 per cent. of the resources should be allocated to the countries of sub-Saharan Africa, subject to performance and in accordance with the other objectives of the replenishment.

39. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Minister for Overseas Development had with the Kenyan Government about future bilateral and multilateral aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development confirmed to President Moi and his Ministers that while Britain would continue with a substantial bilateral development programme for Kenya, new balance of payments assistance would be considered only once the Kenyan Government had reached agreement with the International Monetary Fund and the World bank on the economic reform programme. They noted that discussions were continuing between the Kenyan authorities and the World bank and that the IMF were due to visit towards the end of February. Lady Chalker also announced new humanitarian assistance worth £750,000 to help drought-affected Kenyans in Turkana district.

41. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Bilateral aid to Kenya in 1991-92 was £29 million.

Hand Tools

40. Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Government have given to provide hand tools to third-world countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 17 February at column 229.

Emergency Aid

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that any emergency aid granted to developing countries by the Overseas Development Administration is paid over and above normal development aid commitments made by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The aid programme to developing countries is intended to provide both long-term development assistance and emergency humanitarian aid. The programme is managed to ensure that the emergency aid we provide is not at the expense of long-term development aid commitments.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries receiving bilateral assistance from the United Kingdom are currently implementing World bank and/or IMF structural adjustment programs; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 24 February 1993]: Thirty-five countries which are in receipt of bilateral assistance from the United Kingdom also received support during 1992 from the IMF and/or the World bank for structural adjustment programmes. The countries are as follows:

Morocco
Egypt
Algeria
Jordan
Cote d'Ivoire
Ghana
Sierra Leone
The Gambia
Senegal
Zimbabwe
Zambia
Tanzania
Mozambique
Kenya
Uganda
Malawi
Lesotho
Ethiopia
India
Pakistan
Bangladesh
Nepal
Sri Lanka
Philippines
Brazil
Columbia
Bolivia
Guyana
Honduras
Nicaragua
Jamaica
Poland
Hungary
Czech and Slovak Federal Republic
Bulgaria

The countries listed are those where our bilateral assistance programme exceeded £250,000 in 1992.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has concerning the number of deaths in the Republic of Ireland, Great Britain and Europe which relates to the security situation in Northern Ireland during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 to date.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The information requested is set out in the table.

Deaths arising from security situation in Northern Ireland

	Great Britain	Republic of Ireland	Mainland Europe
1992	6	—	—
[1]1993	—	—	—

[1] As at 22 February 1993.

Dairy Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed in the dairy industry in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Hanley: Estimates of the numbers who worked (a) on dairy farms and (b) in the processing and marketing of milk and dairy products are as follows:

Year	On-farm	Off-farm
1983	17,575	5,425
1984	17,650	5,350
1985	17,300	5,200
1986	16,850	5,175
1987	16,300	5,125
1988	16,050	5,100
1989	15,975	4,850
1990	15,925	4,350
1991	15,600	4,250
1992	15,175	4,300

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Written Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the five highest costs attributed for answering individual written parliamentary questions since 1979 for which costs have already been calculated.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The answers to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 16 December 1991, at columns 22-25; to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 18 January 1990, at columns 382-89; to my then hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke, Mr. Bennett, on 25 May 1989, at columns 695-719; to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 9 May 1988, at columns 628-44; to my then hon. Friend the Member for Darlington, Mr. Fallon, on 11 May 1987, at columns 4-14.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to answer the question of 20 January from the hon. Member for Newport, West on the costs attributed for answering parliamentary questions.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member today.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Universities (Business Names)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to the answer of 15 February by the Secretary of State for Education, Official Report, column 51, what action the Privy Council takes over applications to register a business name containing the word university.

Mr. Newton: Since June 1992, the Privy Council has been specified as the relevant body under the Company and Business Names Regulations 1981 whose consent is required to the use of the word "university" in a business name. In considering applications for consent, it is the practice to seek the advice of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal equity plans have been taken out in each of the last three years; and what was the cost to the Exchequer of the associated tax reliefs.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is as follows:

	Number of plans taken out (thousands)		Estimated total cost of income tax relief (£ million)
	General	Single company
[1] 1989	580	—	20
1990-91	500	—	45
[2] 1991-92	640	110	90

[1] And first quarter of 1990.
[2] Provisional.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of providing mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1979 inclusive for (a) Scotland, (b) Wales, (c) England, (d) Northern Ireland, (e) each English region and (f) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The information is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 25 February 1993, Official Report, col. 686.

SCOTLAND

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 435, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Estimated outturn for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 is £3·1 million. Expenditure provision for 1993-94 is £3·1 million.

DEFENCE

Libya (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information Her Majesty's Government have concerning the construction by Libya of a copy of the Rabta Pharma-150 chemical weapons plant in Tarbunah, near Tripoli.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government believe that Libya is constructing a chemical weapons factory at Tarhunah, some 40 miles from Tripoli which, when completed, may be capable of producing both mustard and nerve agents. The United Kingdom is actively involved, with its Australia group partners, in seeking to prevent supplies to Libya's chemical weapons programme.

Bullying

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the procedures for dealing with bullying in the Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The current procedures are well established and all service personnel are aware that behaviour of this kind will not be tolerated. Any allegation or complaint of bullying or suspected bullying brought to the attention of a commanding officer is investigated. Depending on the strength of the evidence, disciplinary action will be taken against the alleged offenders.

Defence Spending

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what initiatives were taken in the Council of Ministers under Britain's presidency of the European Community to address problems arising from reductions in defence expenditure.

Mr. Aitken: No such initiatives were taken in the Council of Ministers.

Arabian Peninsula

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement his Department has had with Gulf leaders in preparation for expansion of the peninsula shield for the defence of the Arabian peninsula.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministers and officials of the Ministry of Defence maintain regular contact with Gulf leaders and their staffs. During these contacts we have encouraged the Gulf Co-operation Council states to develop their arrangements for a collective security force.

Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and ranks of the British land forces that were sent to Kuwait in January during the Iraq-coalition confrontation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No members of the British land forces were sent to Kuwait in January 1993.

Idex 93 Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement his Department had in the preparation for the Idex 93 exhibition in Abu Dhabi opening on 15 February; and what positions were held by staff of his Department who will be present for the event.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 1 February 1993, Official Report column 33.

I made a ministerial visit to this important exhibition in order to support the participating British companies and to discuss export sales with the Government of the United Arab Emirates. A number of my officials also attended for the same purpose.

Redundancies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel currently serving in (a) Bosnia and (b) Northern Ireland have been issued with compulsory redundancy notices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Eight Army officers currently serving in the former Yugoslavia and 36 Army officers currently serving in Northern Ireland were notified on 25 February that they had been selected for compulsory redundancy. Personnel selected for compulsory redundancy will leave the Army by 1 March 1994 and those serving overseas may apply to spend their last six months in the United Kingdom. No shore-based naval personnel, or RAF personnel, currently serving in the former Yugoslavia or Northern Ireland have been selected for compulsory redundancy.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel currently serving in (a) Bosnia and (b) Northern Ireland have requested voluntary redundancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of service personnel serving in the former Yugoslavia and Northern Ireland who have applied for voluntary redundancy are as follows:

Service	Former Yugoslavia	Northern Ireland
Royal Navy[1]
Officers	1	2
Ratings	[2]2	[2]6
Army[3]
Officers	9	14
Soldiers	80	387
RAF
Officers	—	—
Airmen/women	—	—

[1] Figures relate to shore-based personnel only.
[2] Applications unsuccessful.
[3] Figures provided relate to successful applications. Due to the frequency of individual and unit moves, it is not possible to identify by theatre those who unsuccessfully applied for redundancy last autumn.

HEALTH

Activity Increases

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many studies her Department has commissioned concerning the cost-effectiveness of increases in activity achieved in the period 1990-93; and what conclusions she has drawn.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Individual regions may have commissioned their own research, but this information is not collected centrally.

Food (Chemicals)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish information submitted to her Department's Committee on the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment by private companies.

Mr. Sackville: None. The annual report of the Committees on Toxicity, Mutagenicity and Carcinogenicity outlines the issues considered and the advice given to the Government. A copy is available in the Library.

Primary Care

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral statement of 16 February, Official Report, columns 133-37, how much of the £170 million capital spending on primary care in London will be spent over each of the next six years.

Mr. Sackville: In all, there will be over £40 million extra for primary care in London in 1993-94. The balance between capital and revenue spending will be for local decision as plans for the London initiative zone develop. The pattern of capital funding over subsequent years will depend on the level of need identified and the resources available. The Government are committed to providing £170 million for capital investment in London's primary care over the next six years.

Cancer Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration was given to including the electric field component of electromagnetic fields as a parameter in the study being conducted under the direction of Dr. Ray Cartwright and Dr. David Grant for the United Kingdom co-ordinating centre for cancer research, established by her Department in April 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom co-ordinating committee for cancer research—UKCCCR—is entirely independent of the Government. However, I understand that exposure to electromagnetic fields is one of the hypotheses that the UKCCCR study is considering. The study is being conducted under the direction of Sir Richard Doll. The hon. Member may wish to write to the UKCCCR secretary at PO Box 123, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London WC2A 3PX for details.

Community Treatment Orders

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to bring forward proposals for amending the Mental Health Act 1983, to allow for community treatment orders.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 13 January at column 731.

Cycling

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures her Department has taken to promote the benefits to health of cycling.

Dr. Mawhinney: The promotion of physical activity is a major component of the national "Look After Your Heart"—LAYH—coronary prevention programme. LAYH has supported many local physical activity projects, including cycling events, but it is important to stress that cycling is only one of a range of physical activities beneficial to health, including walking.

Following the "Health of the Nation" White Paper, we are setting up a task force to develop strategies for further encouragement of physical activity.

Core Grants

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether regional and national organisations can apply for core grants under section 64 funding; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Yes. A core grant may be awarded under the section 64 general scheme to assist with the central administrative costs of a national, or regional, voluntary organisation. Such a grant will not normally be awarded for more than a maximum of five years under revised arrangements for funding from April 1993, detailed in my letter of August 1992 to voluntary organisations.

Applications are usually invited in the autumn for consideration for possible funding in the following financial year. A copy of the notes of guidance for 1993-94 setting out the detailed requirements, has been placed in the Library.

London Health Services

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hours were spent by Professor Tomlinson and his team on (a) site visits and (b) discussion in committee in connection with (i) University College hospital and Middlesex hospital and (ii) St. Bartholomew's hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: No record was kept of the time spent by Sir Bernard and his team on site visits or in committee discussion.

Babies

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies were born by Caesarean section in hospitals in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom during each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The estimated figures for England and Wales for the years 1973 to 1981 and for England for the years 1982 to 1985 and 1988-89 to 1990-91 are shown in the table. These figures related to deliveries and not to the number of babies born.

There are no data available for the years 1986 to 1987-88, and the data prior to 1973 cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of deaths per thousand live births in each regional and district health authority area in (a) 1982, (b) 1987 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The infant mortality rate—deaths under one year per 1,000 live-births—for each regional and district health authority for 1982 and 1987 are listed in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publications "Local authority vital statistics 1982" and "Key population and Vital Statistics 1987" series VS Nos. 9 and 14 respectively; copies of which are available in the Library. The information requested for 1992 is not yet available.

Selected Drugs List

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she now expects the advisory committee on NHS drugs to make its recommendations in relation to the possible extension of the selected drugs list.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that at its meeting earlier this month the advisory committee on national health service drugs decided to set up sub-groups to undertake preliminary consideration of the range of drugs within each of the therapeutic categories to which the provisions of the selected list scheme are being extended. I also understand that the committee decided the order in which it would then itself consider drugs in the new categories, but that it has not set dates for the reviews of particular categories.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was health expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product, discounting capital receipts and associated income, for the years 1979 to 1993, inclusive.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table.

Childless Couples

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments are available for the number of childless and infertile couples in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to make a reliable assessment from the information held centrally. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of small residential care homes eligible for registration after April.

Mr. Yeo: None. Registration under the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 is a matter for local authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the resourcing implications for local authorities of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991.

Mr. Yeo: The fees payable to local authorities by those running small homes are intended to meet authorities' registration costs under the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for (a) the North Worcestershire health authority and (b) Highfield hospital the number of (i) hospital beds and (ii) acute hospital beds in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. The figures refer to North Worcestershire district health authority, as the health authority responsible for the Highfield hospital.

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fund-holding practices, in each region, had exhausted their budget allocation for non-urgent hospital treatment by 1 February.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Road Building (Recycled Materials)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the use of recycled materials in road construction in other European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

We do not keep detailed statistics about the use of recycled materials in road construction in other European countries. However, the amount used is known to vary depending on the availability of indigenous materials and land for disposal of waste materials. From our involvement in the preparation of European standards for highways, we are aware of the likely inclusion of requirements for the use of recycled materials.

TRANSPORT

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest state of negotiations necessary to secure his approval to the commencement of work on the London Underground Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 8 February.

Minibuses

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the differences between safety regulations applying to cars and those applying to minibuses.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 lay down the requirements for the construction of all vehicles. Specific requirements for the construction and use of minibuses include provisions on the number of doors and on their operation and access, as well as on the size of seats. There are also other minor requirements on such things as the lighting of steps to ensure passenger safety. Minibuses must also carry a first aid kit and fire extinguisher.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government will fund research on the kinds of injuries inflicted on children in coach and minibus accidents.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have no plans to conduct such research at present. Statistics indicate that injuries to children travelling in minibuses represent less than 0·01 per cent. of all road casualties. We believe, therefore, that our resources would be better targeted on areas where potential benefits, including those to children, are greater.

Drink Driving

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the national budget for the 1992 Christmas drink and drive campaign; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The departmental budget for the 1992 Christmas drink drive campaign was £1·3 million. The bulk of this went into production and airing of a television commercial. Bus back, bus shelter and other posters were also produced for road safety officers and police who gave considerable support at a local level to the campaign.

I am pleased with the way the campaign was received and believe it was very effective in reminding people of the Department's message that "Drinking and Driving Wrecks Lives'. It thus contributed to reducing death and injury on the roads.

Results of research commissioned by the Department are not yet available. However, a recent survey by one marketing magazine showed that the drink drive campaign was recognised by 83 per cent. of males under 35 years of age and by 92 per cent. of males between 35 and 44 years of age.

Highway Authorities

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each local highway authority in England the bid for total capital expenditure for 1993-94 in their 1992 TPP—transport policies and plans—submission and the level of expenditure approved by the Government in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures are given in the table.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures are given in the table. Transport supplementary grant is a block grant payable at a rate of 50 per cent. of an authority's total accepted expenditure.

Organ Donors

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce organ donor consent to driving licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I have agreed that such a facility will increase the chances of identifying a potential donor quickly. This will be of great benefit in saving others' lives.

Therefore, from today, 1 March, driving licences issued by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency will include an organ donor consent section in the counterpart of the licence. Licence holders will be able to complete this section voluntarily in the same way as they can complete a separate organ donor card at present. Holders of existing licences will not need to exchange them if they wish to become organ donors. They should complete and carry a separate donor card, available widely from doctors, health clinics, hospitals and Department of Health offices.

Airport Security

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether United Kingdom airport security screening of all hold baggage, with full physical baggage reconciliation, will be required only for US international flights.

Mr. John MacGregor: No. The proposals for 100 per cent. hold baggage screening, and for accounting and authorising hold baggage for carriage, will apply to all international flights from this country.

M1-M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes in vehicles per day are expected, resulting from proposals for an M1-M62 link road (a) yellow route and (b) purple route, for junctions 38 to 39 of the M1.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The yellow route option is forecast to increase traffic on the M1 between junctions 38 and 39 by about 8,000 vehicles per day in the opening year and the purple route to reduce traffic by about 31,000 vehicles per day.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments of the cost factors have been undertaken for changes in traffic volume between junctions 38 and 39 of the M1, within proposals for an M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The cost factors have been assessed by predicting the carriageway provision that would be required where the traffic flow is forecast to change from the level of normal growth, as a result of the route options for an M1-M62 link road.

Buses, London

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the cost recovery ratio between farebox income, revenue apportionment from Travelcard, bus pass, retired persons and staff passes, and revenue subsidy, from block grant or through tendering arrangements for London bus routes W7, 43 and X43.

Mr. Norris: This information is commercially sensitive.

Salvage Working Group

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had the opportunity to consider the report of the salvage working group entitled "Meeting Future Salvage Needs"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department is currently considering the report, but has not yet reached firm conclusions on it.

Aircraft

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those dispensations to the normal regulations that have allowed aircraft to fly supersonically over the Bristol channel area in the past six months;

(2) if he will set out the rules that govern the circumstances in which aircraft are allowed to fly supersonically in areas near to the British mainland.

Mr. Norris: Supersonic flight by civil aircraft over any part of the United Kingdom is prohibited and there is no procedure for dispensations. Sonic booms from inbound aircraft are sometimes heard on land. This occurs in certain meteorological conditions, mainly during winter. These are known as secondary booms and may be propagated from aircraft many miles from land. Both British Airways and Air France have co-operated in making operational changes in the winter to reduce the disturbance from secondary booms. Although they cannot eliminate the phenomenon, British Airways' Concordes decelerate to fly subsonic 105 nautical miles west of Coombe Martin in Devon; Air France routes its Concordes further south of the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Alternative Employment

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the total sum of moneys made available in each year since 1989-90 to assist former employees of defence-related industries in Hampshire in finding alternative employment;

(2) what is the total sum of moneys her Department is planning to make available in each of the years 1992-93 to 1994-95 to assist former employees of defence-related industries in Hampshire in finding alternative employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Currently these figures are not available in the form requested and it is not foreseen that they will be.

Restart

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken part in Restart interviews in this and each preceding year; in each year how many then got jobs; and how many of those were in work six months later.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 1 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of people who have taken part in Restart interviews and the number of people who started work as a result of their interview. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you asked for is given in the attached table. Unfortunately, I am unable to provide details of the number of clients who are still in employment six months after leaving the unemployment register. To do so would involve the use of expensive tracking mechanisms at a disproportionate cost.

As you will appreciate, the figures I have given reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview. It is through this support which advisers give clients in reviewing their options for returning to work that Restart has its effect.

An indication of the degree of that effect is provided by the report "The Restart Effect" which was recently published by the independent Policy Studies Institute in 1992. It is based on an analysis of the largest survey of unemployed people in the UK since 1986. This showed conclusively that the programme had a major effect in reducing the time it takes people to leave unemployment, to get a job and to enter Employment Training, particularly for those people who were at a disadvantage within the labour market.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people went on the job interview guarantee scheme in this and each preceding year; and in each year how many people completed the scheme, how many went into employment from the scheme and how many were in employment six months later.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 1 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) initiative. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information we are able to give you is set out on the attached table which records the numbers of people assisted and the numbers of people who were placed directly in work through JIG.

We do not collect statistical information on how many people completed the JIG initiative or on how many people who went into employment from the scheme were in employment six months later. To do so would necessitate expensive mechanisms at a disproportionate cost.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Unemployment, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list those wards in which the ratio of unemployed claimants to registered electors is lower than in the Bargate, Southampton, ward for (a) wards included in areas to be assisted by city challenge projects, (b) wards covered by inner city task forces, (c) wards covered by city action teams and (d) wards wholly or partly covered by urban development corporations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Job Clubs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken part in job clubs in this and each preceding year; in each year, how many got jobs at the end; and how many of those were still in work six months later.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 1 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about Jobclub statistics. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The statistics for the number of people who have taken part in Jobclubs (throughflow) and the number who have got jobs (job entries) are detailed in the attached table. Figures are given from 1985-86, which was the first year for which national statistics were collected.

We do not collect information on the number of people who were still in work after six months. To do so would require expensive tracking mechanisms at a disproportionate cost.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

St. David's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to make 1 March a bank holiday in Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are currently consulting on changing the May Day bank holiday and hope to announce a decision shortly. However, we have no plans to make 1 March—St. David's day—a bank holiday in Wales.

Chartists Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to promote the declaration of Chartists day, 4 November, as a bank holiday in Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no plans to promote the declaration of Chartists day as a bank holiday in Wales.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants without dependent children during the year 1991-92 received (a) unemployment benefit, (b) statutory sick pay, (c) sickness benefit, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) severe disablement allowance, (f) widow's pension, (g) industrial injuries disablement benefit and (h) invalid care allowance, where no income support was also in payment.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Table 1: 1991-92—Estimated numbers of people receiving benefits at any one time

Benefit	Recipients
Unemployment Benefit	555,000
Statutory Sick Pay	330,000
Sickness Benefit	110,000
Invalidity Benefit	1,306,000
Severe Disablement Allowance	293,000
Widows' Pension	284,000
Industrial Disablement Benefit	200,000
Invalid Care Allowance	136,000

Invalidity Benefit	112,000
Severe Disablement Allowance	172,000
Widows' Pension	26,000
Industrial Disablement Injuries Benefit	12,000
Invalid Care Allowance	42,000

Notes:

1. The figures in Tables 1 and 2 have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Table 2 shows the number of recipients of each benefit who also receive Income Support either as claimant or as a partner of an Income Support claimant.

Housing

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances persons aged 16 and 17 years not in receipt of income support would be eligible for housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit is available to 16 and 17-year-olds who live independently and are not following a full-time course of higher education, whether or not they are in receipt of income support if they have a commercial liability to pay rent and are unable to meet their housing costs.

Rent Deposits

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision exists in the social fund for the payment of rent deposits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The fund does not provide help with rent deposits.

War Pensions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received regarding the cessation of war pension to those suffering under 20 per cent. disablement due to service-related noise-induced deafness; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Some 120 representations have been received.

Pensioner Households

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioner households which do not claim (a) housing benefit and (b) income support to which they would be entitled.

Mr. Burt: The latest available figures on take-up of housing benefit and income support can be found in "Income Related Benefits—Estimates of Take Up in 1989" published on 11 January 1993, copies of which are in the Library.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if payments will be made from the independent living fund in cases where attendance allowance claims, successful after appeal, predate the closure date for independent living fund applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to do so.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to how much the figure of £35, above which there is abatement of unemployment benefit for occupational pensioners, would have increased to have kept pace with (a) the retail prices index and (b) earnings since it was fixed at that level; how many people received (i) no unemployment benefit and (ii) reduced unemployment benefit because they have an occupational pension exceeding £35 per week at the most recent available date; and what would be the (1) gross cost and (2) net cost of abolishing this rule.

Mr. Burt: The limit of £35 per week was introduced in April 1981. If it had been increased in line with increases in (a) the retail prices index and (b) earnings between April 1981 and April 1992, the present limit would be £65 and £84 respectively.

The table shows the numbers of people whose unemployment benefit is abated because they receive an occupational or personal pension exceeding £35 per week.

Unemployed claimants whose unemployment benefit is reduced or extinguished due to receipt of an occupational or personal pension exceeding £35 per week

	Thousands
Unemployment benefit reduced	17·2
Unemployment benefit extinguished	9·2

Notes:
1. Source: Half Yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants.
2. No separate figures are maintained of recipients of occupational and personal pension.

The gross cost of abolishing the abatement rule is estimated to be £40 million a year at 1992-93 prices. It is estimated that the net cost will not differ significantly from this figure.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received (a) no and (b) reduced unemployment benefit because a spouse's occupational pension is treated as earnings for the purposes of earnings rules for unemployment benefit in the most recent available period; and what would be the (i) gross and (ii) net additional cost of abolishing that treatment of a spouse's occupational pension.

Mr. Burt: The personal rate of unemployment benefit is unaffected by a spouse's occupational pension. Adult dependency increases—ADIs—of unemployment benefit are extinguished when a spouse's earnings, including any occupational pension, exceed £26·20 a week. Information on the number of ADIs extinguished in this way is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The cost of excluding occupational pensions from the earnings rule is therefore impossible to estimate.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning the disclosure of medical evidence associated with unsuccessful applications for disability living allowance; what consultations he has had with claimants' organisations, citizens advice bureaux and welfare rights lawyers in relation to current practice in dealing with such requests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No such representations have been received nor consultations held.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he has made to ensure that registration authorities are advised of which small homes eligible for registration after April have residents receiving income support or residential allowance towards the cost of their care.

Mr. Burt: No such arrangements are necessary. The social security benefits paid to residents living in small homes have no bearing on the registration process.

Retirement Pension (Women)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances a woman aged 60 years or more is not entitled to the basic retirement pension; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: A woman of 60 who has paid insufficient national insurance contributions will not be entitled to the basic retirement pension in her own right. If she is married she will be entitled to a retirement pension on her husband's contributions provided that he is 65 and has taken his pension. If her marriage has terminated she may still use her former husband's contributions to gain a pension. A widow of pensionable age may also receive a retirement pension based on her late husband's contributions.

National Insurance

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on Treasury revenue in 1993-94 and in a full year of raising the upper earnings limit for national insurance in line with average earnings rather than prices; and how many employees would pay extra national insurance as a result.

Miss Widdecombe: If the upper earnings limit for national insurance was raised in line with average earnings to £425 per week from April 1993, the additional revenue both in 1993-94 and in a full year would be about £50 million. Some 3 million employees would pay up to 45p per week extra in contributions.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on Treasury revenue in 1993-94 and in a full year of (a) abolishing the 2 per cent. national insurance contribution, (b) raising the lower earnings limit to the level of the personal tax allowance and (c) both (a) and (b) combined.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table. The reduction in the full year cost at (b) reflects the savings in respect of personal pensions rebates and incentives paid after 1993-94. For the purposes of this calculation the personal tax allowance has been increased by the latest Treasury assumption of 2·6 per cent. over the 1992-93 level.

	Cost(−)/Yield(+) 1993-94 (£ billion)
	In year	Full year
(a) Abolishing the two per cent. national insurance contribution	−0·9	−1·0
(b) Raising the lower earnings limit to the level of the personal tax allowance	−0·5	−0·4
(a) Part (a) and (b) combined	−1·6	−1·6

Note: Figures in (c) have been rounded and are therefore not the sum of the figures in (a) and (b).

Pension Age

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", he will publish figures estimating the cost of reintroducing earnings uprating for the retirement pension and other linked benefits beginning in April 1996, giving annual figures in 1992-93 prices over a 10-year period.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The table shows estimates of the cost of introducing earnings upratings with effect from April 1996 for retirement pensions and linked benefits—widow's pension, widowed mother's allowance, invalidity pension as well as unemployment and sickness benefits paid to those over state pension age. The consultation document on options for equality in state pension age assumes an annual increase in earnings of 1·5 per cent. greater than prices and this assumption has been used to derive the extra cost.

Note: Estimates derived from estimates underlying Tables 13 and 14 of the "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial Estimates —Report of the Government Actuary on the Second Quinquennial review under Section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975", published in July 1990 (HoC 582).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the farm or cattle pesticides which have been banned in the United Kingdom during the last three years.

Mr. Soames: Since 1989 a total of 70 pesticide products have been banned in the United Kingdom. Of these 27 contained the active ingredient captafol, 26 organomercury compounds, 11 aldrin, four DNOC, and one each for pentachlorophenol and dieldrin.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy not to reduce the level of less-favoured area supplement under the ewe premium scheme without increasing the level of hill livestock compensatory allowance.

Mr. Curry: Headage payment rates under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme will continue to be set in the light of all relevant factors.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to distribute the facilities and services of the former milk marketing board to milk marketing co-operatives other than Milk Marque.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Bill would enable each milk marketing board to submit formal proposals to Ministers for the transfer and distribution of its assets. Ministers would decide whether to approve those proposals in accordance with the provisions of the Bill as enacted.

Minister's Home (Security)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when and where the cost of providing security accommodation at his home was recorded in the departmental accounts; and if it was annotated for the attention of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Mr. Gummer: It is not in the public interest to disclose or aid the identification of security arrangements relating to public figures. Details of such expenditure do not in any event require separate annotation in departmental accounts.

Rabbit Diseases

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contingency plans there are to ensure sufficient supplies of vaccine would be available to cope with a sudden outbreak of either myxomatosis or viral haemorrhagic disease in rabbits.

Mr. Gummer: We have been in close contact with representatives of vaccine manufacturers, along with those of rabbit owners, to explore the possibility of vaccine supplies being made available. As a result, a vaccine against myxomatosis is expected to be licensed early in March, although it is likely to be May before the company is able to make supplies widely available. There is no current licence application for a vaccine against rabbit viral haemorrhagic disease, but a possible application is under active discussion.

Linseed

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to seek inclusion of linseed in the EC arable regime from 1993; what base year for set-aside he believes to be justified; what proportion of the total EC linseed crop is currently grown in the United Kingdom; whether these proposals will be the subject of majority voting in the Council of Agriculture Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's price-fixing proposals include the addition of linseed to the list of crops eligible for aid in 1993 under the arable area payments scheme, which includes provisions for set aside. The timing of this proposal takes no account of farming practice, and causes considerable difficulties for linseed producers. I am therefore opposing it.

In 1992, the United Kingdom area sown to linseed was approximately 60 per cent. of the EC total. The proposals for linseed have been made in the context of the Commission's annual price-fixing proposals, subject to qualified majority voting.

Milk Levy

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the detailed calculations for each year since the inception of the additional milk levy system setting out how the total guaranteed quantity, including Northern Ireland's share of the Community reserve, was allocated among all the United Kingdom's regions.

Mr. Curry: The allocation of quota between regions is based on the total quantity of quota awarded to individual producers in those regions. Detailed figures are set out in the table. Figures for the 1992-93 quota year will not be available until after the quota year end. Direct sales quota is not allocated between United Kingdom regions.

Fish Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards French proposals for (a) a temporary ban on fish imports into the EC and (b) minimum import prices.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission, having consulted the fisheries management committee on 25 February, is adopting a measure requiring the price at which imports of certain species of white fish enter the Community to be equal to or above the reference price. I consider this to be a measured and balanced response to the current market problems.

Fish Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has done to establish the relative contribution of (a) consumer resistance, (b) seasonal factors and (c) imports, on depressing market prices for fish.

Mr. Curry: The Department maintains a close watch on the state of the fish market and the factors which influence it, but their relative importance varies over time and cannot be quantified precisely.

WALES

Coal Mines (Water Pollution)

11. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money his Department has allocated to the Welsh Development Agency for the last five years for the purpose of treating rivers and streams in Wales polluted by abandoned coal mines.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Individual reclamation schemes can include work to contain sites and prevent contamination from spreading. Planned spending in 1993-94 is some £32,000,000 to reclaim around 1,200 acres.

Manufacturing Plants

12. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new manufacturing plants have been opened and are now in production in Wales since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: There are 803 manufacturing plants, employing over 56,000 people, which are still in production, having opened since 1979.

Quangos

13. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for appointments to quangos.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I seek to appoint those who are best suited to each post.

Exports

14. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking within the Principality to encourage the development of exports.

Mr. David Hunt: I recently announced a new export drive to help small and medium-sized Welsh companies which includes a substantially increased programme of overseas trade missions and a trade fair representative service for Welsh companies.

Committee of the Regions

15. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce the mechanism for selection of Wales's representation at the EC Committee of the Regions.

Mr. David Hunt: The question of United Kingdom representation on the Committee of the Regions is currently being considered.

Valleys Initiative

16. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the results of the valleys initiative launched by his predecessor in 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: I am currently engaging consultants to undertake an evaluation of the programme for the valleys, and I will publish the results in due course.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for an independent evaluation exercise on the valleys initiative.

Mr. David Hunt: I am currently in the process of engaging independent consultants to undertake an evaluation of the programme for the valleys.

Cardiff Wales Airport

17. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to secure improved road and rail links to Cardiff Wales airport.

Sir Wyn Roberts: These are matters for South Glamorgan county council, as highway authority, and British Rail respectively.

Welsh Vineyards

18. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectolitres of (a) table wine and (b) quality wine were produced from Welsh vineyards in each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: No quality wine has been produced, but 131 hectolitres of table wine were produced from vineyards in Wales in 1989; 202 in 1990; and 147 in 1991.

Further Education (Grants)

19. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward proposals to ensure (a) the same formula to provide adequate funding for individual maintenance grants and (b) the same qualifying criteria, for awards for further education students in each of the counties of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Local education authorities are responsible for making mandatory student awards in accordance with the relevant regulations. They receive 100 per cent. funding from central Government for such awards.

In contrast, LEAs provide support for discretionary awards from their own resources and it is for them to decide which students and courses to support and how much to spend. We believe that policy in this area is best decided locally.

Wage Levels

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to raise average Welsh wage levels.

Mr. David Hunt: Wages are a matter for agreement between employees and employers in the light of their particular circumstances.

Since May 1990 wage levels have risen faster in Wales than in Great Britain as a whole—16·7 per cent. in Wales, 15·8 per cent. in Great Britain—and real earnings have increased for all income groups in Wales since 1979.

Secondary Schools (Expenditure)

21. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent for pupils in secondary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79, at constant prices.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1990-91 current expenditure per pupil in secondary schools in Wales was £1,953. The equivalent constant price figure for 1978-79 was £1,433.

North-south Road Links

22. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his plans to improve road links between north and south Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1979, over £180 million has been spent on improvements to the A470 and the A483. We have plans to spend a further £180 million including the major improvements shown in the 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales".

Housing (Rural Areas)

23. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives from (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in rural Wales to discuss housing need and affordability in the rural areas of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I keep in close touch with rural housing matters. My officials are currently meeting every housing authority in Wales to discuss their housing strategies.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is undertaken to encourage energy conservation among pupils as part of the national curriculum in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The nature, use and conservation of energy is a part of the science order within the national curriculum. The technology order also requires pupils at key stage 4 to be taught "to reduce energy loss and understand why this is important".

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of (a) local authority, (b) private rented and (c) owner-occupied houses in Wales currently have (i) loft insulation, (ii) hot water tank and hot water system lagging, (iii) cavity wall insulation, (iv) double glazing and (v) draught excluder systems.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information is from the 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey and is shown in the table:

Households taking energy conservation measures, by tenure

	Percentage of applicable households[1] with:
	Roof, loft insulation	Hot watertank insulated	Cavity walls insulation	Windows double glazed	Doors/windows draught stripped

Self-employed People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the percentages of self-employed people within each local authority area in Wales; and what proportion of self-employed people in each of those areas are involved directly in agriculture.

Mr. David Hunt: The percentage of self-employed people aged 16 and over in each local authority area in Wales is shown in the table. Information on self-employed people involved in agriculture will be included in part 2 of the 1991 census county report series—Nos. CEN91 CR 47-54 cover Wales—which are due to be published by HMSO between March and July 1993. Copies of these reports will be placed in the Library of the House.

School Governors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to amend regulation 21 of the Education (School Government) Regulations 1989 to ensure that members of the public who are not current school governors are entitled to attend a school governors meeting as observers only on a strictly one-off basis.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The 1989 regulations already allow for anyone who is not a member of a governing body to seek the approval of the governing body to their attendance at any particular meeting of that governing body.

Bus Engines

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial incentives are currently provided by his Department to encourage bus companies to install new cleaner engines.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Government's observations on the fifth report of the Transport Select Committee, Session 1990-91—House of Commons paper 102 of Session 1991-92.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the percentage of those that have been unemployed for 26 weeks or longer in each Welsh county in January of each year since 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: Unemployment data can be accessed from the NOMIS database by House of Commons Library staff.

Earnings

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average gross weekly earnings of full-time workers in each Welsh county in each year since 1985 expressed as a percentage of the United Kingdom average gross weekly earnings of full-time workers.

Mr. David Hunt: Comparisons with United Kingdom averages are not readily available. The table gives the figures as a percentage of the Great Britain average.

Ecotec Research

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the recommendations of the report by Ecotec Research on socio-economic conditions in the south Wales valleys.

Mr. David Hunt: This report, together with a range of other material, is being considered in the discussions that are taking place within the context of my Department's structural funds review working group for industrial south Wales into the future use of these resources in the area from January 1994 onwards.

Farm Business Survey

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cattle and sheep farms in severely disadvantaged areas in Wales have taken part in the farm business survey in each year since 1979; and what was their average hectarage.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of cattle and sheep farms in the severely disadvantaged areas in Wales which have been included in the farm business survey since 1979 and the average hectarage per farm are as follows:

	Number of Farms	Average Hectarage
1979-80	131	133
1980-81	130	135
1981-82	121	138

Youth Services

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what capital grants he is making available in 1993-94 to support voluntary youth services, village halls and community centre programmes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much money he made available in capital grants for voluntary youth services, village halls and community centre programmes in each of the last five years; and how many schemes have been supported in each district council area in each of those years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Records are held on a county basis. The number of schemes approved are as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Clwyd	6	8	7	4	5
Dyfed	2	4	14	20	17
Gwent	13	8	4	7	9
Gwynedd	9	15	15	10	4
Mid Glamorgan	2	2	2	1	2

Grant outturn (£)	546,505	592,324	522,611	723,659	[1]551,000

£0·522 million in grant aid will be available in 1993-94 to continue support of projects approved in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Departmental Successes and Failures

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the successes and (b) the failures of his period of office.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be making a statement on the performance of my Department in the Welsh day debate today.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage hill livestock compensatory allowance payments have formed of net farm income in real terms on specialist sheep farms in severely disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The percentage of farm income represented by hill compensatory allowances on sheep farms in severely disadvantaged areas of Wales in each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1979-80	136·5
1980-81	85·6
1981-82	63·9
1982-83	95·8
1983-84	71·2
1984-85	64·5
1985-86	84·9
1986-87	75·5
1987-88	79·9
1988-89	46·2
1989-90	78·9

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage hill livestock compensatory allowance payments have formed of net farm income in real terms on cattle and sheep farms in disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for the disadvantaged areas are available from 1985-86 following the designation of the disadvantaged areas in 1984. The percentage of farm income represented by hill compensatory allowances in each year since then is as follows:

	Per cent
1985-86	17·0
1986-87	39·6
1987-88	24·1
1988-89	12·8
1989-90	23·3
1990-91	69·2
1991-92	31·1

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the net farm income in real terms of livestock farms in disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Income figures for the disadvantaged areas are available from 1985-86 following the designation of the disadvantaged areas in 1984. The income figures in real terms—deflated by the RPI 1991-92 equals 100—are as follows:

1986-87	4,286
1987-88	7,875
1988-89	12,941
1989-90	6,172

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage hill livestock compensatory allowance payments have formed of net farm income in real terms on livestock farms in disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The percentage of farm income represented by hill compensatory allowances on livestock farms[1] in the disadvantaged areas of Wales from 1985-86[2] is as follows:

	Per cent.
1985-86	17·0
1986-87	39·6
1987-88	24·1
1988-89	12·8
1989-90	23·3
1990-91	69·2
1991-92	31·1

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Languages Charter

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the differences between (a) notification, (b) acceptance and (c) approval of the European charter for regional or minority languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Article 18 of the European charter for regional or minority languages provides that the charter will be subject to ratification, acceptance or approval by the member states of the Council of Europe and that such instruments are to be deposited with the secretary general of the Council of Europe.

Ratification, acceptance and approval are all ways in which a state indicates its consent to be bound by the treaty. They all have the same effect. Which method a state uses may reflect its domestic practice. But each method requires an instrument to be sent to the depositary specifying whether the state is ratifying, accepting or approving the charter.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which languages in the United Kingdom the Government are considering specifying under article 3 of the European charter for regional or minority languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are still considering whether to sign the charter. That consideration is on the basis that it would apply to Welsh, Gaelic and Irish.

Armenia

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking in relation to the economic blockade of Armenia by Azerbaijan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Community made representations to the Turkish Government on 29 January, asking Turkey to allow the transit of fuel supplies to Armenia from third countries and to fulfil earlier commitments to provide electricity to Armenia. Also on 29 January the president of the United Nations Security Council issued a statement expressing concern at the situation in Armenia and urging all countries in a position to help to facilitiate the provision of fuel and humanitarian assistance to Armenia. The British Government associate themselves with these calls and have taken the same line in their bilateral dealings with Turkey and Azerbaijan.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the continued economic blockade of Armenia by Azerbaijan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The President of Armenia has written to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and several Armenian Ministers have written to their British counterparts, about the dire effects the Azerbaijani economic blockade has had on Armenia. We have in recent months made nearly £700,000 available for relief work in Armenia and the Nagorno-Karabakh region. The European Community has made a 38 million ecu loan for food and medicines available to Armenia and is considering further emergency humanitarian aid.

Macedonia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the application by Macedonia for admission to the United Nations; and what is his policy on moves to reach an early decision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Macedonia's application for admission to the United Nations has now been circulated. The three EC members of the Security Council—United Kingdom, France and Spain—have put forward a draft resolution with the aim of securing Macedonia's early admission on terms acceptable to all parties. The president of the Security Council is consulting the Greeks and the Macedonians.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the British Government's policy on United Nations resolution 789 on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We support the United Nations Secretary-General's mission of good offices and the Security Council resolutions, including 789, aimed at resolving the Cyprus dispute. We welcome the agreement by all parties to resume talks, and will continue to work for progress and help the Secretary-General.

Departmental Officers (Travel)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officers travelled first class to their posts abroad in the last year because of (a) their grade and (b) operational reasons.

Mr. Goodlad: In the 12 months to January 1993, 13 officers travelled first class from London to their posts abroad or returned to London from their posts abroad. One officer travelled first class by virtue of his grade, and 12 for operational reasons.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomatic service officers travelled first class to posts abroad in the last year; at what cost; and in how many cases the families of such officers travelled in first class.

Mr. Goodlad: In the 12 months to January 1993, 13 diplomatic service officers travelled first class from London to their posts abroad, or returned to London from their posts abroad, and the total cost was £25,046. Nine officers were accompanied by their families, who also travelled first class: the total cost of the family fares was £18,697. In addition, private secretaries and advisers accompanying Ministers, and officers of the rank of deputy under-secretary or above may travel first class on duty journeys.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many return air tickets, per year, and of what class, are allocated to diplomatic service officers serving abroad for use by their dependants; and what is the maximum number of tickets available to each family each year.

Mr. Goodlad: Dependants at post have the same entitlements as officers. The entitlement for return air tickets allocated to diplomatic service officers serving abroad for use by their dependants is related to the difficulty of the post, and there are basically three categories: the least difficult posts—62—where representational officers and their dependants serve for four years with one fare-paid leave, and non-representational officers for 30 months with no fare-paid leave; the intermediate category—51 posts—where officers serve for three years with one fare-paid leave after 18 months, and the most difficult posts—85—where officers serve for up to three years with a fare-paid leave after each 12 months of duty. For such mid-tour leave journeys, the class of travel is dependent on the time taken to fly to post. For journeys of less than two and a half hours economy class is used. For journeys over two and a half hours, business class. Very senior officers—those of the rank of deputy under-secretary or above—have an entitlement to travel in a superior class by virtue of their grade.

In addition, officers at most non-European posts—145—receive an extra economy class fare for each posting of at least three years, and in countries—55—with special difficulties, a contribution towards an annual short local trip outside the country of posting. The class of, and contribution towards, such journeys is based on economy class fares. Also, children at school in the United Kingdom may fly to post for three holidays per annum, by the cheapest possible means.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance has been set, and when, regarding the type of air ticket to which diplomatic service officers and their families are entitled.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's Treasury's guidance regarding the type of air ticket was set in the "Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code", recently superseded by the "Civil Service Management Code". It applies to all civil servants, including diplomatic service officers and their families. The last major revision of entitlements was in 1982 when new fare structures were introduced by the airlines.

In summary, all civil servants including diplomatic service officers, normally travel in economy class on journeys of up to two and a half hours. On official duty, and on transfer and mid-tour leave, they travel in business class on journeys over two and a half hours. On other leave journeys provided at the more difficult posts, they travel economy class. The same rules apply to the families of officers. Children who fly to post from school in the United Kingdom for the three main school holidays fly by the cheapest possible means. Very senior officers—those of the rank of deputy under-secretary or above—may sometimes travel in a higher class than those indicated above, by virtue of their grade or for operational reasons.

Training Courses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff have attended courses at Hanslope Park in the last year; on which system Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff are trained at Hanslope Park; how many missions abroad use such systems; when such systems are being withdrawn worldwide; and when training courses for the new system will begin.

Mr. Goodlad: A total of 2,285 FCO staff have attended courses at Hanslope Park over the last 12 months. They are trained on many different systems in use at home and in 143 missions abroad. The main system being withdrawn is Piccolo HF radio. The last one is expected to go by the end of June 1993. Training on its replacement began in early 1992.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff have attended courses in Brackley, Northamptonshire, in the last year; and at what cost.

Mr. Goodlad: No FCO staff have attended courses at Brackley, but they have been accommodated there while attending communications courses in Buckinghamshire. The average cost is £64 per capita per night.

Mr. Abdul Qayum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when an appeal application was received at the post in Islamabad from Mr. Abdul Qayum—Ref: IMM/B2588—who was refused entry clearance to join his wife in the United Kingdom; when the explanatory statement was dispatched; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not available in London. I have asked the British high commission at Islamabad to provide the answer and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office when it is received.

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to the United Nations that its special rapporteurs on torture pay an early visit to Indonesia to inquire into alleged violations of human rights in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: A special rapporteur on torture visited East Timor in 1991. A further visit is for discussion between the rapporteur and the Indonesians.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to the United Nations Human Rights Commission that it appoints a special rapporteur on East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: We are currently discussing with our EC partners how to handle the East Timor issue at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. We do not believe that the situation in East Timor requires the appointment of a special rapporteur.

Ministers (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent on facilities in United Kingdom embassies and high commissions in each of the last two financial years in connection with visits to these countries by the Prime Minister or other Ministers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To provide a full answer would involve disproportionate cost. Generally, overseas posts cope with such visits from within their own existing resources.

Mrs. Jahan Ara

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application made to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad by Mrs. Jahan Ara (Ref: B5808; DOB 4:11:71) to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not available in London. I have asked the British high commission at Islamabad to provide the answer and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office when it is received.

Mr. Ghulam Murtaza

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application by Mr. Ghulam Murtaza—Ref: Gu 100/7157/TAH—to join his wife in the United Kingdom following the submission of further evidence requested by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not available in London. I have asked the British high commission at Islamabad to provide the answer and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office when it is received.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Maintenance Orders

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average weekly amount per child awarded to heads of lone parent families from maintenance orders in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Roche (Abandoned Litigation)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much public expenditure was incurred in the abandoned litigation against the pharmaceutical company Roche; and if he will conduct an inquiry into the reason for this nugatory expenditure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No part of the litigation which is being funded by the Legal Aid Board against the pharmaceutical company, Roche, has yet been abandoned. In the light of the statutory criteria under the Legal Aid Act 1988, some of the legally aided claimants have been sent letters informing them that their legal aid certificates may be discharged and inviting them to show cause why they should not be. There is a right of appeal against discharge. The generic expenditure on all the benzodiazepine drugs in the litigation amounts to approximatley £3 million, though further, as yet unquantified, costs have also been incurred. In view of the numbers of individual cases involved, these costs may be considerable.

TRANSPORT

Donaldson Inquiry

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the closing date for submissions to the Donaldson inquiry to enable considered responses from the people of Shetland and local coastal authorities to be submitted following the Shetland standard conference of 31 March to 1 April.

Mr. Norris: The conduct of the inquiry is entirely a matter for Lord Donaldson but I will draw the hon. Member's question to Lord Donaldson's attention.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will grant a sheriff's inquiry in to the sinking of the MV Braer so as to provide information to be considered by the Donaldson inquiry.

Mr. Norris: Under the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989, provision is made for investigations into serious marine accidents to take the form of an inspector's inquiry with a report to the Secretary of State by the chief inspector of marine accidents and subsequent publication. This is considered to be the appropriate form of investigation for this accident. However should the evidence being gathered by the inspectors suggest that a formal investigation before a sheriff is warranted then my right hon. Friend will consider ordering one.

Lord Donaldson has made it clear that his inquiry is not directed particularly at the Braer accident; however, such information as he needs on that accident will be provided by the chief inspector.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the capital investment required (a) to resignal the west coast main line and (b) to replace the power supply to the west coast main line; and how much money British Rail is allocating to these purposes.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to assess what capital investment is required to resignal the west coast main line and to replace the power supply. Exactly how much money British Rail will be allocating to these purposes, and over what period, will be decided in the spring, when British Rail has completed its next corporate plan.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the power supply and the signalling for the west coast main line were designed to last; and when they were installed south of Warrington.

Mr. Freeman: The west coast main line was electrified in the 1960s. Signalling south of Crewe was also replaced in the 1960s. North of Crewe, the signalling was modernised in the 1970s.

The details of the design lives of the various components are matters for BR: it is for it to judge what needs to be replaced when.

Ships' Sewerage Systems

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to press for international regulations governing the installation and operation of ships' sewerage systems.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has given full support to proposals submitted by the Department of Marine of the Republic of Ireland to the International Maritime Organisation to regulate the installation and operation of ships' sewage systems. I am advised that this item has been placed on the IMO work programme for completion in 1995.

Bilge Alarms

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those passenger ferries operating without bilge alarms.

Mr. Norris: There are no international requirements for passenger ferries to have bilge alarms. However, I am advised that those United Kingdom-registered passenger ferries that operate with certain machinery-space, watertight doors closed do have such alarms.

Shipping

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the desirability of oil tankers and other large ships sending out tracking signals while they are in British waters with the aim of ensuring that their routes minimise the potential environmental damage of an accident and consequent spillage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The International Maritime Organisation is addressing the provision of equipment to transmit tracking signals for all ships. The Department fully supports this work and is developing a research programme to assess various types of equipment and their potential benefits.

Bathing Beaches

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken in pursuance of the Marine Accident Investigation Branch recommendation of 1992 concerning provision of notices on all bathing beaches likely to be affected by the wash of shipping passing close to shore.

Mr. Norris: As it was not formal or addressed to a specific body or authority, the recommendation and a brief account of the incident from which it stemmed has been included in the MAIB publication "Summary of Investigations".

The MAIB will ensure that the local authorities concerned are informed well ahead of this year's bathing season.

Bus Services

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total route mileage of scheduled bus services in each local authority area in Cambridgeshire which were supported by a county council subsidy in each year since 1984.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not held centrally by the Department. This is the responsibility of the county council.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total route mileage of scheduled bus services in each local authority area in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally by the Department.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that arrangements are made enabling British Rail privileged travel facilities, currently enjoyed by British Waterways Board employees and pensioners, to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Powers are being taken in the Railways Bill to ensure that future passenger service operators may be compelled to provide such facilities on their services. This will ensure that the benefits for all those currently entitled can be protected.

WALES

Student Grants

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of vocational first degree subjects receive (a) mandatory grants and (b) discretionary grants.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Students on first degree courses, irrespective of subject, are entitled to a mandatory award provided they satisfy the personal eligibility criteria.

Students on first degree courses who do not satisfy the criteria for mandatory awards can apply to their local authority for a discretionary award. Local authorities are free to determine their own policies on discretionary awards.

Protection of Children

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has made to the Police Federation's submission to the inquiry on domestic violence in relation to giving courts powers to make short-term ouster orders for the protection of children.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. This submission from the Police Federation was made to the Home Affairs Committee, which has not yet published its report.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales under what criteria the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station has been entered for the Wales tourist board's annual competition; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Nuclear Electric submitted an entry on behalf of its visitor centres and station tours at Wylfa and Trawsfynydd in the "Best Newcomer" category. Under this category any tourism development, large or small, which has been completed in the last three years by either the public or private sector is eligible to be considered.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received requesting minor works assistance under the renovation grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Requests for minor works assistance are made direct to the local housing authorities not to the Welsh Office.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the subject of the resources test for disabled facilities grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since I announced changes to the test of resources for all grants, including disabled facilities grants last July, I have received a small number of representations.

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of people in Wales currently living in areas where air pollution levels exceed European standards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are European Community air quality limit values for lead, sulphur dioxide and particulate matter, nitrogen dioxide and ozone. Monitoring of these pollutants indicates that these standards are not being exceeded in Wales.

Care and Repair Cymru

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the Welsh Office circular detailing proposed changes in the renovation grant system as operated by Care and Repair Cymru; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No such circular has been issued by the Welsh Office. However, the Welsh Office has consulted interested bodies on draft regulations setting out new arrangements for the housing renovation grant scheme. A small number of comments were received in response.

Radon

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures for the levels of radon in dwelling houses in Clwyd and Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is not possible to provide the figures requested until the full results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey in Wales are known.

South Wales Valleys (Report)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by Ecotec Research on the socio-economic conditions in the south Wales valleys, commissioned by the standing conference on regional policy in south Wales, the South Wales training and enterprise councils and the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: As the hon. Gentleman rightly indicates, this report has been commissioned by the standing conference on regional policy in south Wales, together with a number of other organisations, and in the circumstances it would be inappropriate for me to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Rural Problems

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to visit the Meirionnydd Nant Conwy constituency to review rural problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received regarding funding arrangements by the Wales tourist board under section 4 of the Tourism Development Act 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. An independent report recently published found the section 4 scheme operated by the Wales tourist board to be effective and worthy of continuation.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner fundholders there are in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 26 general practitioner fundholders in Wales. A further 45 applicants, including three groups of two practices, are preparing to become fundholders from 1 April next.

Disabled People

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he is taking on the training and employment of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are many initiatives taken locally by training and enterprise councils and by the Employment Service placing, assessment and counselling teams to improve access to training and employment opportunities for disabled people. I fully support all of these and am committed to the widest possible access for all to full participation in the labour market.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of schools which have held ballots on grant-maintained status; and how many of them are (a) Anglican and (b) Roman Catholic, listing in each category how many are (i) now operating as grant-maintained schools, (ii) have received approval for grant-maintained status, (iii) have published proposals and are awaiting a decision, (iv) have voted for grant-maintained status but not yet published proposals, (v) have had their proposals rejected and (vi) have voted against grant-maintained status.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Sixteen schools in Wales have balloted the parents of their pupils on the acquisition of grant maintained status. Of these one is an Anglican school and one a Roman Catholic. An application from the former is currently before me; the Roman Catholic school was incorporated as a grant maintained school on 1 January 1992.

Meirionnydd Nant Conwy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives are currently being pursued to enhance employment opportunities in the Meirionnydd Nant Conwy constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, along with the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Welsh Development Agency, Targed and others, have in place very successful initiatives designed to create new jobs and safeguard existing ones. For instance, DBRW schemes alone have helped to create or safeguard over 800 jobs in the Meirionnydd area since 1979. The board is also developing a business park at Penrhyndeudraeth, which is expected to provide up to 750 jobs in premises totalling 250,000 square feet.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts and initiatives have been pursued in the last 12 months to procure inward investment to Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office, Welsh Development Agency, Development Board for Rural Wales, Targed and local authorities continue to work strenuously to promote inward investment to Meirionnydd Nant Conwy. The Gwynedd marketing initiative has been formed to direct targeted marketing campaigns in the United Kingdom and overseas. Good results are being achieved and three inward investment projects have been recorded for the constituency over the past 12 months.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to bring forward proposals to widen the remit of the Development Board for Rural Wales, by statute if necessary, to enable the board to assist existing businesses which are enduring difficult financial circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no such plans. The Development Board for Rural Wales already has wide-ranging powers to assist businesses in Wales.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to bring forward proposals to widen the remit of the Welsh Development Agency, by statute if necessary, to enable the agency to assist existing businesses which are enduring difficult financial circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no such plans. The Welsh Development Agency already has wide-ranging powers to assist businesses in Wales.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Welsh local authorities and other infrastructure-providing bodies in relation to the levels of (a) base and (b) supplementary credit approvals and the effect of his 1993-94 settlements on applications for European regional development fund assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: These issues have been raised at meetings of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance and its capital working group, which are the forums for discussions with local authorities on local government finance issues including capital provision. I chaired meetings of WCCLGF on 26 November and 12 January. The CWG, involving my officials and officers from local authorities, met on 11 January.

I have not had consultations on these issues with other infrastructure-providing bodies in Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has received from the European Commission to the proposal to include rural Wales in the list of areas with objective status for European regional development fund assistance.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Commission announced on 24 February their proposals for future objective 1 status which did not include rural Wales (Clwyd, Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys). I was extremely disappointed by its omission and will be raising this matter with Commissioner Millan when I meet him shortly.

Welsh Office Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect functional changes have had for Welsh Office expenditure for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 1.13 of the 1993 departmental report for the Welsh Office (Cm 2215).

HIV

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of HIV sufferers there were in Wales in 1990-91, 1991-92 and at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The cumulative totals of HIV positive cases reported in Wales as at 31 March 1991, 31 March 1992 and 31 December 1992 were 234, 279 and 302 respectively.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total payment to chairpersons and members of NHS trusts estimated for 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Full details of payments to chairmen and members of national health service trusts are not held centrally.

Trust chairmen receive remuneration between £15,125 and £19,285 dependent on the level of income of the trust. Each non-executive director receives remuneration of £5,000 per annum. In addition, travel and other expenses may be payable.

Costs associated with executive directors will be included in the accounts and annual report which each trust is required to make publicly available under the statutory obligation to hold an annual meeting.

Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; in each case how many are (i) voluntary aided, (ii) voluntary controlled and (iii) grant-maintained; and how many in each category are Anglican, Roman Catholic, other denominational and non-denominational.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number, type and denomination of schools in Wales as at January 1992 is available from the publication "Statistics of Training and Education in Wales: Schools 1993", tables 3.06 and 4.05 for primary and secondary respectively. There were two grant-maintained secondary schools in January 1992, one was classified as voluntary Roman Catholic and the other was classified as county secondary. A further two schools have since become grant maintained, both of which were previously county secondary schools.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Litter

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for depositing litter were brought in England and Wales during 1992.

Mr. Jack: In England and Wales in 1991, there were 1,450 prosecutions under the Litter Act 1983, section 1(3), and 223 prosecutions for depositing litter under section 87 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Information for 1992 will not be available until autumn 1993.

Yugoslavia (Refugees)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) male and (b) female refugees, from former Yugoslavia have been refused access into the United Kingdom over the past six months;

(2) how many (a) male and (b) remale refugees from former Yugoslavia, have been received into each of the countries of the European Community over the past six months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the six months July to December 1992 inclusive, around 4,600 nationals of the former Yugoslavia (excluding dependants) applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. Except for certain cases refused on safe third country grounds and under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules—detailed in the table—all these applicants are being allowed to stay while their application is under consideration. Comprehensive information on the gender of these principal applicants is not yet available but provisional data suggest that about 60 per cent. were male and 40 per cent. female.

In addition, as I announced to the House on 30 November 1992, we are willing to accept 1,000 ex-detainees from Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia, together with their dependants, totalling perhaps 4,000 in all. These ex-detainees are being identified for us by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; those identified so far are all male but are being accompanied, or will be joined, by their wives and children.

For information on total applications to other EC members states, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 18 February (column 297). The information is not available by gender.

Refusals of applications for asylum in the United Kingdom by nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, by gender, July to December 1992

	Total	Male	Female
Refused asylum and exceptional leave after determination of the asylum claim	—	—	—
Refused on safe third country grounds[1 2]	13	11	2
Refused under paragraph 101 of immigration rules[3]	40	n/a	n/a

[1] Refused on grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.
[2] Breakdown by gender is of those removed on safe third country grounds, which corresponds in total, in this period, to those refused. A breakdown of those refused is not directly available.
[3] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to two invitations to interview to establish identity.
n/a not available.

Refugees

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female refugees, have been received into the United Kingdom over the last six months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period July to December 1992 inclusive, a total of around 15,000 persons (excluding dependants) applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. Comprehensive information on the gender of these principal applicants is not yet available but provisional data suggests that of the order of 70 per cent. were male and 30 per cent. female.

Offenders (Staffordshire)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders appearing before the courts in Staffordshire were unemployed in each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 15 January 1993, column 826.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the levels of juvenile crime and the extent of offending on bail by juveniles.

Mr. Jack: Information about the number of juvenile offenders is collected routinely by the Home Office and published annually in "Criminal Statistics". This information is supplemented by a number of research projects including a national self-report study of delinquency, initial results from which will be available this year.

No figures are held centrally on the extent of offending on bail by juveniles, but research is being undertaken into the bail process in five areas as part of the Home Office's work to reduce the level of offending on bail. This is expected to produce, inter alia, information about the level of offending by juveniles on bail.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about measures that might be introduced to reduce juvenile crime.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 21 January, at column 332.

Prostitution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration he is giving to the proposals by the chief constable of South Yorkshire on prostitution; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what new initiatives he is currently considering to tackle the problems of prostitution in residential districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government are aware of the difficulties which prostitution generally, and in residential areas in particular, can cause. I am also aware of the personal view of the chief constable of South Yorkshire on this subject.

The aim of the law in this area is to prevent the nuisance caused when prostitutes ply their trade in the streets; to discourage women from becoming prostitutes; and to penalise those who seek to encourage, control or exploit the prostitution of others for financial gain.

When a suitable legislation opportunity occurs we will amend the law on kerb crawling in section 1 of the Sexual Offences Act 1985 to remove the need to prove persistence, annoyance or nuisance before a man can be convicted of the offence.

Refugees (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees have been accepted into the United Kingdom from each of the states of the former Yugoslavia since the commencement of the recent conflicts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period January 1992 to January 1993 inclusive, around 5,900 nationals of the former Yugoslavia (excluding dependants) have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. The large majority of these applications are still under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to stay in the meantime. More detailed data on the origin of the applicants is not available.

In addition, as I announced to the House on 30 November 1992, we are willing to accept 1,000 ex-detainees from Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia, together with their dependants, totalling perhaps 4,000 in all.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement indicating the administrative procedures used by his Department to satisfy that the provisions of (a) section 5(4) and (b) section 5(5) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are being properly directed by those seeking permission to undertake experiments on animals; and how many experiments have been refused permission since the Act came into force.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 1 March 1993]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Police Batons

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what trials he has authorised of new batons for use by the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 1 March 1993]: My right hon. and learned Friend has agreed to the Metropolitan police's conducting trials of an expandable baton, subject to the outcome of a full scientific evaluation of its wounding potential. He has also agreed to their conducting trials of variants of the straight baton which can be carried covertly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racial Hatred

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General what was the number of prosecutions for inciting racial hatred in (a) the Greater London area, (b) England and Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland during the year 1992.

The Attorney-General: In 1992 there was one prosecution in England and Wales for inciting racial hatred. There were none in the Greater London area and none in Northern Ireland. I have no responsibilities relating to criminal prosecutions in Scotland.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Attorney-General what guidelines the Crown prosecution service has on prosecutions in cases of domestic violence.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service reviews all cases referred to it from the police in accordance with the principles set out in the code for Crown prosecutors issued in pursuance of section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. The evidential and public interest criteria set out in the code apply to offences committed in "domestic" circumstances just as they do to any other prosecution.

The Crown prosecution service recognises that there are complex issues involved in prosecuting domestic violence cases and, in addition to the code, has issued internal guidance to its staff. This guidance, which is being updated, sets out in greater detail the factors which will be relevant to the review and prosecution of these cases. The relevant document will shortly be supplied to the Home Affairs Committee inquiry on domestic violence, and will thereafter be available in the Library of the House of Commons. It will also be made available to relevant interest groups.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poisoned Carcases

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of poisoned carcases being left in the open have been reported to his officials since 1 January 1990; in how many cases prosecutions resulted; and whether he will in due course, inform the hon. Member for Taunton of the outcome of his inquiries into the death through poison of a pet dog at Stoke St. Gregory, near Taunton.

Mr. Soames: Since January 1990 in England and Wales, 63 incidents involving poisoned carcases have been reported to the department. During the same period, five such cases have resulted in successful prosecution of the offenders. I will write to the hon. Member about the case to which he refers when investigations have been completed.

Dairy Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been employed in the dairy industry in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: My Department collects figures only for the farming part of the dairy industry. These are as follows:

Employment in dairy farming[1]
England and Wales

	Thousands
1983	116·6
1984	113·8
1985	107·9
1986	105·6
1987	99·4
1988	93·8
1989	90·5
1990	88·7
1991	86·7
1992	82·6

[1] Specialist dairy and mainly dairy farms: excluding minor holdings, which accounted for less than 5 per cent. of total agricultural employment (mainly from part-time working) when last surveyed in 1989.

Note: Part-tiome numbers have not been reduced to full-time equivalents.

Source: June Agricultural and Horticultural censuses 1983 to 1992.

Flooding

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the evaluation being made by his Department on the effectiveness of sea and river flood defences in the eastern counties after the floods of 20 February; and what changes he proposes to make to his policy, investment programme and evacuation procedures.

Mr. Curry: Our initial assessment is that both the flood warning arrangements and the coastal defences themselves performed well in the face of the events of 20/21 February, reflecting the substantial investment in coastal defences made by successive Governments and local agencies, as well as the professionalism of the emergency services and other organisations involved. Damage to coastal defences is estimated at a little under £2 million and this will be made good as a matter of urgency. A detailed appraisal is under way to ensure that any necessary improvements are made to procedures and that resources continue to be concentrated on areas of greatest need.

Group Marketing Grant

Mr. Bates: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the group marketing grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In the light of experience with the group marketing grant since its introduction last April, I have decided that we should carry out a limited review to simplify the rules of the scheme in order to make its operation more flexible. Industry organisations are being consulted on a series of proposals. It is intended that the changes should come into effect from 1 April. I have placed copies of the consultation document in the Libraries of the House.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Bates: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the surveillance for residues of clenbuterol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Surveillance for residues of clenbuterol in meat is carried out under two complementary programmes. The first is the national surveillance scheme for residues in meat under which randomly selected samples are collected from slaughterhouses and from farms. The second, co-ordinated by the working party on veterinary residues in animal products, is directed at retail and wholesale premises. It covers both imported and domestic supplies of meat.

In 1992, 1,074 samples were taken in Great Britain and analysed for clenbuterol under both programmes. Two samples taken were found to contain clenbuterol, at concentrations of 0·4 µg/kg and 3·3 µg/kg respectively. Neither of these residues would have been likely to have posed any threat to human health, but one of them was above the United Kingdom's statutory maximum residue limit of 0·5µg/kg. It has not been possible to establish whether the samples found to contain clenbuterol originated in Great Britain or elsewhere, but under the NSS, which is confined to domestically produced animals and meat, no positives have been identified from samples taken in Great Britain since testing for clenbuterol began in August 1989.

Nevertheless, because of the evidence of abuse of clenbuterol outside Great Britain, we have concluded it would be prudent to step up our surveillance programme in 1993. Under the NSS some 1,335 samples will therefore be collected from randomly selected farms and slaughterhouses in Great Britain and tested for the presence of clenbuterol. This is 635 more than in 1992. Surveillance at retail outlets under the WPVR programme is similarly being extended in 1993. A total of 384 samples of ox and calf livers will be collected and tested for the presence of clenbuterol. This is 181 more than in 1992, but includes for the first time a check on calf liver.

A new sampling programme for imported meat will also commence in 1993. A total of 550 samples of imported bovine tissues are planned to be collected under this programme in the first year, compared with 175 in 1992, and these will also be analysed for residues of clenbuterol.

Comfrey

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the safety assessment of comfrey has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Following the report of the working group on dietary supplements and health foods, Ministers asked the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment to review the safety of certain herbal substances, including comfrey, which had their medicinal licences withdrawn but which were still freely available as foods.

Comfrey contains toxic substances known as pyrrolizidine alkaloids. PAs belong to a large family of alkaloids, some of which are known to cause liver damage and induce tumors in laboratory animals. The COT considered that, although the toxicity data available on the particular PAs found in comfrey were limited, there was evidence that they could cause liver damage in animals and man. The committee therefore recommended that action should be taken to reduce the intake of comfrey and its potentially toxic constituents.

Comfrey and its products are on sale in four main forms. Tablets and capsules (made from roots or leaves) are the most concentrated form, and the Food Advisory Committee, to which the COT's findings were submitted for advice, recommended that the Government should seek the health food trade's agreement to early voluntary withdrawal of these products, backing it up with legislation. Roots are sold for use in poultices but may be used in making infusions; the FAC recommended labelling to warn against ingestion. Leaves are mainly intended for use in infusions, but many also be consumed directly, leading the FAC to recommend labelling to warn against the latter use. Finally, comfrey is also available in the form of herbal teas. Like the infusions of comfrey leaf, teas when brewed contain relatively low levels of PAs and the FAC did not consider any warning labelling to be necessary.

Comfrey preparations used externally are not a cause of concern, and were not considered by the Committees.

In considering these recommendations, the Government have taken account of the many representations that they have received in recent months from the general public, doctors and practitioners of alternative medicine urging that nothing should be done to restrict the availability of dietary supplements and health foods. We recognise the strong public support expressed for herbal products and supplements generally and acknowledge the force of the view that consumers should be allowed to choose these products if they so wish.

The Government have therefore considered very carefully whether the action recommended is proportionate to the potential problem. Nevertheless, the recommendations of the independent expert committees are clear and unambiguous, and we have concluded that they should in general be accepted.

Accordingly I have today met the health food trade and requested the immediate withdrawal from sale of comfrey tablets and capsules. The trade has confirmed that most firms have already decided not to maintain sales of these products, and endorsed the action proposed. Given voluntary agreement on withdrawal, we do not consider that regulations will be necessary. My officials are, however, informing the European Commission of the findings and the action taken, so that the Scientific Committee for Food can examine the matter from an EC standpoint.

In addition, I have asked the trade to consider effective labelling of comfrey root and leaves on the lines recommended, where these products are sold.

The FAC also recommended that an information note should be distributed via health food shops and consumer organisations to give wide publicity to its advice. I am asking for their co-operation in distributing a note which we have prepared. It will also be made available to other organisations, for example those that may include growers of comfrey.

I am grateful for the responsible, positive and practical reaction of the industry on this issue. I am writing simultaneously to the principal consumer organisations to notify them of the findings of the expert committees and the action being taken.

I am putting in the Library of the House copies of the Department's analysis of comfrey products, the advice of the COT and the FAC and the draft information note.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes his Department intends to make in the testing of cattle for bovine tuberculosis in Great Britain.

Mr. Gummer: I have decided to extend the interval between tuberculosis tests for cattle herds. The majority of herds in Great Britain are tested once every three years. Most will now be tested once every four years.

The move follows outstandingly successful efforts by Agriculture Departments over many years to reduce confirmed cases of bovin tuberculosis in Great Britain to the present levels of below 0·1 per cent. of herds. In no way does it mean a lowering of our guard against the disease.

Cattle herds in the counties of the south-west of England where bovine tuberculosis is present at slightly higher levels will continue to be tested more frequently. This means that all herds in Cornwall, Gloucestershire and Avon will be tested at least once every two years, and some once a year. Most herds in Devon will be tested—as now—every three years. The situation in the south-west of England will be kept under close review.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of the tuberculosis eradication scheme; what estimates he has made of savings that can be achieved by the selective testing of cattle instead of the culling of badgers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Some £8 million per year is spent on testing and compensation for bovine tuberculosis. A comprehensive national testing programme for cattle already exists, including more frequent testing in high risk areas.

Poultry Flocks (Salmonella)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on developments in relation to compensation for poultry flocks slaughtered on account of salmonella.

Mr. Gummer: The PCA has today reported to the House on a complaint referred to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Holland with Boston (Sir. R. Body) about the scheme of compensation payments introduced in 1989 for poultry flocks slaughtered on account of salmonella. I am grateful to the Parliamentary Commissioner for this report, which I have studied carefully.

The PCA criticises the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for failing in 1989 to discharge the obligation to devise and implement a compensation scheme which complied with the requirements of the legislation. The Government accept that the original decision to discount the estimated value of the flock by 40 per cent. to reflect the taint of salmonella infection was shown, following an arbitration case the following year, to be incorrect, but I should emphasise, as the permanent secretary has done in his comments quoted in the report, that the legal advice available to Ministers was taken fully into account at every stage, and that the Government considered that they were acting properly at the time.

In late 1988 and 1989, the Government were faced with a sudden drop of 60 to 80 per cent. of the market for fresh eggs, leaving individual producers facing a very serious commercial crisis. The Government would have been open to severe criticism had they not moved quickly to restore the position. In fact, a whole series of measures were taken to combat salmonella in a very short time on the basis of the medical, veterinary and scientific advice to protect public health and restore consumer confidence. I must stress that these measures were welcomed by the Select Committee for Agriculture in its report of February 1989, and were again welcomed in a debate in the House on 21 February.

The Government are always under a duty to be careful with the use of taxpayers' money. There were those in the House and outside who argued that no compensation was appropriate in the case of egg producers. While this view was rejected by the Government, it was thought justifiable for compensation to be discounted to reflect the fact that the flocks concerned were tainted with salmonella and therefore had a reduced market value.

This principle, which was of course designed to protect public funds, was never rejected, although it was found that the Ministry should not have applied a standard reduction to take it into account, but rather should have calculated a specific figure for each case on the basis of the facts. When, following the arbitrator's finding in September 1990 and the further legal advice obtained, it became clear that the basis of compensation applied hitherto needed to be changed, this was promptly done.

The PCA criticises the Ministry's unwillingness to reveal the basis on which compensation was proposed. This exacerbated the pressure under which flock owners were put. The Government accepts this finding.

The PCA also questions the decision in November 1990 to regard as closed the cases of those flock owners who had accepted compensation on the basis of the 40 per cent. abatement without exercising their right to arbitration. In deciding not to adjust retrospectively the compensation payments settled before the change of policy took effect, the Government were acting on a clear legal principle. We were not unmindful of the interest of individual producers or the merits of particular cases, but we had to balance these against the need to be careful with the use of public funds.

While the position remains that the Government are under no legal liability, we have reflected on the PCA's findings and now accept his view that it would be all right in the circumstances to adjust the compensation paid to all the producers affected to reflect the arrangements subsequently put in place. We shall accordingly be making ex gratia payments on a basis which has been agreed with the PCA to all those owners who were compensated on the basis of the 40 per cent. discount between March 1989 and September 1990. The total cost will be some £600,000.

Horses (Protection)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department gives on the welfare and protection of horses on farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The state veterinary service monitors standards of welfare for all farm animals and is available to provide free advice to farmers on any aspect of farm animal welfare.

Milk Producers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what steps he is taking to improve the position of milk producers.

Mr. Curry: Dairy farming is one of the most profitable sectors of British agriculture and the Government will continue to encourage its efficiency and profitability.

Animals (Transport)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are in place to ensure that the EC directive on the transport of live animals is complied with.

Mr. Soames: Directive 91/628/EEC on the protection of animals during transport is implemented in Great Britain by the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 which came into force on 1 January 1993. The order is enforced by local authority inspectors with support and advice as necessary from the state veterinary service—SVS—which also arranges for the inspection of all consignments of livestock transported to other member states. Local authority and SVS inspectors have wide powers to stop and detain consignments of animals and to make spot checks.

Enforcement in other member states is a matter for the authorities concerned. The directive provides for the European Commission to carry out inspections to ensure uniform application of the rules.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what supervisory powers over the Bank of England will be exercised by the European central bank under stage 3 of EMU if the British Government have announced their intention not to participate; and to what extent the provisions of the treaty requiring the Bank of England to be independent of government apply in these circumstances.

Mr. Nelson: According to the protocol to the Maastricht treaty on certain provisions relating to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the independence provisions of article 107 of the treaty would not apply if the United Kingdom had notified the Council that it did not intend to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union. Accordingly, there would be no obligation to make the Bank of England independent.

The bank would, however, be subject to limited obligations under the European systems of central banks protocol, notably as regards the collection of statistical information (article 5), the obligation not to provide debt finance to public entities (article 21), any outstanding obligations arising from the bank's participation in the operating procedures for the EMS (article 44 together with article 6.1 of the European Monetary Institute protocol) and its obligation to provide a minimal percentage, if required to do so by the general council of the European central bank, towards the operating costs of the ECB (article 48).

Retail Sales

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage effect on the January retail sales figures of the number of Saturdays in January 1992 compared with January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The retail sales index is an indicator of the average sales per week within standard four or five-week trading periods as opposed to calendar months. The trading periods for January 1992 and January 1993 both contained four Saturdays. The level of sales in January 1993 was not influenced by an increased number of Saturdays.

External Financing Limits

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which commercial organisations in which Government have a controlling or total ownership, do not have external financing limits.

Mr. Portillo: A list of the organisations subject to formal external finance limits appears in table 6 of the "Cash Limits 1991-92 Provisional Outturn" White Paper (Cm 2010). A number of others do not have formal external finance limits, but their external finance is controlled within the framework of the new public expenditure control total. These organisations are included in table 4.16 of the statistical supplement to the autumn statement (Cm 2219).

The following commercial bodies, in which Government have a controlling or total ownership, are not treated in either of the ways described above:

Central government trading bodies:
- Driving Standards Agency
- Export Credits Guarantee Department
- Forestry Enterprise
- Horserace Totalisator Board
- Housing Corporation
- Housing for Wales
- Industrial Training Boards
- Remploy Ltd

Other
- Bank of England
- British Broadcasting Corporation
- British Nuclear Fuels PLC
- Channel Four Television Corporation
- International Military Services
- Commission for New Towns and
- New Town Development Corporations in Scotland

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made on the effect on the expenditure of people on low incomes of extending VAT to cover all foods.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend is aware of the effect that the extension of VAT to food would have on the expenditure of people on low incomes. However, the hon. Member will appreciate that it would be inappropriate for me to comment further in the period leading up the Budget.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect value added tax harmonisation will have on public transport fares; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Under the VAT rates agreement reached by EC Finance Ministers, to which my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary referred in his reply to the hon. Member on 15 December 1992 at column 138, the United Kingdom retains the right to apply a zero rate to passenger transport. Any proposed change to that right would require the unanimous agreement of all member states.

Interest Rate Cuts

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the four main clearing banks to discuss the question of interest rates cuts being passed onto their customers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor last met representatives of the four main clearing banks from 15 to 17 December and discussed with them the question of passing on cuts in the base rate to their business customers. He announced the outcome of those discussions and the results of a related study by the Bank of England in a reply to a question from the hon. Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 26 January 1993 at columns 623-25.

Bank Charges

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the percentage bank charges have risen by since April 1992.

Mr. Nelson: The levels of bank charges are not collected centrally and are a matter for the commercial judgment of the banks. The January 1993 Bank of England report on bank lending to smaller businesses found that between June 1991 and December 1992 the average increase in income from fees and charges was just over 5 per cent. A copy of the report can be found in the Library.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage change in manufacturing output for each year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson: Indices of manufacturing output may be found on the CSO Databank which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. Information is currently available for periods up to December 1992.

Privatisation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to arrange the sales of British Coal, Caledonian MacBrayne, Channel Four Television Company, Commonwealth Development Corporation, Covent Garden Market Authority, English Industrial Estates Corporation and Welsh Fourth Channel Authority.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1993, c. 558]: There are no plans to sell Channel Four Television Corporation or the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority, which remain public corporations.

Debt Relief

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each country receiving debt relief on current Trinidad terms, their projected debt service payments for each of the next three years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 February 1993]: The information requested is not available. The latest generally accepted source of published information on developing country debt (World bank debt tables 1992-93) is based on data collected up to the end of 1991. Since all but two of the 14 Trinidad terms restructurings so far agreed were concluded after the end of 1991, the projected repayments figures do not reflect the reduction in debt service provided by these agreements.

Trinidad terms allow for the equivalent of the cancellation of up to half the eligible debts consolidated under the agreements, and a commitment by creditors to consider the case for a reduction in the whole stock of eligible debt after a period of two to three years' proven financial and economic responsibility, under arrangements monitored by the IMF. In total, about US$ 1·5 billion will be forgiven under the terms of the existing agreements, and more will follow.

Tax Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average and marginal tax rate including income tax and statutory social insurance payments of a single person, a married couple and a family consisting of a married couple plus two children earning in total (a) half, (b) three-quarters, (c) average earnings, (d) 1·5 times, (e) twice, (f) three times, (g) five times and (h) 10 times average earnings, in each EC member state.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Information for 1992-93 relating to the United Kingdom is given in the table:

Income tax and national insurance contributions at multiples of average earnings
Single person

[1] Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £346·00 per week in 1992-93 using the Government Actuary's Department assumption of 5¼ per cent. growth in whole economy underlying earnings over 1991-92 as published in the 1992 Autumn Statement.

[2] National Insurance Contributions are at the standard Class 1 rate for employees not contracted-out of the state additional (eanings related) pension scheme. The tax figures assume that no allowances or reliefs are available other than the standard allowances.

Similar information on the other EC member states is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Some of the information requested is, however, obtainable from "The Tax/Benefit Position of Production Workers 1988-1991" published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. A copy is available in the Library.

National Insurance

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated revenue yield in 1993-94, and what would be the full year effect, of abolishing the employee's national insurance upper earnings limit from October 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

If the upper earnings limit for employees' contributions were abolished from October 1993, we estimate that the additional revenue yield for the six months indicated in 1993-94 would be £1·2 billion and the full year effect would be £1·5 billion. About three million employees would have to pay extra national insurance contributions as a result.

HEALTH

Health Care

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of funding per capita for health care in the last 10 years in Northumberland and Newcastle health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The allocation of funds to the district health authorities—DHAs—is a matter for the Northern regional health authority and detailed information is not collected centrally.

However, information which relates the expenditure of the DHAs to their resident populations is shown in the table.

The figures, which pre-date the national health service reforms, show the DHAs as providers of health care, and reflect patterns of local service provision and the effects of patient flows across health authority boundaries.

(a) Annual accounts of the Northumberland and the Newcastle district health authorities.

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population—1987-90 (Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:

1. The figures for the DHAs are based upon their total revenue expenditure on the services which they managed or accounted for in the relevant financial years.

2. Capital expenditure incurred by the DHAs and all expenditure incurred by the Northern RHA on behalf of the Northern region as a whole is excluded.

3. The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in particular districts who receive treatment in others. For consistency the population estimates employed are those based on the 1981 census.

Activity Rates

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase in activity rates, overall and by specialty, in each region in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what is the Department of Health estimate for the increase in activity by specialty in each region in 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about activity rates for the major specialties in each regional health authority is given in the table. Activity forecasts by district and specialty are not collected centrally.

British Mercenaries

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what treatment within the NHS is available to mercenary soldiers returning to the United Kingdom injured in service abroad; and what charges can be made in treatment by a health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Eligibility to free national health service treatment is based on United Kingdom residence rather than nationality. If the individual is no longer a United Kingdom resident, he will be liable to pay for NHS hospital treatment unless covered by one of a number of exceptions. These are listed in the "Patient's Guide", which will be placed in the Library.

Management Consultancy

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by the NHS management executive on management consultancy costs in relation to patient-focused hospital projects; and for what purpose.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service management executive has not directly commissioned management consultants for patient-focused projects. It has, however, supported a number of health care organisations which, individually, have hired their own consultants.

Exercise Therapy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will consider giving funding to local authorities who run exercise therapy sessions so that general practitioners can prescribe this treatment to their national health service patients suffering from diabetes, overweight, high-blood pressure and depression; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will give funding to Wealden district council to enable it to expand its exercise therapy prescribed by Dr. David Hanraty for patients; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Oasis project in Hailsham received funding of £3,400 in 1982 as a pilot project from the joint Department of Health/Health Education Authority "Look After Your Heart" programme. The project was included as an example of a healthy alliance in the "Health of the Nation Coronary Heart Disease Key Area Handbook". The project should become self-financing over time. Similar projects have been or are being set up in other parts of the country, funded locally. There is no intention to fund local authorities generally for this kind of project—as with all healthy alliances all participants should benefit, including local authorities, who should themselves benefit from use of local leisure facilities by more members of the community which they serve.

Pulmonary Embolism

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has undertaken into the use of heparin and low molecular weight heparin to reduce the number of deaths from pulmonary embolism following surgical operations; and if she will conduct a comparative study into its amount of use in England and Wales and that of other countries.

Dr. Mawhinney: At present, neither the Department of Health nor the Medical Research Council is conducting any such research. The need for initiating studies in this area, including those that make international comparisons, is considered alongside other priorities for research funding.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what legislation local authorities are empowered to pay supplementary grants for people with learning disabilities living in unregistered homes.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities can use the provisions of paragraph 2(1)(a) of schedule 8 to the National Health Service Act 1977 to provide financial support for people in unregistered residential accommodation who are in receipt of social security benefits. This power will be subsumed into section 26 of the National Assistance Act 1948 from 1 April 1993.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to introduce legislation requiring all group homes for people with learning disabilities to be registered with the local authority;

(2) what research the Government are funding or considering funding into the future status of unregistered homes for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: None. The Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 comes into force on 1 April. It extends the requirement for registration of independent residential care homes to homes for fewer than four residents. Like the Registered Homes Act 1984, the amendment Act applies only where personal care as well as accommodation and board are provided.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 for homes which are currently unregistered which have four or more residents.

Mr. Yeo: Independent homes which provide personal care as well as board and accommodation for four or more people are required to register under the Registered Homes Act 1984. If some, but fewer than four, residents receive such services, registration as a small home will be required when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act comes into force in April.

Homeless Mentally Ill

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made tackling the lack of permanent move-on accommodation under the homeless mentally ill initiative;

(2) if she will fund the revenue care costs for the move-on housing supplied to the homeless mentally ill initiative by the Housing Corporation;

(3) who is to fund the revenue care costs for the move-on housing supplied to the homeless mentally ill initiative by the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Yeo: The Housing Corporation has agreed to secure 750 move-on places for people resettled by the homeless mentally ill initiative, a £20 million scheme to offer accommodation and psychiatric support to homeless mentally ill people. In general, it is for local social services departments to meet the costs of providing social care for people once they are resettled into the community. However, the Department is prepared to consider meeting some costs on an interim basis if longer-term guarantees of funding can be secured. Officials are having constructive discussions with the relevant local authorities about this.

Benzodiazepine

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that benzodiazepine prescribing does not increase following the ending of the Roche case;

(2) what assessment she has made of the effect of measures to reduce benzodiazepine addiction since 1988; and what further measures she proposes;

(3) how many prescriptions were issued for benzodiazepines in each year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance on the prescribing of benzodiazepines was given to doctors by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines in "Current Problems number 21", in January 1988. This advice is still appropriate and doctors also have access to detailed guidance in the "British National Formulary".

No assessment has been made of the effect of these measures, but there has been a steady reduction in the number of benzodiazepine prescriptions since 1989. The information requested is shown in the table.

Thousands

Year	Number of prescriptions
1989	17,274
1990	16,507
1991	15,662

Notes:
1. From January 1991, the data are based on items. Previously they were based on prescription fees and some items may attract more than one fee.
2. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the total sum allocated for addiction problems and (b) the proportion of this allocated specifically to problems of benzodiazepine addiction (i) in 1988 and (ii) in 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £11·2 million was specifically allocated to health authorities in 1988-89 for the provision of services for drug misusers, including funds to help prevent the spread of HIV among drug misusers and from them to the wider population. The figure for 1992-93 is £20·8 million. In addition to these sums, health authorities can also fund drug misuse services from their general allocations. It is for health authorities to decide which services they purchase for people with drug problems, including those suffering from addiction to benzodiazepines.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has of the number of people addicted to benzodiazepines as a proportion of all addicts in (a) 1988 and (b) 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not currently available centrally.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ask the Committee on Safety of Medicines to change its advice to doctors as given in Bulletin 21 of January 1988 regarding the drugs valium, librium and mogadon, following the ending of the Roche case.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Current advice strongly emphasises the dangers of dependence with benzodiazepines and advises doctors to limit their use to short-term relief—two to four weeks only—of anxiety and insomnia that is severe, disabling or subjecting the individual to extreme distress. This advice is still appropriate.

London Ambulance Board

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the South West Thames regional health authority appointed Mr. James Harris as the chairman of the London ambulance board; what are the names of the other members and their dates of appointment; what are the working hours expected from the chiarman and board members respectively; and what is the amount and basis of their respective remunerations.

Mr. Sackville: Mr. James Harris was appointed chairman of the London ambulance service board by South West Thames regional health authority on 1 March 1990. Current non-executive members of the London ambulance service board appointed on 8 June 1992 are:

Mrs. Mary Spinks
Mrs. Janet Preston
Mr. Victor Paige
Mr. Roderick Braithwaite

The chairman is paid £5,000 per annum as a non-executive member of South West Thames regional health authority. In the previous 12-month period, he spent 88 full days undertaking duties on behalf of the regional health authority and the London ambulance service. Non-executive members of the London ambulance board are unpaid but are asked to spend an average of two to three days per month on London ambulance service business.

Head Injuries

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many rehabilitation centres for patients with head injuries there are in England; which regions they are in; how many patients they treat a year; what is the cost per patient; and how many beds there are in each centre;

(2) if she will list the private rehabilitation centres for patients with head injuries in England.

Mr. Yeo: The information required is not held centrally. The Department of Health is providing central funding of £1 million per year to 12 model brain injury rehabilitation services in the national health service in England and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 16 January 1992 at columns 625-26.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on official entertainment in her Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991-92, £168,151 was spent on hospitality. In 1992-93, hospitality expenditure up to the end of January was £197,529.

Spinal Injuries Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in England have spinal injuries units; which regions they are in; how many patients they treat a year; what the cost was per patient; and how many beds there are in each unit.

Mr. Sackville: There are eight spinal units located in the following regions: Northern; Yorkshire; Trent; North East Thames; Oxford; Wessex; West Midlands; and Mersey. The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested. Reported activity levels are available for 1991-92 as shown in the table. The total cost of the service in that year was £22·3 million.

Unit	Finished consultant episodes	Total bed days
Hexham general hospital	227	10,239
Pinderfields hospital, Wakefield	383	11,580
Lodge Moor, Sheffield	1,373	18,617
Royal national orthopaedic hospital, Stanmore	125	6,432
Stoke Mandeville hospital, Aylesbury	683	32,213
Odstock hospital, Salisbury	268	13,351
R. James and A. Hunt hospital, Oswestry	317	14,128
Southport hospital	N/a	N/a
TOTAL	3,376	106,560

Repeat Prescriptions

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to progress made by family practitioner committees in encouraging the development of repeat prescription control systems, as outlined in "Promoting Better Health: April 1990".

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioners are required by schedule 13 to the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations, 1992, to include in their annual reports information on their arrangements for the issue of repeat prescriptions to patients. Guidance to regional health authorities on their corporate contracts with family health service authorities for 1993-94 emphasised that repeat prescribing is a high priority area and encouraged them to set targets for achievement by March 1994. A copy of this guidance has been placed in the Library.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases in each year since 1989 the London ambulance service was asked to give evidence at coroners' courts.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Martin Gorham, chief executive of the London ambulance service, for details.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free prescriptions were dispensed in the year 1991-92; what was the figure in 1978-79; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1993, c. 162]: I have today laid before the House regulations providing for increases in charges in the national health service in England and Wales, which will take effect on 1 April 1993. The prescription charge will increase by £0·50p, from £3·75 to £4·25 for each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed.

The new prescription charge, which is still significantly less than the average total cost of a single prescription item to the NHS, will only cost the average charge payer an extra £3 a year. A charge of £4·25 per item will raise about £278 million a year for the NHS. In 1991-92 the cost of drugs for family health services was over £2·3 billion.

The existing wide-ranging exemption and remission provisions for people who cannot afford prescription charges are unchanged. The rates of prescription pre-payment certificates will rise in line with the increase in prescription charges. These certificates provide extremely good value for money for people who need frequent or extensive medication but are not entitled to free prescriptions. They offer real savings to anyone who requires 15 or more items a year on prescription, or more than five in a four-month period.

Some 5 per cent. of all items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors now go to people with prepayment certificates. Prescription charges are paid on a further 15 per cent. When the Government took office in 1979, this figure was 36 per cent. Indeed, 80 per cent. of prescribed items are now dispensed free—more than at any time since prescription charges were re-introduced in 1968.

Charges for elastic stockings and tights, fabric supports and wigs supplied through the hospital service will also be increased from 1 April 1993 by a similar percentage to the rise in the prescription charge.

The patient contribution to the cost of a course of dental treatment begun on or after 1 April 1993 will be increased from 75 to 80 per cent. The maximum charge for a single course of treatment begun on or after 1 April 1993 will also increase from £225 to £250.

I am pleased to announce a 2·75 per cent. average increase in the overall value of optical vouchers from 1 April 1993. The majority of voucher holders will find themselves better off as a result.

Concurrently with the regulations for England and Wales, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will lay regulations to increase charges and spectacle voucher values in Scotland by the same amounts. Similar arrangements will apply in Northern Ireland.

Details of all the revised charges and increased optical voucher values have been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

ERDF Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he has had with Northern Ireland local authorities and other eligible infrastructure-providing bodies concerning the levels of (a) base and (b) supplementary credit approvals with a view to the provision of matching Government funding to maximise successful applications for European regional development fund assistance.

Mr. Atkins: In Northern Ireland the financing of infrastructure-providing bodies, including local authorities, is not dependent upon the issue of credit approvals and consequently there have been no consultations about the level of such approvals.

Police Interview Notes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures are involved in the recording, safe-keeping, storage and retrieval of original police interview notes where criminal charges have been brought.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 25 February 1993]: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC. However, I understand that new procedures have recently been introduced relating to the recording of notes of interviews with persons detained under legislation dealing with terrorism. Loose leaf interview sheets have been replaced with booklets which are electronically dated and time stamped upon issue and upon completion of each interview. Additional measures have been introduced to safeguard the long-term storage and security of these interview notes.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the Royal Ulster Constabulary to identify the whereabouts of the original police interview notes in the case of prisoner No. 708, H Block 5, A wing, HMP Maze, Belfast.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 25 February 1993]: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC. However, I understand that he has already written to the hon. Gentleman about this.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts for each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The contracts awarded by the DTI to Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, Touche Ross management consultants, Price Waterhouse management consultants, Ernst and Young management consultants and KPMG management consultants in the periods 1 March 1992 to 17 February 1993 and 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992, with total cost of the contracts for each contractor are listed. No contracts have been awarded to Leopold Joseph management consultants or Chrichton Roberts Ltd.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the total expenditure of and (b) the number of successful bids for funding to the intervention fund for shipbuilding in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of merchant vessels of 100 gross tonnes and over on which funding from the shipbuilding intervention fund was offered and the amount of assistance paid in financial years from 1979-80 to 1992-93 are set out in the table.

Number of merchant vessels on which SIF was offered and the amount paid

Financial Year	Number of vessels on which SIF offered	Amount of SIF assistance paid £ million
1979-80	20	31·9
1980-81	27	41·9
1981-82	62	49·1
1982-83	19	47·9
1983-84	14	36·2
1984-85	9	20·1
1985-86	29	25·9
1986-87	18	17·4
1987-88	13	13·6
1988-89	31	38·7
1989-90	28	37·5
1990-91	15	28·7
1991-92	10	31·1

Note: Because of the timing of the SIF grant payments, there is no direct link between the number of vessels ordered and the total grant in any one year.

European Community Funding

Mr. Leighton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what projects in Britain are or will be assisted by the extra money allocated to the European investment bank at the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European investment bank has so far approved loans under the new, temporary facility agreed at Edinburgh to Lothian regional council for water supply, sewerage and road infrastructure schemes and to North West Water Services Ltd. for improvement of waste water infrastructure.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 17 February to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), Official Report, column 269, what response he has had to his application for objective 1 status for Northern Ireland, Merseyside, the Highlands and Islands, rural Wales, Devon and Cornwall and South Yorkshire; what counter-proposals he has; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Northern Ireland's objective 1 status was confirmed at the European Council at Edinburgh.

I am pleased to report that the Commission announced on 24 February that it had decided to propose the highlands and islands and Merseyside for objective 1.

The Government will continue to press the case for the other areas they believe should become objective 1: Devon and Cornwall, rural Wales and South Yorkshire.

The final decision on which regions are eligible for objective 1 rests with the Council of Ministers in the context of the review of the structural funds regulations. I do not expect that decision to come for several months.

Insurance Cover

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the extent of the practice of denying insurance cover to owners of property because they wish to rent to people in receipt of DSS benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have received a number of letters about the difficulty of obtaining insurance cover for properties where tenants are in receipt of social security benefits. Insurance cover for many properties in multi-occupation has become more difficult to obtain following reviews by insurance companies of types of business that had generated substantial losses. I am assured that companies are not assessing the risks they are prepared to underwrite solely on the status of the tenants. Following discussions with my officials and the Department of the Environment, the Association of British Insurers has now produced some guidance for owners of tenanted property on how to minimise the risks they present to insurers.

Trade Barriers

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all EC or United Kingdom trade barriers, including industry to industry quotas and anti-dumping duties, which affect exports from the Czech Republic or Slovakia to the United Kingdom and EC.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom does not maintain any national quantitative restrictions against the Czech and Slovak Republics. The Government are not aware of any inter-industry agreements which restrict trade with the United Kingdom or the EC.

In December 1991 the EC and Czechoslovakia signed an association agreement which establishes co-operation in a range of fields and, in particular, provides for the creation of a GATT-compatible free trade area within a maximum of 10 years—based on the principle of asymmetry in the dismantlement of trade barriers with the EC taking the lead. The trade provisions entered into force on 1 March 1992 under an interim agreement which abolished tariffs and quantitative restrictions on 50 per cent. of Czechoslovakian industrial exports to the EC and provided for the liberalisation of almost all tariffs and quantitative restrictions within the next four years. The interim agreement has since been extended until separate, new association agreements can be negotiated with the Czech Republic and Slovakia following the division of the federal republic.

The European Community maintains Community-wide restrictions on a number of textile and agricultural products from the Czech and Slovak republics and I will write to my hon. Friend with details of these.

The following anti-dumping measures are currently in place:

1. Artificial Corundum
   Price Undertaking
2. Hexamine
   Price Undertaking
3. Urea
   Volume Undertaking
4. Potassium Permanganate
   Variable duty linked to a mimium price of 2.20 ECU/kg
5. Seamless Steel Tubes
   30·4 per cent. provisional anti-dumping duty

On 25 February the EC Industry Council agreed in principle that tariff quotas should be negotiated with east European countries on their exports up until 1995 of sensitive steel products to the Community. It is now for the Commission to make suitable proposals to member states; the Government are concerned that these should be as liberal and as short-term as posssible.

Rural Mail Deliveries

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider the maintenance of second deliveries of mail in rural areas as part of his review of the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: The Government remain fully committed to a nationwide letter service with delivery to every address in the United Kingdom, within a uniform structure of prices, but the detailed organisation of deliveries is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Girobank

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he is taking of the criticisms made by the National Audit Office over the sale of Girobank in his consideration of the future of Parcelforce and the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: I have noted the comments made by the National Audit Office, and in particular its conclusion that a successful sale of Girobank was eventually achieved. I look forward to reading the report from the Public Accounts Committee in due course.

Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 November 1992, Official Report, column 587, if he will list the specific types of waste to which his figures refer, including the commodity codes given to those substances.

Mr. Eggar: The figures which I gave previously refer to wastes on the EC red and amber lists, which contain elements that may be hazardous. Red and amber list wastes are identified in EEC council regulation No. 259/93 of 1 February, published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 6 February. Statistics on the exports of these wastes are publically available. They can be obtained from the appointed marketing agents for HM Customs and Excise, by reference to the commodity codes listed in Business Monitor MA21 "Guide to the Classification of Overseas Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Owners Abroad

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what pre-bid guidance was given by the Director General of Fair Trading to Airtours plc before its bid for Owners Abroad plc was launched; what importance he attaches to such guidance in his decision on referral to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Any pre-bid guidance is given on a confidential basis. We do not therefore comment on whether guidance is given in a particular case. Such guidance is based on the information available at the time, which does not normally include comments by third parties. Where guidance is given, it is the Secretary of State who decides what it should be following advice from the Director General of Fair Trading. Such guidance is not binding on the Secretary of State in his merger reference decision.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the Minister for Corporate Affairs withdrew from considering the Airtours bid for Owners Abroad; what reasons were given for this withdrawal; and what part the Minister has played in his Department's handling of the bid since December.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 March 1993]: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State decided on 15 February to stand aside from consideration of whether the Airtours bid for Owners Abroad should be referred to the MMC. It had come to his attention from correspondence that the chairman of Airtours lived in his constituency. Although he was advised that it would have been legitimate for him to continue to take part in the competition decision, he decided not to do so to avoid any possibility of misunderstanding. Prior to receipt of this correspondence he was responsible, with me, for the Department's interest in this as in other merger cases.

Export Licences

Mrs. Wait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy towards export licences for South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Export licence applications for South Africa, as for any other destination, are examined on their merits on a case-by-case basis. Licensable goods are listed in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, as amended. This takes account of the United Kingdom's commitments under the United Nations (Sanctions) Order SCR 392 1976, which covers the arms embargo.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the maximum and minimum times taken to grant export licences for (a) South Africa, (b) Poland and (c) Israel.

Mr. Needham: There are no minimum or maximum timescales.

Applications for South Africa and Israel which do not require advice from other Government Departments, and provided that the exporter has provided complete documentation, are normally issued within four to five working days from receipt. Applications which need further information from the exporter or are referred to other Government Departments for advice normally take four to six weeks to process.

Similarly, applications for Poland which do not need to be referred to our partners in COCOM are normally issued within five working days once the documentation is complete. Applications which are referred to COCOM take at least 75 working days.

Gas and Oil Investment

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the total financial investment to date in offshore exploration and extraction and the piping of supplies to the mainland for (a) gas and (b) oil.

Mr. Eggar: Total investment in the United Kingdom continental shelf up to the end of 1992 on exploration and appraisal, field developments, pipelines, and shore terminals for oil and gas amounted to some £122 billion in 1992 prices. It is not possible to allocate this expenditure between offshore and onshore activity, or between oil and gas.

Gas Consumption

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the maximum consumption of gas, as an increase in percentage terms over present consumption, that existing supply connections could sustain.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Gas plc.

Aviation Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing imports and exports of aircraft, aerospace and aviation-related equipment each year since 1987 in cash terms, distinguishing between the EC, the USA, Japan and other countries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. Total imports and exports for the aerospace industry since 1987 to the latest available full year are as follows:

Military and Civil Aerospace Trade

£ billion

Year	Exports	Imports	Trade balance
1987	5·0	2·7	2·3
1988	5·4	3·7	1·6
1989	8·0	5·5	2·4
1990	8·0	5·9	2·0
1991	7·9	5·4	2·5
1992	7·7	5·2	2·5

Source: Overseas trade statistics for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the value added per head, and contribution to gross domestic product of the aircraft, aerospace and aviation equipment industries in each of the years since 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Figures since 1987 to the latest available year for standard industrial classification 364—aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing—are as follows:

	Gross value added at factor cost		Contribution to manufacturing GDP
		Total per head
	£ million	£	Per cent.
1987	3,472·4	19,486	3·87
1988	3,866·8	22,666	3·87
1989	4,895·8	29,015	4·52
1990	5,648·0	32,459	5·09

Assisted Areas

Mr. Madel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further consideration he has given, following the debate on 21 January, to granting assisted area status for the Dunstable area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 1 March 1993]: We are continuing our consideration of the many bids which have been made for assisted area status.

Competition

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance is given to Ministers in his Department about possible conflicts of interest when they are dealing with competition matters.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Ministers with competition responsibilities receive general procedural guidance as a matter of course on handling competition decisions. This includes guidance on possible conflicts of interest. Such guidance is supplemented as necessary.

Renewable Energy Advisory Group

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the membership of his Department's renewable energy advisory group; what was the attendance of each REAG member; what is the present place of employment of each REAG member; and what are the criteria used in appointing experts to serve on the REAG.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The membership of the renewable energy advisory group is listed in the table:

Member	Place of employment
Dr. Mary Archer Attended 6 meetings	National Energy Foundation
Mr. John Bellak Attended 8 meetings	Severn Trent plc
Professor Sir Hermann Bondi Attended 7 meetings	Churchill College, Cambridge
Mr. Peter Goldsworthy Attended 7 meetings	NORWEB plc
Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory Attended 5 meetings (member until April 1992)	Member of Parliament
Dr. Martin Holdgate Attended 4 meetings (chairman from June 1992)	International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources
Mr. Gerald Leach Attended 5 meetings	Stockholm Environment Institute
Dr. David Lindley Attended 8 meetings	National Wind Power Ltd.
Mr. Colin Moynihan Chaired 5 meetings (chairman and member until April 1992)	Consultant
Mr. Peter Oppenheimer Attended 6 meetings	Christ Church College, Oxford
Mr. Jeremy Sainsbury Attended 9 meetings	Fred Olsen Ltd.
Professor Arnold Wolfendale Attended 5 meetings	Durham University

Members of the group combined expertise from the renewable energy industry, business, management and academia.

Defence Diversification

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action applicable to Hampshire the Government are taking to attract European Community funds for the purpose of defence diversification;

(2) what discussions the Government have held with the European Commission about the diversification of defence industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 1 March 1993]: At the initiative of the European Parliament 130 million ecu, or about £106 million, comprising 85 million ecu, or £69·3 million, from the European regional development fund and 45 million ecu, or £36·7 million, from the European social fund was entered into the European Community budget for 1993 for a programme to be called CONVER to assist regions affected by the decline in the armaments industry and the closure of military bases. The Government will give careful consideration to the Commission's proposals for implementing this programme, which are expected to be issued shortly. The structural funds regulations require assistance from the ERDF to be concentrated in regions already designated for objectives 1, 2 and 5(b). Since many areas in the United Kingdom which have a high concentration of defence-related firms and military bases, including Hampshire, are not located within such regions, their prospects of benefiting from CONVER seem likely to be limited to assistance from the European social fund, which can be spent anywhere in the Community.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of imports and exports for each member country of the OECD during 1992.

Mr. Needham: Data are not available in the form requested. Figures relating to 1991 are published in "Monthly Statistics of Foreign Trade, Series A, February 1993, OECD", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library, Information on United Kingdom trade for 1992 is published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom, Business Monitor MM20, December 1992", which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Japan

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of imports and what was the value of exports in Britain's trade with Japan in each year since 1987.

Mr. Needham: Information on the topic is regularly published in "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Visible Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the percentage change in the level of United Kingdom visible exports in value terms to EC and Eastern European countries since 1989.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the table.

Value of United Kingdom visible exports (change on previous year) (per cent.)

	EC	Eastern Europe and former USSR
1989	15·8	14·6
1990	15·8	0·5
1991	7·9	−15·3
1992	1.9	35·8

Source: Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the amount of aid given to the printing industry from central funds by Governments of EC countries which apply a positive rate of VAT to printed materials.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have made no such assessment.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Eggar: My Department spent £537,336 on entertainment in the 1991-92 financial year and has spent £427,935 to date in the 1992-93 financial year. The figure for 1991-92 includes expenditure by the former Department of Energy.

Renewable Energy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make a statement on the present state of discussions with the European Commission on support for renewable energy beyond 1998;

(2) what plans he has to announce a third non-fossil fuel obligation renewables order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions with the European Commission are continuing. Decisions on any further renewables orders will be taken in the light of the coal review and the REAG report.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek an urgent meeting with the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc to discuss recent radioactive leaks following operational accidents at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc from time to time to discuss a range of issues involving the company. Occurrences involving releases of radioactivity into the environment are primarily matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, together with the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, are carrying out investigations into the causes of the recent releases.

Correspondence

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will reply to the two letters from Mr. T. E. Blyth, managing director of John Herth and Co. Ltd., sent to him on 13 November 1992 and 6 January 1993, and to the two letters from the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West on the same matter dated 20 November 1992 and 13 January 1993.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 February 1993]: I regret that it has taken so long to reply to these letters. I have now done so.

Furniture Safety

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received (a) on behalf of retailers and (b) on behalf of waste disposal operators about the effect of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) (Amendments) Regulations 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 23 February 1993]: My Department has received 39 letters on behalf of retailers of upholstered furniture about the fire resistance requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations, as amended, applicable to second-hand furniture from 1 March this year. No representations on behalf of waste disposal operators have been received.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 March.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Catering

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how much was spent on catering at 10 Downing street and Chequers in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

The Prime Minister: The information is not available in the form requested. The cost of official hospitality met by my office was £40,976 in 1991-92 and is £25,835 in 1992-93 to date.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the effect on the estimates for (a) the Department for Education and (b) the Welsh Office as a result of functional changes in higher and further education.

The Prime Minister: The supply estimates for 1993-94, due to be published on 9 March, for the Department for Education's higher and further education vote, class X, vote 2, will show provision totalling £2,806,458,000 for grant-in-aid to the Higher Education Funding Council (England) which, from 1 April 1993, will be responsible for the distribution of grants to all publicly funded higher education institutions in England. This will replace provision formerly shown separately in the estimates for expenditure on universities in Great Britain distributed by the Universities Funding Council; for the former polytechnics and colleges of higher education in England distributed by Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; for the Open university; for the Royal College of Art; and for Cranfield institute of technology. The 1993-94 estimates, class X, votes 2 and 3, will show provision totalling £2,705,411,000 for grant-in-aid to the Further Education Funding Council in England which from 1 April will be responsible for distributing grant to further education establishments and sixth form colleges in England currently under local authority control. Similarly, the relevant supply estimate for the Welsh Office, class XV, vote 5, will show grant-in-aid provision for further and higher education institutions in Wales to be distributed by the Further Education Council in Wales—£143,846,000—and the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales—£178,975,000—including in the latter case provision for universities in Wales which in 1992-93 are supported by the Universities Funding Council. The supply estimates for 1993-94 are subject to parliamentary approval in due course.

DEFENCE

Bands

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 777, what is the current establishment and annual running costs of (a) the Household Division piping school, (b) the Guards Depot piping school, (c) the piping and drumming wing of the Scottish Division and (d) the Army school of piping; what are the particular tasks of each unit; who is responsible for training Gurkha pipers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current establishment of the schools is as follows:

	Staff
Household Division Piping School (also known as the Guards Depot Piping School):	1 Pipe Major 3 Pipe Instructors
The Piping and Drumming Wing of the Scottish Division:	1 Pipe Major 1 Drum Major 5 Pipe Instructors 3 Drum Instructors
The Army School of Bagpipe Music:	1 Director of Bagpipe Music 1 Pipe Major Instructor

The annual running costs of these schools are not identified separately from their parent establishments.

The task of the Household Division piping school is piper training for the Household Division. From 1 April 1993 this school will close and training will be carried out at the piping and drumming wing of the Scottish Division.

The task of the piping and drumming wing of the Scottish Division is the piper and drummer training from elementary to advanced levels of the Scottish Regiments, the Royal Irish Regiment, the Scots and Irish Guards, and Gurkha and Royal Armoured Corps Regiments established for pipes and drums.

The task of the Army school of bagpipe music is to improve the standard of piping, drumming and bugling in the Army.

Class 3 (elementary) Gurkha Pipers and Drummers are trained at the piping and drumming wing of the Scottish Division. Other pipers are trained at the Army school of bagpipe music.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 777, how pipe bands are found from within the peacetime establishment of (a) Scottish infantry regiments and (b) the Royal Irish Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The pipe and drums in Scottish infantry regiments and the Royal Irish Regiment are primarily infantry trained soldiers. When not training or on operational duties they are made available on order of the commanding officer to pipe and drum.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the non-medical support roles fulfilled by Royal Marine musicians and buglers; and what are the non-musical peacetime tasks of the personnel of each of the six RM bands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Apart from the medical orderly role, the purpose of the personnel of the Royal Marines band service in the event of war or other emergency is to provide disciplined bodies of men capable of assuming responsibility for the physical security of military establishments.

When not undertaking their musical duties the most important peacetime role of RM bands personnel is to train for their wartime medical orderly role. In addition, they have miscellaneous messing responsibilities.

RAF Dambusters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aircraft will participate in the 50th anniversary flight of the RAF dambusters 617 squadron when they fly over the Derwent Dams, Derbyshire on 19 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This year's programme of displays and flypasts by RAF aircraft has not yet been finally agreed. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will inform the hon. Member once a decision has been taken.

RAF Aston Down

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current establishment for Royal Air Force Aston Down, near Stroud; what is the current work and purpose of the station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Aston Down ceased to be a Royal Air Force station in 1961 and is now a stores depot for the Ministry of Defence procurement executive. It has three roles—the storage of aircraft jigs and tools, the processing of used ammunition containers and, finally, the disposal, by auction, of vehicles and other equipment.

In addition, both the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have a small presence at the depot as lodger units. The depot has a strength of six Ministry of Defence civil servants, but the main part of the operation on the site is carried out under contract.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), 22 February Official Report, columns 477-78, if he will list the occasions and cost of conversion of merchant shipping for specialist naval use; and what was the nationality of ownership and registration, if not British, in each case.

Mr. Aitken: Conversions of merchant ships for naval use during the last 10 years were:

RFA ARGUS formerly MV Contender Bezant, an Italian ship, conversion completed 1988.

Costs are commercially confidential.

Details of conversions of merchant ships carried out more than 10 years ago would be available only at disproportionate costs.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the tonnage of merchant shipping hired during the Gulf war, the number of ships involved, the cost to the Exchequer, and the nationality of ownership and registration.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 162 dry cargo ships, with a total dead-weight of 1·8 million tonnes, were chartered for the movement of men and equipment to and from the Gulf at a total cost of £138 million. A number of ships undertook more than one voyage. In addition, 10 tankers, with a total dead-weight of 209,000 tonnes, were chartered at a total cost of £4·76 million. The numbers of vessels chartered by flag, is as follows: Antigua and Barbuda (16), Bahamas (9), Belgium (1), Cyprus (16), Denmark (27), Egypt (1), Finland (2), France (2), Germany (10), Greece (1), Honduras (1), Hong Kong (1), Iceland (1), India (1), Italy (4), Malta (2), Netherlands (2), Netherlands, Antilles and Aruba (2), Norway (15), Panama (7), Qatar (1), Spain (1), St. Vincent and Grenadines (2), Sweden (7), United Kingdom (11), Union of Myanmar (1) and Vanuatu (1). The ultimate ownership of these vessels is not generally known to my Department as the charter is with the operator, who is not necessarily the owner.

Aldermaston

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make public the results of the inquiry into the incident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December 1992.

Mr. Aitken: We are considering in the light of national security interests whether a useful unclassified version of the report can be made available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress in commissioning the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 530. Commissioning work associated with building A91 at AWE Aldermaston is in abeyance and will not resume until the necessary remedial work has been completed satisfactorily.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all work that is at present being carried out by specialist radiological protection staff at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The radiological protection specialist staff at AWE Aldermaston are responsible for advising on all radiological safety aspects of the work carried out there. They also give advice on radiological safety in other areas of the nuclear weapons programme and provide a comprehensive radiological monitoring service for Aldermaston personnel, for the Aldermaston site and for the local environment.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the recommendations of the Pochin inquiry into AWE Aldermaston; and how AWE Aldermaston has implemented each of them.

Mr. Aitken: A total of some 73 detailed actions were identified following the review by Sir Edward Pochin of radiological health and safety at Aldermaston, which did not make formal recommendations. Many of these actions were minor and were completed immediately. The short and medium-term measures involved changes to working practices, increases in health physics staff numbers, provision of improved monitoring and other equipment and safety management restructuring, all of which were put in place some years ago. Longer-term measures, involving procurement of completely new facilities for plutonium work and for processing of radioactive wastes have also been implemented in that new facilities have been constructed and are now being commissioned. These actions were taken in full consultation with the relevant trade unions.

The hon. Gentleman may wish to note that the Pochin report commented that the industrial accident history and incident record at Aldermaston bore comparison with the best industrial concerns and that recent figures confirm that this record has been maintained.

Trident

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now set out the criteria against which the bids for Trident refitting from Rosyth and Devonport will be judged.

Mr. Aitken: In considering future arrangements for warship refitting, all relevant factors will be taken into account, including operational, strategic, technical, safety, commercial, programme and financial issues.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what proportion of housing benefit claims claimants receive a determination within (a) two weeks, (b) two to three weeks, (c) three to four weeks and (d) more than four weeks.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 19 January 1993, at column 211, which gives the latest available information on the proportion of claims determined within 14 days. Data on the proportion of claims which are determined after two weeks is not collected.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's target for the number of days taken to provide payment for housing benefit claims; and what proportion of payments are made, from the date when the claim is received, within (a) two weeks, (b) two to three weeks, (c) three to four weeks, (d) four to six weeks and (e) more than six weeks.

Mr. Burt: Local authorities are statutorily required to make the first payment of any housing benefit—rent allowance—within 14 days of the receipt of a claim or as soon as reasonably practicable thereafter. Where authorities are unable to do this, interim payments should be awarded.

Data on the proportion of claims where the target is met and on the proportion where it is exceeded are not collected. However, monitoring is to commence in 1993-94 with the introduction of the Audit Commission's citizens charter indicators in local authorities.

Income Support

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a table showing (a) the number of income support claimants and (b) the value of total payments made to them for residential and nursing home costs by region for each year from 1982-83 at (i) cash prices and (ii) 1982-83 prices.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the table.

Income support expenditure—Residential care and nursing homes

Year	Total numbers (thousands)	Annual equivalent expenditure (£ million)[1]	Annual equivalent expenditure (£ million)[2]
December 1982	16	39	39
December 1983	26	104	99
December 1984	42	200	182
December 1985	70	348	300
February 1986	90	459	396
May 1987	117	671	531
May 1988	147	878	649
May 1989	176	1,105	766
May 1990	189	1,270	814
May 1991	231	1,872	1,121
May 1982	270	2,460	1,409

[1] Current prices.
[2] 1982-83 prices.

Notes:
1. The date in the year column is the enquiry point on which the actual figures are based.
2. The 1982-83 prices figures have been calculated by adjusting the actual figure by the average GDP deflator index for the year in which the enquiry fell.
3. The figures have been rounded to the nearest million.

Reliable data on a regional basis are not available.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many redundant workers have been refused income support within the past year under the deprivation of capital regulations after paying off part or all of their mortgage.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to reduce the amount of income support or unemployment benefit received by a young person or adult if they begin full time education;

(2) what plans he has to allow unemployed young people and adults to attend full-time education in the course of their choice and still receive income support or unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: We continue to be receptive to proposals to enable unemployed young persons and adults to receive education or training to enable them to take up employment. However, the social security system is not intended as a means of funding full-time education. Most full-time students are ineligible for income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit. Students should look to the educational maintenance system of grants, top-up loans and access fund payments for their financial support.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the maximum weekly deductions from income support for water, overpayment, fines, poll tax arrears and fuel debt, expressed as deductions from income support rates for a single person aged over 25 years and a married couple, both over 25 years.

Mr. Burt: Regulations provide for a standard amount to be deducted from income support to repay arrears of housing costs, fuel, water, or fines. This is set at 5 per cent. of the personal allowance for a person aged 25 or over, currently £2·15 a week.

The standard deduction for recovery of an overpayment of benefit is set at three times 5 per cent. of the personal allowance for a person aged 25 or over—currently £6·45 a week—or, where fraud has been established, four times 5 per cent.—currently £8·60 a week.

The total amount which may be deducted to recover debt, including overpayments, may not exceed three times 5 per cent.—four times 5 per cent. where fraud has been established—of the income support personal allowance for a person aged 25 or over.

An additional £2·15 may be deducted for community charge debt or, where the court order is against a couple, 5 per cent. of the income support allowance for a married couple aged 18 or over—currently £3·35.

In addition, deductions may be made to cover current charges for fuel and water where, of course, the amount may vary from case to case.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional costs would be incurred in allowing young people and adults to continue to receive income support or unemployment benefit whilst they are attending full-time education.

Mr. Burt: This information is not available. Changes in the benefit arrangements for full-time students made in 1990 were accompanied by enhanced support for students made available through the educational maintenance system. It is not, therefore, possible to provide reliable estimates of the cost of reintroducing income support or unemployment benefit.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what entitlements to benefits persons aged 16 and 17 years have during the period between a training place being offered and the start of the training period.

Mr. Burt: Subject to meeting the qualifying conditions, the benefits listed in my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North, (Mr. Evans) on 9 June 1992 at column 386 may be payable to or in respect of young people waiting to commence a youth training placement.

Water Charges

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what elements of water charges were included in the Rossi index during the period April 1988 to April 1992; and what account these amounts took of variations in the cost of water, sewerage and environmental charges.

Mr. Burt: Water charges were not included in the Rossi index used to uprate income-related benefits between April 1988 and April 1992. During this period the index was based on the RPI excluding all housing costs.

Retirement Pensions (Emigration)

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice is issued to British citizens considering emigrating on the potential effects of such a step on their future state retirement pensions, in particular where emigration is contemplated to a country with which there is no reciprocal social security agreement.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will reply to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Andrew Bowden, dated 1 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what advice is issued to British citizens considering emigrating on the potential effects on their future state retirement pensions, in particular where emigration is contemplated to a country with which there is no reciprocal social security agreement.

A person considering emigrating should seek advice from their local Benefits Office. They will be issued with leaflet NI38 "Social Security Abroad", a guide to National Insurance contributions and Social Security benefits outside the European Community and reciprocal agreement countries. The leaflet gives general guidance on the social security arrangement in both countries with, and without, reciprocal arrangements. However, because of the complex nature of contributions and benefits for those going abroad the leaflet also explains that the customer can get further help and specific advice on individual circumstances, or problems, from the Department's Overseas Branch at Newcastle upon Tyne. This branch specialises in contributions and benefits involving periods abroad.

A copy of the leaflet is enclosed for information.

There is also a series of 22 leaflets containing information about the reciprocal social security arrangements with individual countries and the European Community which are available on request.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION

Student Incomes

13. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if the forthcoming survey of student incomes will include part-time students.

Mr. Boswell: No. The survey is one of a series targeted at students already within the scope of support fixed by central Government, which comprises awards, loans and access funds. Other forms of support are available for part-time students.

Grant-maintained Schools

16. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding grant-maintained school budgets for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We have received a number of representations from a range of bodies including LEAs, schools and local authority associations. On 9 February we announced our final decisions, which were taken in the light of the representations received.

English Testing

17. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a further statement with regard to the proposal to test English in secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: We need tests to measure pupils' performance in this key subject. My right hon. Friend announced on 19 February that the English tests for 14-year-olds will be going ahead in June this year. The results will be reported to parents and national totals will be published. Results will be reported in school performance tables for the first time in 1994.

Teacher Training

18. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for teacher training.

Mr. Forth: Last summer, my right hon. Friend introduced a reform of initial teacher training for secondary teachers which required a decisive shift to more school-based training. We have said that we shall be announcing proposals for reform of training for primary teachers around Easter. Our object is to make training more relevant to the needs of schools and the national curriculum. We shall keep the question of further reform under review to that end.

Parental Choice

19. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he proposes to promote parental choice in education in rural areas.

Mr. Forth: The Government's reforms since 1980 have ensured that parents in all areas now have the widest possible choice among available schools, and the information on which to base that choice.

English (Key Stage 3)

20. Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a further statement on the trials conducted prior to the implementation of key stage 3 SATS in English.

Mr. Forth: Trials of tests for 14-year-olds in English started in 1990. Since then the trials have involved some 45,000 pupils and 500 schools. Further trials of the papers for this summer's tests will take place over the coming weeks.

22. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received from school governing bodies in respect of the key stage 3 English tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave earlier to the hon. Members for Delyn (Mr. Hanson) and for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson).

Middleton Park High School

21. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he has plans to visit Middleton Park high school to discuss those factors which influenced its standing in his league table.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Middleton Park high school at present. The public examination results published by the Department last November for each local education authority area were produced alphabetically as indicators of the performance of schools and pupils and not as league tables.

Personal Responsibility

23. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to foster a sense of personal responsibility and responsibility towards the wider community amongst children at school.

Mr. Forth: Section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires the curriculum of every maintained school to promote pupils'
"spiritual, moral, cultural, mental and physical development", and to prepare them for the
"opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life".
My right hon. Friend has made clear his expectation that all school activities should be underpinned by a clear ethos which governs behaviour and practice in the school.

Part-time Students

24. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to assist with funding for training and postgraduate education of part-time students.

Mr. Boswell: Part-time students following designated courses of initial teacher training may qualify for mandatory awards in respect of their maintenance and tuition fees. They may also apply for student loans. Students on other part-time courses may apply for discretionary awards from the appropriate grant-making body. There are no present plans to change these arrangements.

English Teaching

25. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement concerning the teaching of English in secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: The introduction of the national curriculum has already led to improvements in the teaching of English. But experience has shown that there is still room for improvement, and that is why my right hon. Friend commissioned a review of the English curriculum by the National Curriculum Council with the Curriculum Council for Wales. The report of that review is expected shortly.

Repairs (Cornwall)

26. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the capital spending limits on Cornwall county council for investment in repairing school buildings in the county.

Mr. Forth: No limit has been put on the level of Cornwall's capital spending on school repairs. We do limit the extent to which all local authorities can borrow to fund their capital programmes. But decisions on priorities between services and projects are for Cornwall.

Education Budget

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the comparative weighting of the education budget between higher and further education and the primary and secondary education sectors.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's expenditure plans for education reflect the Government's judgment of the relative needs and pressures on the respective sectors, particularly bearing in mind the projected growth from 1992-93 to 1993-94 of 1·7 per cent. in the number of schoolchildren, 7·9 per cent. in the number of further education students, and 8·5 per cent. in the number of higher education students.

European Community (Education Systems)

28. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what studies he has made of other educational systems in use in the EC.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend gathers a range of information through the regular contacts of Ministers and officials with their counterparts in other EC countries, through detailed studies by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools, and through the EC EURYDICE network for the exchange of information between policy makers about the educational systems of member states.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what further representations he has received following the announcement of new measures to strengthen support for pupils with special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Ministers and officials have continued to meet numerous organisations concerned with special educational needs to discuss issues arising from the Education Bill. On 11 November 1992 and 7 January 1993 I met the Special Education Consortium, and am meeting it again on 4 March, with my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State. We have welcomed the constructive contribution which the consortium has made to this important debate.

Student Fees

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to permit universities and other higher and further education institutions to charge full or part fees to students direct other than through local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: It is for universities and colleges of higher education to set their own fee rates. The Government have no power to set the fees charged by institutions. We have no plans to change the current arrangements whereby standard tuition fees are reimbursed from public funds for students holding mandatory awards.

Schools Councils

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many square feet of (a) offices, (b) meeting rooms and (c) storage are used currently by (i) the National Curriculum Council and (ii) the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Forth: The National Curriculum Council has almost 21,000 sq ft of office space, including common areas, 4,500 sq ft of meeting rooms and 8,500 sq ft of storage space, divided between two sites in the centre of York and one on the outskirts of the city.

The School Examinations and Assessment Council has almost 29,000 sq ft of office space, including common areas, 4,000 sq ft of meeting rooms and 1,700 sq ft of storage area, at one site in Notting Hill Gate.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost per square foot of the offices rented by the National Curriculum Council in York.

Mr. Forth: The National Curriculum Council currently leases three properties in York. The cost of Albion Wharf is £15·00 per square foot; the cost of offices at 5A Museum street is £9·90 per square foot; and the cost of the Warehouse is £4·00 per square foot.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he intends to announce where the headquarters of the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority will be based.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has this morning announced that the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority will be based in London. He has also announced that the Funding Agency for Schools will be based in York.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff will be employed by the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority when it is set up.

Mr. Forth: The detailed staffing structure will be a matter for the chairman designate to discuss with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. It is expected that the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority will employ fewer staff than the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council combined.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many square feet of (a) offices, (b) meeting rooms and (c) storage he expects to be required by the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority when it is set up.

Mr. Forth: It will be for the chairman and chief officer of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority finally to identify the amount of space required and the uses to which that space is put. My right hon. Friend's decision on the location of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority was, however, informed by an estimate of the amount of space likely to be required by the new body.

The estimate is that 14,000 to 17,000 sq ft will be needed for offices, and something over 3,000 sq ft will be needed for facilities including meeting rooms, storage areas and administration facilities. On top of this, space will be required for circulation.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost per square foot of the offices rented by the School Examinations and Assessment Council in London.

Mr. Forth: The cost per square foot of the offices rented by the School Examinations and Assessment Council is £25·00.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the staff turnover by grade at (a) the National Curriculum Council and (b) the School Examinations and Assessment Council in 1990-91 and 1991-92 and so far in 1992-93.

Mr. Forth: The table shows, by grade, the numbers of staff who have left employment in the NCC and the SEAC in the years indicated.

Grade	National Curriculum Council			School Examinations and Assessment Council

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many finance staff are employed by (a) the National Curriculum Council and (b) the School Examinations and Assessment Council; and how many staff at each grade in each body are qualified accountants.

Mr. Forth: The finance section of the National Curriculum Council comprises eight full-time and two part-time staff. Of these, three of the full-time staff are qualified accountants, one at grade 5, one at SEO, and one at HEO.

The finance section of the School Examinations and Assessment Council comprises seven staff. Of these one, at grade 6, is a qualified accountant.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff are employed currently by (a) the National Curriculum Council and (b) the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Forth: The National Curriculum Council currently employs 104 staff. The School Examinations and Assessment Council currently employs 147·4 staff.

Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; how many of each are (i) voluntary aided, (ii) voluntary controlled and (iii) grant maintained; and how many in each category are Anglican, Roman Catholic, other denominational and non-denominational.

Mr. Forth: In England in January 1992, the latest date for which full information is available, there were 18,926 and 3,847 maintained primary and secondary schools respectively, including 143 self-governing state—grant-maintained—schools. The following table gives a breakdown of those schools by status and denomination.

Maintained primary and secondary schools by status and denomination—England January 1992

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of schools which have held ballots on grant-maintained status; and how many of them are (a) Anglican and (b) Roman Catholic, listing in each category how many are (i) now operating as grant-maintained schools, (ii) have received approval for grant-maintained status, (iii) have published proposals and are awaiting a decision, (iv) have voted for grant-maintained status but not yet published proposals, (v) have had their proposals rejected and (vi) have voted against grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: A total of 928 schools have held ballots on grant-maintained status, of which 87 are Anglican and 91 are Roman Catholic. Detailed information is given in the table.

	Anglican	Roman Catholic

Pre-School Education

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children in the London borough of Redbridge are in pre-school education; what is the national average; what is the comparable figure for each EC country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In 1992 the age participation rate for maintained schools was 34 per cent. for Redbridge and 49 per cent. for England. The participation rate for England for all forms of education and group day care for the under-fives was over 90 per cent. Comparable figures for all EC countries are not available: where participation rates for education are known, the range in 1989 was from 27 per cent. to 99 per cent.

Palmerstone Special School

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education why Thomas Kelleher has been excluded from Palmerstone special school, Liverpool; what provision is being made for his education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Liverpool local education authority. However, it has told the Department that Thomas Kelleher was withdrawn from the school by his parents on 22 February and that an alternative placement is being negotiated. I hope that the matter can be resolved quickly and satisfactorily.

Nursery Education

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to include in the parents charter an entitlement to nursery education for three and four-year-olds.

Mr. Forth: None.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research his Department has carried out into the benefits of nursery education; and if he will commission new research.

Mr. Forth: Within the last 10 years the Department has supported the child health and education study cohort project which included work on shorter and longer-term effects of pre-school provision. It also supported a review of this and other research projects in 1985-87 by Professor Margaret Clark, whose report "Children under five: Educational Research and Evidence" is available in the Library. The Department keeps under review the need for research on these as on other issues.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to provide finance to allow grant-maintained primary schools to provide nursery places.

Mr. Forth: Self-governing schools providing nursery education receive in annual maintenance grant an amount based on the level of funding they could have expected to receive for that provision from the former maintaining local education authority. The Department recoups the full cost of annual maintenance grant from the relevant LEA.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if a proposal to no longer maintain nursery provision in a primary school would be regarded as a significant change of character.

Mr. Forth: Yes.

Class Sizes

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what has been the average size of class taught by one teacher in primary schools in Staffordshire in each year since 1983;

(2) what percentage of single-teacher classes in Staffordshire comprised more than 30 children in each year since 1983.

Mr. Forth: Information about classes being taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Staffordshire local education authority for the years 1983 to 1992 is given in the table.

Classes being taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Staffordshire local education authority

Position as at January each year

Year	Average size of classes in primary schools	Percentage of classes with over 30 pupils
		Primary	Secondary
1992	26·6	20·4	6·9
1991	26·3	18·4	6·2
1990	26·0	19·8	5·9
1989	25·5	16·8	6·0
1988	25·4	17·8	6·7
1987	25·4	18·0	8·0
1986	25·3	17·7	7·8
1985	24·5	13·4	8·6
1984	24·1	12·9	8·7
1983	23·9	13·2	9·2

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to commission research on any relationship between class size and school effectiveness.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to commission such research.

Examination Results

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he will take to include a measurement of added value in the publication of examination and test results for schools.

Mr. Forth: The consultation documents published by the Department on 19 February make it clear that we intend to keep under review the question of measuring added value, as national curriculum assessment and the performance tables of test and examination results are developed year on year. Progress in this complex area will depend in large part on the degree of consensus which can be secured.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is undertaking to increase reporting of industrial injuries following the publication of the Health and Safety Executive supplementary report to the 1990 labour force survey.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since publication of the initial results of the Health and Safety Executive supplement to the 1990 labour force survey in the Health and Safety Commission annual report 1990-91, the HSE's operational divisions have emphasised the reporting requirements at visits and have continued to inquire into accident reporting practices and closely examine records as a routine part of inspection. Where appropriate prosecution for failure to report an injury is instituted. Detailed information on the reporting requirements is provided to every new employer that comes to the HSE's attention. Local authorities have taken similar action in premises for which they are the enforcing authority.

The HSE has also commissioned research into employer's awareness and understanding of the requirements. The results are likely to influence legislative proposals, to simplify both the reporting requirements and the reporting arrangements, to be brought forward later this year by the HSC.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of estimated working days lost through industrial injury under the labour force survey and Health and Safety Executive supplementary report; what action she proposes to reduce this figure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A supplement to the 1990 labour force survey, sponsored by the Health and Safety Executive, showed that employed people in Great Britain took around 23 million days off work as a result of workplace injury in the year to spring 1990.

Responsibility for maintaining and improving health and safety standards rests with employers and others concerned at the workplace.

The Health and Safety Commission's priorities for promoting improvements in health and safety at work are set out in its plan of work for 1993-94 and beyond, which will shortly be submitted to my right hon. Friend for approval and is expected to be published in the spring.

Employment Training

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements exist in Bradford for those undertaking employment training to be supplied with tools necessary for their training and with necessary equipment for undertaking courses of study as part of their ET; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The contract with Bradford and District training and enterprise council, which is responsible for delivering adult training in Bradford, requires that the TEC sets out in any contract with a training supplier the arrangements to be made for the provision of any necessary protective clothing and/or equipment for participants on adult training. If to follow the training programme a participant requires protective clothing and/or equipment it will be provided.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people who got jobs after doing employment training still had that job six months later, in this year and each preceding year.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Although there is information on jobs immediately after leaving an ET scheme and on jobs six months after leaving a scheme, there is no information on whether it is the same job. Therefore, the information requested is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places were available on the employment training scheme in the current year and in each preceding year; in each year, how many trainees started the course; how many completed it; and how many got jobs at the end of it in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information requested is given in the following table.

Employment training: planned entrants, entrants, job outcomes for Great Britain

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list in order the top 100 travel-to-work areas in England in terms of highest male, female and total unemployment figures for the latest month available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Claimant unemployment rates for the areas requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 570, if she will break down the overall figures on non-manual worker unemployment, by region.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The regional breakdown of non-manual workers who are unemployed on the internationally standard ILO definition is given in the following table.

thousands

Great Britain	822,000
Northern	40,000

Aircraft Industries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the aircraft, aerospace and aviation equipment industries in each of the years since 1987; and if she will give an estimate of the distribution of this employment by occupation, socio-economic group and income band relative to manufacturing industry as a whole.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The latest employment figures are from the biennial census of employment for the aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing industry. The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment in Great Britain

	Number
September 1987	158,000
September 1989	163,000

These figures represent 3·1 per cent. and 3·2 per cent. respectively of all employees in manufacturing industries. Estimates for later dates are aggregated with other transport industries and cannot be identified separately. Figures for 1991 will be available after the publication of the September 1991 census of employment in April.

Information on the distribution of earnings can be found in tables 66 to 73 of part C of the new earnings survey for each of the years requested. A copy of the survey is available in the Library.

Figures on the distribution of employment by occupation within socio-economic group is being extracted, but the work will take some time to complete. I will write separately with the information and place a copy in the Library.

Defence Industries (Alternative Employment)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assistance her Department is providing to former employees of defence-related industries in Hampshire in finding alternative employment.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: In Hampshire, as elsewhere, the employment service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes, which are designed to take account of special local circumstances to help former employees of any industry find the best and quickest route back to employment.

Unemployment, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment where the Southampton, Itchen and Southampton, Test, constituencies come in the order of English constituencies ranked by unemployment on the latest available figures.

Mr. McLoughlin: [holding answer 1 March 1993]: For areas with different-sized work forces, such as parliamentary constituencies, the only meaningful comparisons are based on unemployment rates. Official estimates are not available at the level of parliamentary constituencies.

Youth Training

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people went on the youth training scheme in the current year and each preceding year; in each year, how many completed the course; how many went on to get a job at the end of the course; and how many were still in employment at the end of six months.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information requested is given in the following tables.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was invested in energy efficiency in the United Kingdom in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A large part of the investment in the United Kingdom economy will have some effect on improving energy efficiency, although it is not possible to separate out an aggregate total of investment specifically directed at this purpose. However, in 1991 the amount of energy required per unit of GDP was some 18 per cent. lower than in 1979.

Air Quality, Victoria

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the latest information available to him on the monitoring of air quality at Bridge place, Victoria, in London.

Mr. Maclean: Information on air quality at Bridge place, Victoria, in London is issued every day by the Department of the Environment on the free air quality telephone service—0800 556677—and on Ceefax page 404. This information is provisional; ratified summary statistics are published in annual reports by my Department and Warren Spring Laboratory.

Packaging

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to the United Kingdom packaging industry to encourage the phasing out of the use of inks and pigments containing toxic heavy metals, paints using solvents and lead bottle tops within packaging.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so at present.

Local Government Ministers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the current and previous Ministers whose responsibilities cover or covered local government or inner cities since the election of 1979.

Mr. Robin Squire: The current and previous Ministers whose responsibilities cover or covered local government or inner cities since the election of 1979 are:

Secretary of State
Mr. Michael Heseltine
Mr. Tom King
Mr. Patrick Jenkin
Mr. Kenneth Baker
Mr. Nicholas Ridley
Mr. Chris Patten
Mr. Michael Howard

Minister of State
Mr. Tom King
Lord Bellwin
Mr. Kenneth Baker
Mr. John Patten
Dr. Rhodes Boyson
Mr. Michael Howard
Mr. John Gummer
Mr. David Hunt
Mr. Michael Portillo
Mr. John Redwood

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Lord Bellwin
Mrs. Angela Rumbold
Mr. Christopher Chope
The Hon. Colin Moynihan
Mrs. Virginia Bottomley
Lord Hesketh
Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory
Mr. Robert Atkins
Mr. Patrick Nicholls
Lady Blatch
Mr. Robert Key
Mr. Robin Squire

River Wear (Pollution)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often the River Wear is tested for pollution; when it was last tested; what were the results; and what precautions are being taken against pollution in the event of mine closures in County Durham.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority carries out regular monitoring of river quality; details of sampling points, dates of sampling and results obtained are held on public registers in the NRA's regional offices. It is for British Coal and the NRA, in the first place, to assess the environmental effects of pit closures and to consider what action may need to be taken to avoid pollution.

Teacher Councillors

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances a school teacher would be disqualified from being elected as a member of a local authority under section 80 of the Local Government Act 1972; and what proposals there are to allow school teachers at grant-maintained schools or schools subject to local management to stand for membership of a local authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: Teachers are currently barred only from standing for election to the local education authorities of which they are employees. There are no plans to amend this provision, which does not apply to teachers in schools which have opted out of local education authority control.

Highways Authorities

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of development undertaken by local highways authorities is permitted by part 13 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988;

(2) if he will seek to amend part 13 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 to reduce the scope of permitted development rights for development by local highway authorities;

(3) what examination he has made of whether any development permitted by part 13 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 is likely to give rise to significant environmental effects.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 7 July 1992 a review of all permitted development rights which could have significant environmental effects. That review is near completion, and a consultation paper will be issued shortly.

As permitted development rights do not require a planning application, information on the proportion of development that is undertaken by local highway authorities without express consent is not available.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many units were provided by housing associations in rural areas during 1991-92; and what proportion this represented of the total provision for housing associations for that year.

Mr. Baldry: In 1991-92, the Housing Corporation approved funding for 2,355 homes in settlements with populations of 3,000 or fewer. This represented 5·5 per cent. of the total programme for that year.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expectations he has of the ability of housing associations to raise private finance during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Housing associations are expected to raise some £850 million of private finance in the current financial year in support of projects funded by the Housing Corporation, including schemes undertaken as part of the package to help regenerate the housing market, announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement. This is a welcome addition to the £2·3 billion of Government money being given to housing associations this year and means that a greater number of new social homes will be provided than would otherwise be possible.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much, as an annual percentage, of rents paid by housing association tenants is met wholly or partly from benefits.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested on the amount of housing benefit paid to housing association tenants is not available. The Department of Social Security has, however, started to collect information on housing association tenants who receive housing benefit and it is likely to be available later this year.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the effect of the poverty trap on the ability of housing associations to house people in low-paid employment.

Mr. Baldry: In discussions and correspondence with housing associations some express concern that, as rents increase, it may become more difficult for associations to house those in low-paid employment.

It is, of course, the case that the housing benefit system is designed to target resources effectively on those in greatest need and the fact that substantial numbers of new association tenants are in receipt of benefit demonstrates that new association homes are going to those in greatest need.

Nevertheless, the latest data shows that up to one third of new lettings are made to tenants who do not receive housing benefit.

Deregulation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the items of regulation which are due to be examined by his departmental deregulation unit.

Mr. Redwood: All my Department's regulations that have an impact on business are being reviewed to ensure that, where they are necessary, they impose the minimum burden. A provisional list of these regulations has recently been prepared. Once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition, it will be placed in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the standard spending assessments for (a) Humberside, (b) Berkshire, (c) Hampshire, (d) Kent and (e) Essex for (i) 1991-92, (ii) 1992-93 and (iii) 1993-94;

(2) if he will list the standard spending assessment for (a) Humberside, (b) Berkshire, (c) Hampshire, (d) Kent and (e) Essex for (i) 1992-93, and (ii) 1993-94 as a percentage of that for 1991-92, giving the reasons for any changes.

Mr. Robin Squire: The standard spending assessments for the authorities requested for the years 1991-92, 1992-93, 1992-93 adjusted for changes in function and 1993-94 are given in pounds million and in pounds per head of resident population.

An authority's standard spending assessment is determined by various social, demographic and physical characteristics. Much of the variation in the ratios between these authorities for both 1992-93 and 1993-94 is due to indicator data changes, especially to the effect of incorporating data from the 1991 census. But the main influence for 1993-94 is the removal from local education authorities of responsibility for most aspects of further education.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the average and median percentage increases in standard spending assessments for all local authorities in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the south-east and (c) the northern region for 1993-94 over those for 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: The mean and median percentage increases in standard spending assessments from 1992-93, adjusted for changes in function, to 1993-94 for all local authorities, including metropolitan fire and police authorities, the receiver for the Metropolitan Police and the London fire and civil defence authority, for the regions requested are as follows:

Standard statistical region	Mean per cent.	Median per cent.
Yorkshire and Humberside	2·0	2·7
South East (including Greater London)	3·1	3·3
Northern	1·7	1·4

Local Government Finance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from what date, for the purposes of calculating receipts taken into account, local authorities are assumed to have had the use of 100 per cent. of capital receipts; when they actually had the use of 100 per cent. of capital receipts; what steps he will take to ensure that local authorities realising large capital receipts between those dates are not penalised by these rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In issuing basic credit approvals—BCAs—to local authorities to support their capital expenditure in 1993-94, account was taken of a proportion of the usable capital receipts estimated to be available to them during that year. In this way, more of the available support could be directed to authorities with few receipts.

The BCAs for 1993-94 were issued on 22 December 1992, at which time neither we nor authorities knew how much each authority would have available in 1993-94 as usable receipts. Thus we could only make estimates.

For 1992-93, we based such estimates for each authority on the usable receipts brought forward from the previous year, and those which the authority forecast it would obtain during the year. But we felt that it would not be fair to estimate usable receipts for 1993-94 on a similar basis, unless we made some additional allowance for the changes in the usable proportions of receipts which were announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement and which apply during the period from 13 November 1992 to 31 December 1993. With a few exceptions, the effect of these changes was to increase the usable proportion of capital receipts from council house sales from 25 to 100 per cent., and to increase the usable proportion of such receipts from other kinds of disposals from 50 to 100 per cent. Thus authorities' usable capital receipts in 1992-93 and 1993-94 will be increased as a result of the change but, for any given level of disposals, the increase will be greater for housing receipts.

We therefore asked authorities to estimate how much their usable receipts would have been in 1992-93 if the changes made in the autumn statement had applied throughout that year. These figures enabled us to make some allowance for the temporary change in the rules in our estimates of usable receipts in 1993-94 which we took into account in determining basic credit approvals.

We recognise that differences are bound to arise between the usable receipts actually available to authorities and those used in the calculation of the basic credit approvals. It would be possible to make an adjustment for such differences when calculating the receipts taken into account in future years. The local authority associations will be consulted on the alternatives which might be considered.

Heathrow Airport (Fifth Terminal)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be holding a public inquiry into the planning application for a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Business Rate Appeals

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a regional breakdown of the outstanding business rate appeals.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is given in the table.

Outstanding non-domestic rating appeals (end December 1992)

Region	Appeals
Northern	40,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	49,000
North West	50,000
East Midlands	23,000
West Midlands	36,000
East Anglia	16,000
London	130,000
South East (excluding London)	86,000
South West	30,000
Total	460,000

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with English local authorities and other eligible infrastructure-providing bodies concerning the levels of (a) base and (b) supplementary credit approvals with a view to the provision of matching Government funding to maximise successful applications for European regional development fund assistance.

Mr. Robin Squire: Consultations have been held with the local authority associations concerning methods of distributing supplementary credit approvals in 1993-94 and subsequent financial years to cover grants from the European regional development fund. As already announced, credit approvals will be available at a level of 100 per cent. to cover forecast ERDF receipts.

Noise

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure compliance with the targets for night time noise exposure contained in the EC fifth action programme; if he will compile a national inventory of noise exposure levels; if he will set up a national noise abatement programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The draft planning policy guidance note on "Planning and Noise" recommends a range of noise levels for each of four noise exposure categories. These include proposed levels for noise between the hours of 23.00 and 07.00 which are in line with the targets for night time noise contained in the EC fifth environment action programme. My Department has recently completed the national noise incidence study which involved noise measurements being made outside 1,000 homes in England and Wales during 1990 and has provided information on noise exposure levels. The results of the study will be published later this year. My Department's noise research programme also includes several projects which involve the measuring and monitoring of noise from various sources and developing ways in which exposure to noise can be reduced.

Defective Housing

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the payment of loan charge contributions to local authorities in England and Wales in respect of defective housing expenditure.

Mr. Baldry: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary amending legislation, my right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales propose to contribute to the loan charges payable in 1991-92 by local authorities in England and Wales as a result of the expenditure they incurred before 1 April 1989 in assisting owners of defective housing. The original power in section 569 of the Housing Act 1985 to make contributions in respect of such loan charges was inadvertently repealed in section 157 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Clauses 124 and 125 of the Housing and Urban Development Bill restore it. The purpose is to enable claims from local authorities for sums expected to total £16,777,221 in England and £1,009,731 in Wales to be settled without delay. Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in the 1993-94 main estimates for the housing, England vote—class VII, vote 1—and the main estimates for the housing, other environmental services and welfare food, Wales vote—class XV, vote 6. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £17,786,952 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Contrary to Government accounting conventions, parliamentary approval was sought and given for this expenditure in the 1992-93 housing, England vote—class VIII, vote 1—and the 1992-93 housing, other environmental services and welfare food, Wales vote—class XVI, vote 6—in advance of the necessary amending legislation being put before the House. The provision in England of £18,101,000 for defective housing loan charges—subhead L4—and in Wales of £990,000—subhead F4—will not be used for any purpose, apart from settling late claims in respect of loan charges arising before 1 April 1991. Any such claims will continue to be settled through ex gratia payments under the arrangements announced in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 15 January 1992 Official Report, column 576.

Severn Estuary

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests he has received from the Environment Commissioner of the European Communities for a reasoned opinion on the Severn estuary designation as a special protection area under the 1979 wild birds directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 February 1993]: None. The former Nature Conservancy Council's case for designation of the Severn estuary as a special protection area is under consideration within Government and the European Commission will be notified of the decision in due course.

PSA Building Management

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many writs were issued against PSA Building Management in 1991 and how many in 1992; how many of these were to secure payment of bills; and how these writs were spread between different regions.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The Government have asked PSA to improve its performance in paying bills on time. No information is held centrally about the number of writs and I do not know the answer. The businesses now monitor prompt payment by payment cycles and I have asked for a monthly report on progress.

"Helping the Earth Begins at Home"

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints he has received about the "Helping the Earth" television and newspaper advertisements.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1993]: Since the "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" campaign began in November 1991, two complaints have been put to my Department through the Advertising Standards Authority about press advertisements. The first of these complaints was upheld by the authority, the second was dropped.

One letter complaining about the campaign's television advertisement was recently forwarded to the Department by the Independent Television Commission and has now been answered. Four other written complaints have been received by my Department from members of the public regarding the campaign's press and other television advertisements.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charterline Telephone Service

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what budget he has set aside for the Charterline telephone information service he intends to set up in the east midlands pilot project; what charges will be made for the service; how it will be vetted to guarantee that it is politically impartial; and whether he will also fund other citizens' rights information lines which are not under his political control.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter unit is still negotiating the contract for this service. Revealing the budget would undermine the charter unit's negotiating position.

Callers will be charged at the local call rate for using the service. The service will direct callers to a contact in the public service organisation which is best placed to answer their query or deal with their complaint. It will therefore be a politically impartial service.

It would not be right to fund other independent information lines which might have other purposes than the provision of information about public service organisations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the terms of the agreement for the forces of NATO to operate outside the areas previously agreed; and what measures are necessary to amend the North Atlantic treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: NATO Foreign Ministers agreed in June and December 1992 that the alliance should support, on a case-by-case basis and in accordance with its own procedures, peacekeeping operations under the auspices of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe or the United Nations. NATO Defence Ministers agreed in December that support for UN and CSCE peacekeeping should be among the missions of NATO forces and headquarters. Copies of the communiqués from all these meetings are in the Library of the House.

There is no need for the North Atlantic treaty to be amended to permit NATO to operate outside its own area in pursuit of these decisions; the treaty obliges members of the alliance to respond to an armed attack on one of them within the North Atlantic area, but it does not prevent NATO members from acting collectively outside the North Atlantic area if they so agree.

Taiwan

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations with Taiwan.

Mr. Goodlad: For well-known reasons, diplomatic relations do not exist between the United Kingdom and Taiwan. There are many unofficial links, reflecting widespread recognition of Taiwan's growing economic weight. The Anglo-Taiwan trade committee and the Anglo-Taiwan education centre respectively promote commercial and educational exchanges. United Kingdom exports to Taiwan in 1992 totalled £545 million. There is scope for expanding business co-operation in many areas including financial services, investment and joint ventures —such as that between British Aerospace and Taiwan Aerospace Corporation. A new air link between the United Kingdom and Taiwan was recently announced.

EC Social Chapter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the non-incorporation of the opt-out on the social chapter in the Maastricht treaty into United Kingdom law would have on the competence of the European Court of Justice with regard to the rights of British workers and fair competition between United Kingdom companies and their continental counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Non-incorporation of the protocol on social policy into United Kingdom law would have no effect on the competence of the ECJ to interpret the Treaty on European Union, including the clause of the protocol which states that "Acts adopted by the Council . . . shall not be applicable to the United Kingdom".

Yugoslavia

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what informal or formal representatives from his Department attended the round table meeting held by UNESCO on 23 February in Paris to bring together artists, writers, journalists and ex-politicians from all sides of the ethnic divide in former Yugoslavia; and what assessment he has made of the effect of an application by the United Kingdom to rejoin UNESCO on such peacemaking and peacebuilding initiatives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The round table was not attended by any United Kingdom representatives. We welcome Señor Mayor's initiative in organising the meeting. We have made no decision on a resumption of UNESCO membership. The work of UNESCO in this and other fields will obviously be taken into account in reaching any decision.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following meetings are planned:

2 March—Consumer Affairs Council

8 to 9 March—Foreign Affairs Council
15 March—Economic and Finance Council
15 March—Transport Council
16 to 17 March—Agriculture Council
18 March—Fisheries Council
22 to 23 March—Environment Council

The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

(a) Consumer Affairs Council—2 March
Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts
Directive on protection of purchasers of timeshares
Future action on labelling of products
Community system on information on accidents
Exchange of information on products which may jeopardise consumer health or safety Action plan for consumer policy (1990-92)
Proposal for an EC Directive on Comparative advertising amending Directive 84/450/EEC concerning misleading advertising

(b) Foreign Affairs Council—8 to 9 March
Relations with Central and Eastern Europe
Association Agreement with Bulgaria
EEA—Protocol of adaptation
Cohesion Fund
Former Yugoslavia
GATT and other trade issues
Commercial Defence Instruments
FSU Textiles Agreement

(c) Economic and Finance Council—15 March
Annual Economic Report and national actions to promote economic recovery in Europe
Convergence programme for Greece (possible)
Carbon/Energy taxation
Progress report
Report of the Court of Auditors for 1991
Travellers' allowances

(d) Transport Council—15 March
Debate on Transport White Paper (11011/92)

Aviation
External relations (5080/90) (4146/93)
Computer reservation systems
Air traffic management equipment and systems (8420/92)

Land Transport
Transport Infrastructure Programme (1993-1994) (8065/92) (10437/92)
Trans European Networks:
Guidance for roads (8065/92)
Inland waterways (8065/92)
Combined transport (8066/92)
Fiscal harmonisation (heavy goods vehicles)
Road haulage cabotage (10038/91) (4943/92) (5334/92) (7662/92) (8315/92) (10855/92) (10881/92)
Transport agreement with Slovenia (5033/93)
Transport of dangerous goods (4954/93)
Road transport external relations (11234/92)

Maritime Transport
Maritime safety communication
Aviation agreement with Switzerland (possible)
Inland waterway external relations (possible)

(e) Agriculture Council—16-17 March
Price fixing proposals (Com(93) 36)
Milk quotas
GATT Agriculture
Processed tomatoes (10485/92; 4185/93)
Greek tobacco (possible)
Potatoes (possible) (10483/92; 4613/93)

(f) Fisheries Council—18 March
Control system for the Common Fisheries Policy (9019/92)
Spanish/Portuguese Accession (4158/93)
Harmonised technical conservation measures in the Mediterranean (11229/92)
High seas fisheries (possible)
Market situation of fisheries products
European fisheries research (possible)
Third country agreements (possible)

(g) Environment Council—22-23 March
ECO Audit regulation (5218/92)
CO2 monitoring decision (7569/92)
Carbon/Energy tax (7018/92)
Ratification of Climate Change Convention (11233/92)
Ratification of Biodiversity Convention (4593/93)
Volatile Organic Compounds emissions directive (VOCS) (Stage I) (8348/92)
Hazardous waste incineration directive (5761/92)
CITES regulation (10500/91)
Emissions from motor vehicles (4142/93)

The Consumer Affairs Council will meet on 2 March. The directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts will be discussed by Ministers in the hope that it may be adopted. Discussion will also focus on: a directive on the protection of purchasers of timeshares; future action on the labelling of products; the possible extension of the European home and leisure accident surveillance systems (EHLASS) for a further five years; the exchange of information on products which may jeopardise consumer health or safety and the action plan for consumer policy (1990-92). The proposal for an EC directive on comparative advertising, on subsidiarity grounds, will also be discussed by the Council.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 8 and 9 March. The Council will discuss the EC's relations with central and east European countries and sign an association agreement with Bulgaria. Ministers will be asked to agree a protocol of adaptation to the EEA agreement which would allow it to come into force without Switzerland. Ministers will than discuss the cohesion fund; former Yugoslavia; progress on the GATT negotiations; Commercial defence instruments and a textiles agreement with former Soviet Union states.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 15 March, when Ministers will consider formal adoption of the Commission's annual economic report. Further discussion will take place on actions to promote economic recovery in the Community and there is also expected to be a brief discussion of a progress report on the Commission's proposal for carbon/energy tax. The Council will examine the report of the Court of Auditors on the 1991 budget with a view to making a recommendation to the European Parliament on giving the Commission a discharge with respect to the implementation of the 1991 budget. Ministers may also discuss the economic convergence programme for Greece and increases in the current allowances for travellers from third countries.

The Transport Council will meet on 15 March. The Council will discuss aviation external relations and trans-European network guidelines. Other subjects for discussion by Ministers include: the transport infrastructure programme; inland waterways and combined transport; road freight fiscal harmonisation; road haulage cabotage; the transport of dangerous goods; road transport external relations and the transport agreement with Slovenia. Additional aviation items include: computer reservation systems and air traffic management equipment and systems. Ministers may also discuss inland waterway external relations and a proposed aviation agreement with Switzerland. There will also be a Commission presentation on the maritime safety communication.

The Agricultural Council will meet on 16 and 17 March. Ministers will discuss the 1993-94 price-fixing proposals; milk quotas; the agricultural aspects of the GATT negotiations and processed tomatoes. They may also discuss Greek tobacco and the review of the potato regime.

The Fisheries Council is due to meet on 18 March. Ministers will discuss the proposed control and enforcement regulation; review of the accession arrangements for Spain and Portugal; harmonised technical conservation measures in the Mediterranean and the market situation for fisheries products. They may also discuss the Community policy on high seas fishing; European fisheries research and negotiating mandate for a fisheries agreement with the Russian Federation.

The Environment Council will meet on 22 and 23 March, when Ministers hope to reach agreement on the ECO-audit regulation, the volatile organis compounds (Stage 1) emissions directive, the CO_2 monitoring decision and ratification of the climate change convention. The Council will also discuss: carbon/energy tax; ratification of the biodiversity convention; the hazardous waste incineration directive and the CITES regulation. The Commission will present its communication on marine pollution and may make presentations on substances that deplete the ozone layer (hydrochlorofluorocarbons and methyl bromide) and emissions from motor vehicles.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to reduce debt burdens of countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

It is Government policy to cancel the debts of those very poor and indebted countries which are successfully pursuing sound policies of reform. So far, nearly £200 million of old aid debt has been cancelled in countries in sub-Saharan Africa, and other countries will benefit as they fulfil the qualifications for this treatment. All new aid to very poor countries is now given only in the form of grant aid.

Those debt-distressed countries which do not qualify for aid debt cancellation may apply to have their debts rescheduled through the Paris Club, composed of the major creditor Governments. The Paris Club is prepared to reschedule aid debt over long periods at highly concessional rates of interest. The effect of this is to increase greatly the grant element of the loans concerned, so producing a very substantial reduction in the present value of the obligation to repay.

Many of these countries owe most of their official debt to export credit agencies rather than to aid agencies. That is why the United Kingdom proposed the comprehensive Trinidad terms initiative for reducing the debts of the very poorest and severely indebted countries. So far, over $3 billion has been consolidated under these agreements in sub-Saharan Africa by the Paris Club, cancelling over $1 billion during the lifetime of the agreements.

TRANSPORT

Lorries

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish his consultation paper on heavier lorries for combined road and rail transport.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has published the paper today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Drink Driving

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has issued to road safety officers concerning the role of children in getting across to adults the "don't drink and drive" message; and if he will make it his policy that all "don't drink and drive" advertisements on television sponsored by his Department are transmitted during hours when children are likely to be viewing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have not given specific advice to road safety officers, although they are involved in the planning of our drink-drive campaigns.

We aim to show our television commercials to as wide an audience as possible and recognise that children have an important role in influencing the attitudes of adults. Surveys have shown that children's views against drinking and driving have been reinforced by watching the commercials. The final decision on when commercials can be transmitted rests with the Independent Television Commission.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has undertaken into impairment caused by alcohol to the driving of young or infrequent drinkers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There has been no specific research into this subject in the United Kingdom. International research suggests that young drivers and infrequent drinkers are more likely to be impaired at lower alcohol levels, but there is considerable variability between individuals at all ages.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend the Road Traffic Act 1988 so as to reduce the alcohol limit in Britain to 50 mg/100 ml and to include random breath tests.

Mr. Carlisle: No. The current limit of 80 mg/100 ml is scientifically based at the level at which, for most people, the chance of being involved in an accident starts to rise sharply. More than half of all drink-drive offenders are convicted at twice this limit. Lowering the legal limit and introducing random breath tests would risk directing resources away from this group of high risk offenders.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received to lower the legal unit of alcohol in the breath and blood for tests carried out by the police; and what information he has as to the legal limits set by other countries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We receive representations from time to time from road safety organisations and from members of the public. The best information we have on legal limits for drinking and driving in other countries is for other European Community member states, a majority of which share the same legal limit as the United Kingdom.

Shipping (Dangerous Cargoes)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research contracts his Department has let into measures for controlling the routes of ships carrying dangerous or polluting cargoes while they are in British waters; and what plans he has for future research.

Mr. Norris: A contract was let in 1989 to assess shipping movements along the west coast of Scotland since the deep water route to the west of the Hebrides was implemented.

The Department is also involved in the European Community project "Euret", which is directed at the development of vessel traffic systems.

Roads Maintenance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was transferred from the highway maintenance standard spending assessment to the highways structural maintenance elements of transport supplementary grant in the settlement for 1993-94; how much of that sum has been allocated for structural maintenance on principal roads and how much for Bridge strengthening; and what was the amount of local authority expenditure on structural maintenance on principal roads in 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: For 1993-94 a further £120 million has been transferred from revenue support grant to the transport supplementary grant system to cover structural maintenance on carriageways of principal roads. This followed two previous transfers, £90 million in 1991-92 for assessment, strengthening and other structural maintenance on bridges and £100 million in 1992-93 for carriageways of roads on the primary route network.

Of the £310 million transferred, £172·8 million has been allocated in 1993-94 for structural maintenance on carriageways of principal roads, and £137·2 million for assessment, strengthening and other structural maintenance of bridges.

For 1993-94 local highways authorities may switch resources between bridges and carriageways according to local priority.

The amount of local authority expenditure on structural maintenance on principal roads in 1992-93 is not yet available. Local highway authorities have budgeted to spend £119 million on these roads in 1992-93.

Road Improvements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location, cost and duration of the road improvement schemes funded by his Department in the city of Westminster since 1979.

Mr. Norris: My Department was not directly responsible for funding road improvements in the city of Westminster prior to 1986. No major improvement schemes have been carried out on trunk roads in the city since then. We have supported a number of local road improvements through transport supplementary grant.

Channel Tunnel

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received the proposals for a channel tunnel rail link from Union Rail; and when he proposes to publish them.

Mr. Freeman: A report from Union Railways on options for refining the route of the channel tunnel rail link was received on 11 January 1993. The Government will announce as soon as possible a route for consultation, together with information on the options put to Ministers by Union Railways.

British Rail

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account is taken of British Rail's capital requirements to maintain the network in setting the public spending total for the Department of Transport.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's capital requirement is one of the most important factors taken into account in setting the Department's public spending allocation.

Cyclists (Safety Helmets)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make compulsory the wearing of safety helmets by children on bicycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have no plans to make compulsory the wearing of cycle helmets by child cyclists. We must ensure that children and parents are fully aware of the very significant improvement in safety that helmets give. This has been the subject of recent publicity by the Department and will be an important element of our forthcoming cycling safety campaign.

Railway Lines (Wales)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the future of the Aberystwyth-Shrewsbury and Machynlleth-Pwllheli railway lines.

Mr. Freeman: The level of service provided on these lines is currently a matter for British Rail. In due course, that responsibility will be assumed by the franchising director.

Ashford International Station

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an announcement about the proposed Ashford international station.

Mr. Freeman: The public expenditure settlement for 1993-94 allows for British Rail to undertake urgent track and signalling works for the proposed Ashford international passenger station. What exactly needs to be provided is still under discussion and I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as decisions have been reached.

Red Routes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the figure for accidents and casualties on the Archway road red route pilot and for the pilot corridor in 1991; and if he will instigate an independent inquiry of the pilot study.

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to instigate an inquiry. Independent monitoring of the pilot red route has already been carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory.

The following figures are for the periods of 18 months before and after the introduction of the scheme in January 1991.

	Pilot route			Pilot route corridor
	Before	After	Change per cent.	Before	After	Change per cent.
Accidents	701	626	−11	1,008	857	−15
Casualties	788	683	−13	1,132	951	−16

Notes:
(1) The above figures were taken from the London Accident Analysis Unit's database in November 1992. Accidents occurring 50 metres either side of major junctions, or on minor side roads within 50 metres of the centre line of the main road, have been allocated to the main road.
(2) City Road has been excluded from the table because the London Borough of Islington never implemented the red route controls there.
(3) The normal requirement for the analysis of accident statistics is a three year period. We have provided figures over the shorter period because of the particular public interest in this project.

Agencies, Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consideration was given to including, in the advertisement placed in the Official Journal of the European Community for the sale of DVOIT, a requirement that it must remain in Swansea;

(2) if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the proposed privatisation of DVOIT in Swansea.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the advertisement for the privatisation of the Department of Transport agencies based in Swansea will specify that the privatised facilities should remain in the Swansea area.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 10 February 1993]: I am advised that the proposed privatisation of DVOIT by means of a sale to a private sector company will be a transfer within the terms of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Future location options for DVOIT will be a matter for prospective purchasers of the agency to consider.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools (a) did and (b) did not receive a capital allocation named grant in each of the last three years.

Mr. Forth: The information is shown in the table for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Self-governing schools: named project capital allocations

Year	(a) Number of schools with named project allocations	(b) Number of schools without named project allocations
1990-91	27	2
1992-93	92	74

Note: The figures in column (b) relate to the number of self-governing schools eligible to bid in that year's named project capital funding round.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many ballots for grant-maintained status the Electoral Reform Society has reported to him that improper conduct and procedure had taken place.

Mr. Forth: Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. reports the factual results of ballots to the governing body of the school concerned and to the Department. From time to time the Department receives complaints about improper conduct or procedure in a ballot. If these require investigation, Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. may be asked for its comments.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total capital expenditure named projects grant, for grant-maintained schools in each of the last three years; and how many grant-maintained schools there were in each of these years.

Mr. Forth: The information is shown in the following table. Final outturn figures for 1992-93 are not yet available as expenditure is still being incurred by schools.

Self-governing schools: Named project outturn expenditure

Year	Expenditure[1] on named projects (£ thousands)	Number of schools in sector[2]
1990-91	5,835	29
1991-92	7,485	65

[1] Expenditure figures relate to spending by schools on named projects awarded allocations in each year listed and excludes expenditure on projects started in earlier programme years.
[2] The figures relate to the number of self-governing schools eligible to bid in each year's named project capital funding round.

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots for grant-maintained status he has ordered to be re-run; and what were the reasons for these orders.

Mr. Forth: Four ballots have been declared void and required to be re-run to date. In each case, the grounds for the decision were errors in the ballot arrangements.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he has taken to notify parents about grant-maintained schools; how much these measures have cost in each financial year; and what further expenditure is planned.

Mr. Forth: Information specifically for parents about grant-maintained schools is set out in "Grant Maintained Schools: Questions Parents Ask" and through the telephone helpline.

The printing costs of "Questions Parents Ask" in the financial years from 1989-90 to 1991-92 totalled £40,000. It is not possible to disaggregate this information further without incurring disproportionate cost. Printing costs this year are estimated at £60,000. Distribution costs fall within the terms of the contract with the Departmental despatch centre and cannot be identified separately. Expenditure in 1993-94 has been planned on the basis of current demand.

The GM helpline for parents is a pilot scheme which will run to the end of March. Decisions about extending this service will be made at that time. The estimated cost for the six week pilot is £225,000 which covers the running of the telephone helpline and publicising the availability of the service in the national press and magazines.

English

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if his departmental advisers on the teaching of English to 14-year-olds will meet representative heads of departments from London's secondary schools for discussions on coursework, assessment and curriculum issues.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is advised on curriculum issues by the National Curriculum Council and on assessment issues by the School Examinations and Assessment Council. It is for those bodies to respond to any requests for meetings put to them.

Educational Equipment (Exports)

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which Minister in his Department is responsible for promoting the export of educational equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: I am responsible within the Department for Education for educational exports. The Department provides support to companies wishing to export educational equipment, while the British Council has responsibility for promoting the export of education and training services, a field in which it is especially active.

Truancy

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement itemising the main details and purpose of each scheme he is funding under the grants for education support and training programme 1993-94 to deal with truancy; and if he will provide the same information for schemes whose proposals were presented to him which have not been funded.

Mr. Forth: Proposals submitted by local education authorities (LEAs) under the reducing truancy programme of the grants for education support and training (GEST) scheme 1993-94 took a variety of forms. Bidding was competitive, with priority being given to those LEAs where the problems were most severe. Individual bids were assessed according to the extent to which they:

clearly identified the scale of need at the schools designated;
demonstrated an innovative and well thought out strategy for tackling truancy/unauthorised absence; provided a clear statement of objectives, together with performance indicators against which the effectiveness of provision could be measured; made appropriate use of the experience and expertise of the Education Welfare Service; and were based on, and furthered, good practice.

On that basis, projects to a total value of £9·6 million were approved in 74 LEAs. Eight projects were rejected.

Schools Expenditure, Cambridgeshire

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the capital expenditure on state schools in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984 in (a) nursery schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the information requested.

Capital spending by Cambridgeshire LEA on schools in each year since 1984

£ thousands

	Nursery and primary schools	Secondary schools
1984-85	1,674	3,240
1985-86	2,127	3,947
1986-87	2,011	3,127
1987-88	5,699	3,686
1988-89	8,697	6,511
1989-90	11,582	9,045
1990-91	8,203	5,625
1991-92	8,758	11,929

Notes:
1. Figures for 1991-92 are provisional.
2. Capital expenditure on nursery and primary schools is not identified separately in the returns made by local authorities.
3. Spending on special schools is omitted.

Special Needs Education

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children of (a) primary age and (b) secondary age, (i) in each local authority area and (ii) in total have been statemented in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: Separate information on primary and secondary age children for whom a statement of special educational needs has been made is not available. Information on the numbers of children of all ages for whom statements of special educational needs were made for the first time during each of the calendar years 1987 to 1991, the latest year for which information is available, in each local education authority in England is given in the table.

Access Funds

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many higher education institutions have requested additional funds for their access fund from his Department during the present academic year.

Mr. Boswell: Access funds are allocated to higher education institutions through the funding councils at the beginning of the academic year. Institutions are aware that once allocations are made no additional funds are available.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the access fund for the University of Manchester in 1992-93.

Mr. Boswell: The Universities Funding Council allocated £365,270 to Manchester university, including £24,440 for the Manchester business school, as the university's share of the access funds for the academic year 1992-93.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the operation of the higher education institution access funds for 1992-93.

Mr. Boswell: It is too early to say how the scheme is progressing in the current academic year. The funding councils are asked to submit an annual report to the Department on the use of the funds by institutions after the end of each year.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 2 July 1992, Official Report, column 659, how many higher education institutions have none of their 1992-93 access fund moneys left.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally. We have advised institutions, through the funding councils, to consider holding back some of their access funds and to make arrangements to meet requests for assistance late in the academic year and during the summer vacation.

Student Loans

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many county court judgments were secured against students during (a) September 1992 to December 1992 and (b) January 1993 to February 1993 by the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Illiteracy

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much Her Majesty's Government have spent on tackling illiteracy in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: It is for local education authorities to determine their level of expenditure on adult literacy provision. Government funding over the last five years of the adult literacy and basic skills unit, which is the central organisation for advice and research into adult literacy, was as in the following table.

	£ million
1988-89	2·3
1989-90	2·4
1990-91	2·7
1991-92	3·0

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the number of (a) adults and (b) children who are (i) illiterate or (ii) functionally illiterate in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: There are very few adults in the United Kingdom who are completely illiterate in the sense that they cannot read or write at all. The adult literacy and basic skills unit, which advises the Government, estimates that 4 million adults in England and Wales have real difficulty coping with everyday tasks like filling in forms; and a further 1·5 million are reckoned to have difficulty with numerical skills. Such people are often described as being "functionally illiterate", although there is no standard definition of that term. ALBSU has however recently developed a common set of standards for communication and numeracy. These standards describe competence levels in reading, writing, number and oral communication skills. They have been mapped against both the national curriculum and the communication and numeracy units in the new general national vocational qualifications. Better information on the incidence and level of these difficulties will become available as these standards are more widely applied.

It is impossible to provide comparable figures for children, since the rate at which individual children acquire and master literacy skills varies. The testing and assessment arrangements being introduced under the national curriculum will in future provide parents and teachers with clear information about children's reading and writing standards.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research into the problems of illiteracy has been financed by his Department in each of the last five years; and at what cost.

Mr. Boswell: The adult literacy and basic skills unit, which is funded by the Government to advise on, and conduct research into, adult literacy, has conducted extensive research over the last five years. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with details of the cost of that research.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps are being taken to tackle the problem of illiteracy in British industry and commerce; and at what cost.

Mr. Boswell: The Department for Education, the Department of Employment and the Welsh Office are jointly funding an initiative on basic skills involving employers and training and enterprise councils. The basic skills at work programme has funded surveys of need and provision and is now funding pilot projects to explore new methods of providing vocationally-related basic skills training, for those in or out of work. The initiative will cost about £3 million over three years. In addition, many firms offer basic skills training independently.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment has been made of the cost to British industry and commerce of illiteracy in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The adult literacy and basic skills unit, which is funded by the Government, is currently conducting research into this question. The results of that research are expected to be available in early April.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

London Marathon

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what fee it is proposed to charge the organisers of the London marathon for use of (a) St. James's park and (b) Greenwich park for the London marathon in 1993; and what is the basis for the charge.

Mr. Key: The London marathon is being asked to pay £15,000 for the use of the royal parks in 1993. This charge is based on the area utilised and the period of the event.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his Department's policy in relation to the Sports Council's policy of sport for all; and how that policy is interpreted in relation to the London marathon.

Mr. Key: The Department supports the Sports Council's policy of sport for all. This is entirely consistent with charging a fee for use of the royal parks for the London marathon.

Greenwich Park

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions in the past five years a cultural, sporting or entertainment event has been held in Greenwich park which has been organised by a private, voluntary or commercial organisation, Government Department or other statutory body, apart from letting of sports pitches; what was the nature of the event in each case; what were the estimated additional costs to the Department of the Environment or the Department of National Heritage for each letting; what was the fee levied; and what was the basis of the charge.

Mr. Key: Apart from the London marathon, only minor local events have been held in Greenwich park. These minor events involved the Department in no additional costs and no charge was levied. For that reason, no records have been kept of the individual events.

National Lottery

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to ensure that there will be equal opportunities for disabled people when employees are recruited for the national lottery.

Mr. Key: The organisation licensed to run the national lottery will be a company in the private sector, bound by the terms of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958.

The Office of the National Lottery, headed by the Director General, will like other regulatory bodies be a non-ministerial Government Department. Its staff will be civil servants or engaged on conditions analogous to those of civil servants. The civil service is an equal opportunity employer and all applications for employment are considered on their merits.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what the total funds were for the national tourist boards in England, Northern Ireland, Wales and Scotland for the last five years; what the projected funds are for the next three years; if he will show those figures per head of adult resident population, in real terms at current prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The following table shows the funds provided to each of the national tourist boards over the last five years; the estimated outturn for the current year; planned totals for the next three years; and the amount spent per head of adult resident population in each year at current prices. Allocations to the national tourist boards reflect the differing circumstances and priorities in each country; direct comparisons are therefore misleading.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chlor-alkali Manufacture

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the effect of the reallocation of electricity costs, the new pool tariff, on chlor-alkali manufacture.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are in dialogue with large electricity users about electricity prices, and this issue is among those that are being considered by the coal review. Any proposals would need to benefit all customers with appropriate circumstances.

Coal Research Establishment

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for future funding of the Coal Research Establishment.

Mr. Eggar: The future funding of clean coal technology and the role of Coal Research Establishment in developing this technology is under discussion as part of our work on the coal review.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last visited the Coal Research Establishment.

Mr. Eggar: I have not visited the Coal Research Establishment. However, my chief scientific adviser on science and technology visited the establishment on 29 January 1993.

Export Licences

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans there are to harmonise the system of export licences across the European Community.

Mr. Needham: On 31 August 1992 the Commission of the European Communities adopted a proposal for the Council regulation on the control of exports of certain dual-use goods and technologies and of certain nuclear products and technologies.

The proposed regulation aims to provide a framework for common export controls to be applied by member states to dual-use and nuclear goods leaving the territory of the European Community, and for the harmonisation of export licensing systems. Member states are continuing to discuss Commission proposals in a Council high level working group set up for this purpose.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider introducing a system of blanket export licences on the line of that operating in the Netherlands.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom already operates a system of open general export licences—OGELs—which are similar to the global export licences issued in the Netherlands. An open general export licence is a general authorisation permitting the export of a range of controlled goods to a range of destinations without the need for prior application to the Department of Trade and Industry. Its use is subject to compliance with the conditions of the licence. There are currently eight open general export licences in force.

Corporate Communications plc

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the Public Relations Consultants Association about the collapse of Corporate Communications plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A letter on this subject has been received from the Public Relations Consultants Association. My officials replied to that letter on 1 March 1993.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action his Department is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with the additionality criteria for European Community structural funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what efforts his Department is making to account for European Community structural funds receipts transparently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Public expenditure arrangements take account of receipts from the structural funds when departmental programmes are set. My Department is responsible for providing public expenditure cover for forecast European regional development fund receipts for projects which fall within my Department's ambit. For the next financial year some £60 million of provision has been made, and in accordance with the agreement with the European Commission reached in February last year, this is reflected more transparently in the departmental report, which was laid in the House of Common's Library on 10 February 1993.

Pit Closures

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that miners working at the 21 pits in the coal review will not be financially disadvantaged by remaining in employment until the House has completed consideration of the closure proposals.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 March 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 February, Official Report, column 773.

Mineworkers (Redundancy)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the present enhanced redundancy scheme for mineworkers ceases; and what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about extending it.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 March 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Pennistone (Mr. Clapham) on 26 February, Official Report, column 773.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements he has made to provide expedited approval procedures for European regional development fund assistance for schemes to enable early approvals to be gained to provide an incentive for infrastructure schemes to be carried out by local authorities and other eligible infrastructure-providing bodies.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend has made no such arrangements. The possibility of ERDF assistance should be incentive enough to local authorities and other bodies to seek early approval for schemes which may qualify for grant. Applications must be appraised to ensure that they give value for money.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the United Kingdom's share of the European regional development fund for 1992-93 has been allocated.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: It is not possible to derive figures for the allocation of only the 1992-93 part of the United Kingdom's share of the European regional development fund, many of the programmes span longer periods.

Approximately two thirds of the United Kingdom's share of the fund for the present period of the regulations from 1989-93 has been allocated.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the negotiations with the European Community Commissioner for Regional Affairs in relation to the achievement of (a) transparency, (b) additionality and (c) sequential causality in the approval procedures for assistance from the European regional development fund from United Kingdom local authorities and other eligible bodies.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: In accordance with the appropriate Community regulations, receipts from the European regional development fund are taken into account in setting departmental expenditure programmes.

The Government will implement from the beginning of the next financial year new arrangements to improve the transparency of the public expenditure treatment of these receipts, as agreed with the Commission.

A number of meetings have taken place at official level to explain to the Commission progress on these new arrangements, which are at present being finalised.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with local authorities and their associations and other eligible infrastructure-providing bodies in relation to the impact of the approval of areas of Britain for European regional development fund objective 1 status on the availability of funds for areas with objective 2 status.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: None. it was only on 24 February that the Commission adopted a proposed list of objective 1 regions for the period 1994 to 1999 which included the Highlands and Islands and Merseyside, as well as Northern Ireland whose objective 1 status was confirmed by the European Council at Edinburgh. The final decisions on which regions will be eligible for objective 1 rests with the Council of Ministers in the context of the review of the structural fund regulations.

Carpet Trade

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the tariff levels of United Kingdom exports of carpets, headings 5702 and 5703, to (a) the United States of America, (b) South Africa, (c) Australia, (d) Turkey, including additional duties, (e) India, (f) Pakistan, (g) Thailand and (h) Malaysia together with any non-tariff barriers which apply and the tariff level for imports of that product from the same countries into the Community.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The tariff information is as follows:

Additional duties: 10 per cent. sales tax and 5 per cent. surtax
Duty imposed on imports into EC: 10·5 to 14 per cent.

Overseas Trade

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the net total direct expenditure in terms of assistance to exporters made by the Overseas Trade Board in the latest year for which figures are available; what was the net cost of the provision of overseas trade services in that year; and what percentage the latter figure represents of the former.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The total cost of the overseas trade services export promotion programme in 1991-92 was £173·4 millions gross, £127·3 millions of which was the cost (including overheads) of the staff involved (including FCO commercial staff overseas and export sections of Territorial Departments).

Direct expenditure on export promotion schemes and services was £46·1 millions gross (£27·9 millions net of receipts). Details are given in the annual report of the British Overseas Trade Board.

Takeover Bids

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many formal recommendations he has received from the current Director General of Fair Trading since his appointment; and how many have concerned hostile takeover bids for publicly quoted companies.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The Director General of Fair Trading has made recommendations in respect of 95 merger cases since his appointment. There is no agreed definition of a hostile takeover bid. However, I understand that there have been five cases involving publicly quoted companies where the management of the target company has recommended rejecting the bid.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the European Commission to provide the economic assessment of COM(92) 520 final on transport of radioactive substances in the European communities, as mentioned at paragraph 12 of explanatory memorandum 11035/92.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

As stated in the explanatory memorandum, the European Commission has been asked to provide an economic assessment. Its response has been that this is not a significant proposal which requires a cost compliance assessment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what action his Department is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with the additionality criteria for European Community structural funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what efforts his Department is making to account for European Community structural funds receipts transparently; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Article 9 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88 requires that the "increase in the appropriations for the Funds provided for in Article 12(2) of Regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88 has a genuine additional economic impact in the regions concerned and results in at least an equivalent increase in the total volume of official and similar (Community and national) structural aid in the Member State concerned".

Accordingly, our public expenditure arrangements take account of Community receipts from the structural funds when departmental programmes are set.

From the beginning of the next financial year, the Government will implement new arrangements agreed with the Commission to improve the transparency of the public expenditure treatment of European regional development fund receipts. Details of these new arrangements were set out in a written answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 30 June 1992 at column 526.

British Telecom (Shares Sale)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of advisers appointed to advise on the forthcoming sale by the Government of shares in British Telecom, specifying for each adviser the area of work and date of appointment.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the appointments made to date for the forthcoming BT share offer.

BT share offer—advisers appointed

Date of appointment	Company	Role(s)
30 November 1992	Ernst & Young	Financial consultant
8 December 1992	S. G. Warburg	Financial adviser Global co-ordinator Lead UK broker
15 December 1992	Linklaters & Paines	Legal advisers
15 December 1992	Brunswick Public Relations	PR/Marketing adviser
3 January 1993	Addison Design Company	Design consultants[1]
11 January 1993	Solid Solutions Associates	Financial consultant
25 January 1993	MORI	Market research
24 February 1993	WCRS	Advertising agency

[1] Appointed by Brunswick.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what month of 1993-94 he expects to offer for sale British Telecom shares currently held by the Government.

Mr. Dorrell: No decisions have yet been taken on either the timing of the next sale of shares in BT or the number of shares to be offered for sale.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which investment banks and brokers were invited by the Treasury to tender as advisers in the forthcoming sale by the Government of shares in British Telecom.

Mr. Dorrell: S. G. Warburg has been appointed as financial adviser, global co-ordinator and lead United Kingdom broker for the forthcoming BT share offer. The names of companies invited to tender for an appointment, but not subsequently appointed, are treated as commercially confidential.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what calculations he has made or plans to make to estimate the effect on (a) purchases of books and newspapers, (b) consumption of food and (c) purchase of children's clothes, by families on a regional, socio-economic and income basis of the imposition of VAT at various percentage rates.

Sir John Cope: Work carried out by the Institute for Fiscal Studies commissioned by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and Her Majesty's Treasury and completed in 1991 suggests an own price elasticity of −0·657 for leisure goods, which include books and newspapers; −0·856 for food; and −0·754 for clothing. These elasticities suggest that applying the standard rate of VAT to goods which are presently zero-rated would reduce the volume of sales by 9·8 per cent., 12·7 per cent. and 11·2 per cent. respectively. We are not aware of any reliable estimates of how these price elasticities vary according to region, socio-economic status or income.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent recommendations of the retail prices index advisory committee.

Mr. Lamont: I have decided to accept all the recommendations made by the committee in its report Cm 2142 on the treatment in the RPI of council tax and holidays as extended by the addendum Cm 2153 on the treatment of transitional relief. The report and the addendum were presented to the House and published on 21 January and 24 February 1993 respectively. The Central Statistical Office will implement the changes with effect from the RPI for February 1993.

Gross Domestic Product (Cornwall)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated per capita GDP figure for Cornwall for the latest available year; what is the comparable per capita GDP figure for areas of the United Kingdom which have been granted objective 1 status for EC support; and what is the latest available average per capita GDP figure for the whole European Community.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The European Commission has proposed that Northern Ireland, Merseyside and the Highlands and Islands region of Scotland be granted objective 1 status for the period 1994 to 1999, but the final decision is to be taken by the Council of Ministers in the context of the review of the structural funds regulations. GDP per head figures for Cornwall and the above regions are given below for the year 1989, the latest available on a consistent basis. Also provided is an index comparing these areas with the European Community average for the period 1988-90, on a "purchasing power" basis.

Gross domestic product per head

	£ per head 1989[1]	PPS/head, EC = 100 1988-89[2]
Cornwall	5,739	76
Northern Ireland	5,747	76

WALES

Waste Incineration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inspections have been undertaken in Wales (a) in total and (b) to waste incineration plants by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution during each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The inspectorate carried out 338 inspections in 1990-91, 657 in 1991-92 and 588, to date, in 1992-93. Of these, 13, 20 and 15, respectively, were undertaken at waste incineration plants.

Care and Repair Cymru

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the capital allocation for Care and Repair Cymru in each of the last two financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Care and Repair home improvement agency initiative provides help and advice on home improvements, maintenance and repairs for elderly and/or disabled owner-occupiers. There is no capital investment programme associated with the initiative.

The Department provides revenue funding to the initiative. Care and Repair Cymru received revenue support of £141,751 in 1990-91 and £111,429 in 1991-92.

Research

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the Research Council to secure improved representation of academics from Welsh institutions on research students awards committees.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. Each of the research councils has its own mechanism for distributing awards to students. My right hon. Friend has, however, asked the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales to establish effective working relations with the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and the individual research councils to ensure that the interests of the higher education sector in Wales are taken fully into account at all stages.

Primary School Classes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average class size in primary schools in Wales within each local education authority area during each of the last five years, expressed in average numbers and teacher-pupil ratios.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the average class size and pupil-teacher ratios in primary schools within each local education authority during each of the last five years is given in the following tables:

Table 1: average size of registered classes

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the annual cost of treatment for coronary heart disease in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not available centrally.

Public Libraries

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many public libraries have been open and operational in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of public library service points, which include mobile libraries, provision in hospitals and residential houses etc, as well as public library buildings are:

	Number
1979-80	807
1980-81	923
1981-82	966
1982-83	948

I am pleased to note the steady increase in the number of library service points in Wales.

Forestry

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for promoting the future development of forestry in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The forests and woodlands in Wales, and the industries they support, play a valuable role in maintaining rural communities. More than 4,700 people work in the forests, in the downstream industries and in the haulage of timber. Many hundreds more earn a living from associated services and tourism. Forests also make their contribution to a better environment and provide opportunities for countryside leisure and recreation.

I want to ensure that we manage our forests and woodlands well, that we find the most suitable locations to expand the forest area, and that we look at ways of adding value to our home-grown forest products.

I have therefore decided to set up a group of experts to examine these issues and to promote the future development of forestry in Wales. The group will bring together forestry, farming, environmental and development interests, under the chairmanship of the Forestry Commission's chief conservator for Wales. The terms of reference for the group—and a list of its members—have been placed in the Library of the House. The group will begin work shortly and I have asked it to report to me on its conclusions and recommendations by the spring of next year.

Roads

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends updating the information given in the 1992 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s."

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have today published the 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Royal Mail

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Attorney-General what recourse or protection is available against a person who, contrary to the repeatedly expressed wishes of the recipient, persists in sending letters to that recipient through the Royal Mail.

The Solicitor-General: I have no responsibility for the substance of the law relating to the use or abuse of the Royal Mail. An individual experiencing a problem should seek legal advice directed at the circumstances of the particular case.

HEALTH

Organ Donations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organ donations have been made in (a) each regional health authority and (b) each district health authority in (i) 1982, (ii) 1987 and (iii) the last 12 month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the numbers of cadaveric solid organ donors in 1982, 1987 and 1992 in England by regional health authority. Figures for individual district health authorities are not held centrally. The numbers of organs donated are considerably higher as many donors supply more than one organ.

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet representatives of the King's Fund to discuss funding levels for community care.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans to do so.

Food Safety

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific formal training environmental health officers are given in regard to food safety regulations.

Mr. Sackville: The most common route to qualification as an environmental health officer is a four-year honours degree in environmental health which has received accreditation from the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and which includes integrated practical training. The content, interpretation and application of food safety legislation is covered in detail, and a central theme on all courses is risk assessment, so that environmental health officers are able to assess whether action under the Food Safety Act 1990 and associated regulations is necessary to protect public health. In addition the Department of Health runs seminars for environmental health officers on risk assessment and the implementation of European Community legislation.

Abused Children

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will set up a monitoring unit in respect of abused children as advocated by the Warner committee; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We will be considering this recommendation from the Warner report in the light of the responses to the consultative process which ended on 28 February 1993.

Smoking-related Diseases

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost of treating patients suffering from smoking-related diseases and ailments in each year since 1989-90; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is available only for the costs of hospital admissions in 1988-89 and is taken from the Health Education Authority's report, "The Smoking Epidemic". This estimates the annual hospital costs for smoking-related disease in England and Wales to be £351 million (at 1990-91 prices).

Complementary Therapists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts are being taken by regional health authorities and family health service authorities to encourage awareness among general practitioners and the public of the availability of complementary therapists on the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: None. General practitioners are already aware that, under their terms of service, they are able to employ a wide range of staff, including complementary therapists where necessary, to assist them in the provision of general medical services. The range of services they provide are contained in the information leaflets they are required to make available to their patients. Family health services authorities are also required to make available local directories of the general practitioners in their area and the services they provide.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's latest estimate of the annual numbers of the public paying to see an alternative health practitioner.

Mr. Sackville: No information is held centrally on which to base such an estimate.

Social Workers

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of social workers currently practising are unqualified.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Redbridge Healthcare Trust

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the names of the chairman and non-executive directors of the Redbridge Healthcare Trust, the hours they will be required to work and the salaries they will be paid.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Chairman: Mr. Mike Smith.

Non-executive directors: Mr. Michael Faraway; Mr. Ismail Simjee; Mrs. Louise Hyams; Mr. Rod Budgett; Mrs. Mary Springham.

Trust chairmen are expected to devote between three and three and a half days a week and non-executive directors between two and three days a month to trust business.

They will receive annual remuneration of £19,285 (chairman) and £5,000 (non-executive directors).

Gene Patents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the policy of national health service laboratories about entering into agreements to pay fees in respect of gene patents;

(2) what advice she is giving in response to patent claims in relation to biotechnology intellectual property, with particular references to the cystic fibrosis gene;

(3) what is her policy in relation to licence fees for the use of polymerase chain reactions.

Mr. Sackville: The subject of intellectual property rights, including those for polymerase chain reaction and gene sequences, is under review.

Haemoglobin Testing

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been undertaken in relation to inner city areas of routine haemoglobin estimation by capillary sampling of children under five years using a haemoglobinometer.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not undertaken or funded any such studies. An expert sub-group of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy is currently reviewing all aspects of the weaning diet including the incidence and prevention of iron-deficiency anaemia in children in this age group.

The national diet and nutrition survey of pre-school children is at present collecting data on the dietary intakes and nutritional status of children in Great Britain aged 1½-4½ years, including haemoglobin levels.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much capital money her Department (a) has available and (b) has allocated for the provision of secure units for young people in England in 1992-93; and if she will provide a list of the establishments concerned and the sums allocated in each case;

(2) how much capital money her Department (a) made available and (b) spent on the provision of secure units for young people in England in 1992-93 and each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Yeo: We have made available £2 million in capital money for 1992-93 to fund new provision and upgrading and refurbishment of secure units for young people in England. A further £680,000 is available to meet the capital cost of providing additional secure places for juvenile remands.

The remaining information is shown in the tables.

London Ambulance Board

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the names of the persons who are, or who have been, since 1 January 1991, members of the London ambulance board; who appointed them and on what date; what was the relevant experience of each relating to their membership; what was the terms of office of each member; and to whom the board is completely accountable, other than to herself.

Mr. Sackville: South West Thames regional health authority has made the following appointments for the periods indicated to non-executive positions on the London ambulance service board since it was established in June 1990:

From 8 June 1990 for two years up to 7 June 1992
Mr. Kim Morrell
Mr. Stephen Miles
Mr. Victor Paige
Mr. Roderick Braithwaite
Mrs. Adrienne Fresko (resigned 31 March 1992)

From 8 June 1992 for the period to 31 August 1994
Mrs. Mary Spinks
Mrs. Janet Preston
Mrs. Joanne Cutmore (resigned 23 September 1992)

From 8 June 1992 for the period to 31 August 1996
Mr. Victor Paige
Mr. Roderick Braithwaite

The board is accountable to South West Thames regional health authority as the authority with the responsibility for managing the London ambulance service on behalf of the four Thames regional health authorities.

The relevant background and experience of London ambulance service board members, as a non-statutory body, is a matter for South West Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Professor Marian Hicks, chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, for details.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the date and manner of appointment of Mr. John Wilby as chief executive of the London Ambulance Board, (b) the method of advertising used for the post and (c) the number and positions of the persons attending the final interviews of the appointing body; and who was responsible for making the appointment.

Mr. Sackville: South West Thames regional health authority appointed Mr. John Wilby as chief executive of the London ambulance service on 1 August 1990 following a recruitment exercise for the post including a national newspaper advertisement, assessment and candidate selection. The final selection panel comprised Baroness Cumberlege, the chairman and Mr. Chris Spry regional general manager of South West Thames regional health authority, Mr. James Harris, then chairman of the London ambulance board, David Rennie, chairman of Harrow DHA and John Smale, personnel director of the brewing division of the Guinness Group.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when and on what authority the board of South West Thames regional health authority appointed the members and chairman, respectively, of the London ambulance board; what responsibilities were given to them; when and where they were published; and what reports of that board have been published in the public minutes of that authority since its creation.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service board is a non-statutory body established in June 1990 by South West Thames regional health authority which has responsibility for managing the London ambulance service on behalf of the four Thames regional health authorities. The responsibilities and reporting procedures of the London ambulance service board are a matter for South West Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may care to write to Professor Marian Hicks, chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, for further details.

Ambulance Crews (Overtime)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now make it her policy to ensure that all offers of voluntary overtime by ambulance crews that would fill gaps that would otherwise occur in scheduled rostering are not subject to budget restrictions.

Mr. Sackville: All national health service providers, including ambulance services, must provide services within the resources allocated to them. It is for individual ambulance services to manage overtime levels within the overall staffing budgets and to ensure that staff are rostered to provide services to the public.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the increase in prescription charges in each year since 1963; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is in the table. The prescription charge remains substantially less than the average total cost of a prescribed item to the national health service; only one in five prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors now attracts a charge, compared with two in five in 1979.

Prescription charge increases 1 January 1963 to 1 April 1993, in cash and real terms

Health Advisory Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget was allocated to the health advisory service for the financial year 1991-92 and 1992-93; what was the actual expenditure for 1991-92 and the estimated out-turn for 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The budget allocation for the health advisory service (HAS) in 1991-92 was £432,282, and the expenditure was £398,483; in addition to this the HAS had access to Departmental funds to pay for the secondment of personnel from health authorities and social services departments and £667,104 was spent on this in 1991-92. In 1992-93, the HAS budget included an allocation for secondments, and was set at £997,500; the estimated out-turn is £450,000.

SCOTLAND

Local Government (Staff)

16. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the numbers of people employed in local government in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The number of people employed by Scottish local authorities in September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, was 305,361.

Quarterly figures for local authority staffing are published jointly by the Scottish Office and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and are available in the Library.

Water Privatisation

17. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to come to firm decisions on his plans to privatise or franchise Scottish water.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend will take a decision on the future of water and sewerage services only after all responses to the consultation have been carefully considered. None of the options contained in the consultation paper has been ruled out.

30. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received to the consultation document on water and sewerage sources which were (a) opposed to privatisation/franchising and (b) in favour of full-scale privatisation/franchising; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: We are still analysing the many responses to the consultation paper and do not therefore have the figures requested by the hon. Member.

Drug Abuse

18. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of drug taking and drug dealing were reported in Scottish secondary schools in (a) 1985-86, (b) 1987-88, (c) 1990-91 and (d) 1991-92.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not collected in the form requested. However, the numbers of persons under 17 in Scotland dealt with for drug offences was 157 in 1990 and 226 in 1991. The equivalent figures for the earlier years requested are not readily available, but I shall write to the hon. Member with further information as soon as possible.

The figures I have given do not indicate whether or not the offence occurred on school premises.

River Tay (Flood Control)

20. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about a flood control scheme for the River Tay; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: There have been nine representations about a flood control scheme for the River Tay. Such a scheme would require a full investigation of the Tay catchment area and I am pleased to say that Tayside regional council is considering proposals for a study. We have already indicated to the council that we would be willing in principle to contribute to the study, and details of the council's proposals are awaited.

Local Government

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations he consulted with in Scotland while taking stock of measures to improve the future government of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I and my ministerial colleagues meet a wide range of organisations during the course of our duties and have taken the opportunity of listening to their views on constitutional issues.

Manufacturing Industry

22. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which five manufacturing industries have been the largest foreign earners in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart: According to the Scottish Council Development and Industry it carries out an annual survey of Scottish manufactured exports and this is the most comprehensive source of information available.

In each of the five years to December 1991, the five leading exporters among Scottish manufacturing industries have been, beginning with the largest: office machinery, food and drink, chemicals, electronics and mechanical engineering. The order has been unchanged over the five-year period.

Government of Scotland

23. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further stock he has taken on the future government of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Our review of constitutional arrangements is well advanced and I hope that an announcement about its findings will be made to the House shortly.

Community Care

24. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the formula to be used in April to distribute Department of Social Security resources in the new community care provisions in the Borders region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State made clear when the Department of Social Security transfer was announced in October 1992 that the distribution within Scotland would be reviewed after the first year of operation.

Salmon Farming

25. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the future of the salmon farming industry in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend and I receive regular representations about the future of the salmon farming industry, particularly recently concerning proposals to stabilise the salmon market. We recognise the importance of salmon farming for the highlands and islands of Scotland and have welcomed the industry's proposals to establish producer organisations. We have not, however, been able to agree to the proposed compulsory powers for such organisations.

Economy

26. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the STUC to discuss the Scottish economy.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend last discussed the Scottish economy with the STUC on 14 December 1992.

Youth Training Scheme

27. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many 16 to 18-year-olds in the Glasgow, Govan constituency were unsuccessful in their attempts to find a YTS place during 1992.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not available in the form requested.

Legal Aid

28. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what basis he has used for the assessment of civil legal aid expenditure for the financial year 1993-94; and if he will make a statement on proposed changes to eligibility.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend considers the forecasts supplied by the Scottish Legal Aid Board in the context of the public expenditure survey.

I set out the Government's revised proposals on eligibility for legal aid in Scotland in my reply of 17 February to the hon. Member for Ayr at column 226.

Water and Sewerage Services

29. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what submissions he has received from Scottish local authorities about the future administration of the water and sewerage services.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has received submissions from all the regional and islands councils, and from 42 district councils. These are being considered.

Stranraer-Carlisle (Communications)

31. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further improvements are planned for communications between Stranraer and Carlisle.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The recent network review of trunk roads in Scotland confirmed that the upgrading of the A75 has substantially eliminated the main operating difficulties on the route. However, the Government have plans for further improvements which emphasise safety and overtaking opportunities. I understand that ScotRail is investigating the possibility of restoring a short section of track at Ayr to allow the Stranraer-Carlisle service to run via Mauchline. This could reduce the present journey time between Stranraer and Carlisle by around 25 minutes.

Broadleaf Trees

32. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the ratio of broadleaf trees to conifers planted and to be planted in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Sir Hector Monro: One third of the total area of woodland planted in 1991-92 by the Forestry Commission, and by the private sector with the aid of Forestry Commission grants, was with broadleaved trees. This included the restocking of felled woodland. I expect the ratio of broadleaves to conifers to be similar in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Elderly People (Housing)

33. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further assessment he has made of the housing requirements of elderly people and people with disabilities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidelines on the provision of sheltered housing and housing for the disabled were issued to local authorities on 28 March 1991 in the circular "Housing and Community Care" and set out the recommened level of provision in each case. The authorities were also advised to set targets matching local circumstances and needs over an appropriate timescale.

Forestry

34. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to privatise Forest Enterprise.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government have no such plans.

Financial Services

35. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the financial services industry in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The financial and business services industry makes a substantial contribution to the Scottish economy. In employment terms it has grown by over 80 per cent. since 1979 to its present level of 220,000, representing 11 per cent. of all Scottish employees in employment. Over the past decade the industry's contribution to Scottish gross domestic product has grown from 9½ per cent. to 15 per cent. Funds under management at December 1992 stood at a record £103·4 billion. The industry is well placed to benefit from the opportunities of the single European market and I expect to see continuing strong growth in output in the years ahead.

Exports

36. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest Scottish export statistics.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Council Development and Industry published the results of its latest annual survey of Scottish manufacturing exports in November 1992. This is the most comprehensive source of information on Scottish manufactured exports.

In 1991 the value of Scottish manufacturing exports reached its highest ever level of £8·8 billion and this represented a 3 per cent. increase in current value.

Scotland exports more per head of population than the United Kingdom and, in 1991, the value of manufacturing exports for each Scottish worker was £23,000—some 19 per cent. above the United Kingdom figures.

Companies (Irvine)

37. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken against companies in Irvine which have moved on soon after accepting Government grants.

Mr. Stewart: Where companies have received regional selective assistance to assist projects in Irvine and these projects have ceased within the conditions period of the offer of assistance, the action taken has been to pursue recovery of grant paid.

Power Supply

38. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the chairman of Scottish Power to discuss the security of supply.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of Scottish Power from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

Minches (Shipping Safety)

39. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding shipping safety in the Minches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has recently received a number of representations regarding shipping safety in the Minches. These representations have been concerned primarily with the grounding of the MV Braer in Quendale bay, Shetland, in January. Responsibility for marine safety lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Victoria Infirmary, Glasgow

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet Greater Glasgow health board to discuss the future of the Victoria infirmary.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly meets representatives from all health boards. As regards Greater Glasgow, I am aware that the health board is conducting a review of all its acute and maternity services. The Victoria infirmary features as part of that review and my right hon. Friend looks forward to receiving the health board's recommendations in due course.

Education

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the allocations of further education capital and recurrent grant for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The allocation of capital and recurrent grant to the 43 further education colleges and Orkney and Shetland Islands councils is as follows:

Grant allocations 1993-94

[1] Includes £0·9 million for ongoing project.
[2] Capital expenditure dealt with through Section 94 allocation to local authority.
[3] An additional £0·8 million will be available to FE Colleges through the Training Credit pilot schemes.

The recurrent grant allocations derive from an analysis of historic budgets. Direct comparison with the position in 1992-93 is not possible because of the changed status of the colleges, their taxation liabilities, variations in income resulting, for example, from changes in higher education tuition fees and the different methods used by each education authority to allocate budgets.

In 1994-95 recurrent expenditure is planned to rise to £215 million and capital expenditure to £12·76 million. It is proposed to introduce a new student based funding methodology from 1994-95.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current target figures for students entering higher education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The Government do not set target figures for students entering higher education. It is for individual institutions to decide the number of students to admit to higher education courses in the light of the demand for those courses and the level of available resources. The expenditure plans set out in Cmd 2214 allow for the proportion of young Scots entering full-time higher education in the United Kingdom to remain roughly constant at its current level of about 34 per cent. for the next three years. Thereafter, the Government expect the proportion to rise to 40 per cent. before the end of the decade.

Student Accommodation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to compensate the student housing sector if Scottish Homes maintains its decision to withdraw funding for student accommodation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: No. Scottish Homes has not withdrawn funding for student accommodation. It has issued guidance on the relative priority to be attached to student accommodation projects compared with other housing needs. Scottish Homes has only very occasionally funded student accommodation. The impact of the guidance, in terms of housing for students, will therefore be minimal.

ENVIRONMENT

Country Sports

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the total income, tax revenues and jobs resulting from country sporting activities.

Mr. Maclean: I am aware of the recent report by Cobham Resource Consultants, produced on behalf of the standing conference on countryside sports, entitled "Countryside Sports—Their Economic and Conservation Significance." This report demonstrates the significance of country sports to the rural economy and we have noted its conclusions with interest.

The report estimates that total direct expenditure by organisers of and participants in country sports in Great Britain, amounted to some £1·4 billion in 1991, and provided for direct employment equivalent to 65,000 full-time jobs and indirect employment equivalent to 60,000 full-time jobs.

Clean Technology

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been undertaken by his Department to encourage European Community co-operation on the promotion of clean technology following the European Commission report "Industrial Competitiveness and Environmental Protection" of 1986.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission communication, reference number SEC(92)1986, was produced in November last year and discussed under the United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers on 24 November 1992. The Council warmly welcomed the communication and, inter alia, invited the Commission and member states to co-operate to encourage the development and diffusion of cleaner technologies. The Council of Environment Ministers in December welcomed the communication as a step forward in integrating environmental considerations into other policy areas. The Government look forward to further discussions under the Danish presidency.

Oil Spills

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the implications for United Kingdom policy of decisions undertaken at the emergency meeting of the joint European Environment and Transport Council in January to discuss oil spills.

Mr. Maclean: As the answer of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 28 January at column 796 made clear, no decisions were taken at the meeting which require any change in United Kingdom policy.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the actual expenditure on departmental publicity relating to housing matters in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The information in respect of publicity relating to housing matters (excluding staff costs) is as follows:

Year	Expenditure £
1987-88	362,252
1988-89	261,764
1989-90	1,540,580
1990-91	1,206,323
1991-92	1,392,074
1992-93	[1]1,399,500

[1] Forecast.

It is not possible to identify related staff costs. Expenditure figures for 1979-80 to 1986-87 are not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Energy Efficiency Office in testing materials used under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for the scheme's administering agency, the Energy Action Grants Agency.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the standard of installations carried out under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Action Grants Agency (EAGA) which administers the home energy efficiency scheme employs technical monitoring officers who make physical inspections of a proportion of all work carried out under the scheme.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to review the maximum levels of grant offered for home insulation under the home energy efficiency scheme;

(2) what plans he has to extend the range of improvements which can be grant aided to low-income households under the home energy efficiency scheme;

(3) what plans he has to increase the rate of loft insulation and draughtproofing in low-income households as part of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: There will be a small increase in the amount of grant available under the home energy efficiency scheme from some £35 million in the current year to £37·5 million in 1993-94. The scheme is intended to ensure that the greatest number of low income households can benefit from basic energy efficiency measures. I have no current plans to introduce changes to the scheme which would increase the average cost per household and thus reduce the number who could benefit.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being undertaken by his Department to encourage take-up of energy advice offered under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Neighbourhood energy action is currently undertaking research for the Energy Action Grants Agency on the delivery of energy advice under the scheme.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish pilot schemes to test the value of introducing energy efficiency measures for households in addition to those specified under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to provide funds under the home energy efficiency scheme on the basis of numbers of eligible households within a given area.

Mr. Maclean: No. Eligibility for grant under the scheme depends on the client being in receipt of a qualifying benefit. Allocations of funding to installers must take account of the amount of similar work already carried out in an area and the installer's ability to use the allocation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish energy audits on a sample of households which have been assisted under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The interim evaluation of the home energy efficiency scheme currently being carried out by the building research energy conservation support unit includes energy audits of a sample of households assisted by the scheme. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House when it is available.

Landfill

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recommendations have been made by the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment on landfill pricing; when their recommendations were made; what action has been taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment recommended in October 1991 that the price of landfill in the United Kingdom should be increased significantly to levels obtaining elsewhere in the EC. In our response in October 1991, we pointed out that the Environmental Protection Act 1990 was already having an upward impact on landfill prices. However, we agreed to re-examine landfill pricing and have undertaken a programme of work since then. On 9 February this year, I announced the publication of a consultants' report for the Department, "Landfill Costs and Prices: Correcting Possible Market Distortions". We have invited comments on the report by 26 March 1993. We will then consider whether to introduce one or more economic instruments for solid waste.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average gate fee for municipal solid waste disposed to landfill in the United Kingdom; and what information he has about gate fees obtaining in other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The report published by my Department last month, which examines the possibility of a levy on waste going to landfill, indicates that the costs of landfilling municipal solid waste in this country range from £5 to £30 per tonne. Comprehensive information is not held about gate prices for municipal solid waste disposal in other member states of the European Community. Prices in some countries are thought to be below the minimum figure for this country. Prices in those countries which have introduced a tax on waste going to landfill are considerably higher than the maximum for this country.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average gate fee for municipal solid waste disposal to landfill in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made as to whether that price fully reflects (a) the cost of compliance with the existing pollution control regime, (b) the cost of damage to the environment and harm to human health and (c) the position of landfill in the waste management hierarchy as the disposal route of last resort.

Mr. Maclean: The prices charged for municipal solid waste disposed to landfill are set by the operators of individual sites. In determining prices, operators will take account of the conditions imposed through the licensing regime which require measures to be taken in order to prevent disposal operations causing pollution or harm to human health.

Waste management in this country takes place within a legislative framework which ensures that each operation is strictly controlled so as to avoid pollution or harm to human health. Within this framework, market forces currently generally determine the disposal option for waste destined for final disposal. In the 1992 Environment White Paper, the Government indicated that they would in future make a presumption in favour of using economic instruments to achieve environmental objectives. As part of our programme of work to explore the use of economic instruments, we have recently published a report which examines the idea of placing a levy on waste going to landfill.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of municipal solid waste is disposed to landfill in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on practice in other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom produces about 20 million tonnes of municipal waste each year of which about 85 to 90 per cent. is currently disposed to landfill. Landfill has historically been the principal waste disposal route for most European countries. Other countries do not benefit from the geology that makes landfill an environmentally sound disposal option in the United Kingdom. Some are now reducing their dependence on landfill although it continues to be a major means of waste disposal for most states. Information produced by the statistical office of the European Communities shows that the proportion of municipal waste disposed to landfill by other member states is as follows:

	Per cent.
Belgium	50
Denmark	53
Germany	66
Greece	98
Spain	77
France	45
Ireland	100
Italy	31
Luxembourg	30
Netherlands	55
Portugal	28

EC Habitats Directive

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to implement the EC habitats directive by primary legislation.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are assessing what is necessary to implement the directive. Our proposals will be issued in due course.

Wildlife Sites

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of damage to wildlife sites from destruction or damage by developers subsequent to refusal of planning permission on nature conservation grounds have been brought to his attention in the years from 1989 to 1992.

Mr. Maclean: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. Over the last two years about 24 cases have been drawn to the attention of the Department.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the need for new powers to control wilful damage to wildlife sites of the kind occurring at Royate hill, Bristol.

Mr. Maclean: In the last 12 months 50 to 60 letters in support of proposals for some form of additional protection for sites of local wildlife importance have been received by the Department. The majority of these followed the unfortunate incident at Royate hill.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are available to local authorities to prevent damage to wildlife sites from destruction or damage by developers subsequent to the refusal of planning permission on nature conservation grounds.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities may use their powers to enter into management agreements with landowners, to declare local nature reserves and make byelaws to protect them. They may make tree preservation orders and article 4 directions to remove permitted development rights. They have a number of powers to acquire land by agreement or, where authorised, compulsorily but it is for the local authority to decide which power or powers are appropriate. Wild birds and certain species of animal and plant are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 or under specific legislation and local authorities and others have the power to prosecute offenders.

Nature Conservation Orders

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authorities on the need for nature conservation orders.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Local Government Commission to issue notes of guidance on local government reorganisation for Avon, Humberside, Cleveland and Gloucestershire.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission is due to publish its draft recommendations for local government structure in Cleveland and Durham by 9 May. Draft recommendations for Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset and for Humberside, Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire are due to be published by 13 and 20 June respectively.

Illegal Camping

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress on consultation on the law relating to illegal camping.

Mr. Baldry: I am considering carefully over 1,200 responses to this Department's consultation paper "Reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968". I have placed a list of the responses in the House of Commons Library, and copies of the responses are in the Department's library. An announcement about the way forward will be made as soon as practicable.

Eco-labelling

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the eco-labelling regulation has been followed by the United Kingdom Eco-labelling Board in its development of criteria for eco-labels; and if he will set out the consultations the board has had with interest groups and the assessment it has made of the full life cycle ecological impact of products.

Mr. Maclean: I have no reason to believe that the United Kingdom Eco-labelling Board has not followed the requirements of the EC regulations in its development of criteria for eco-labels.

As the board has responsibility for operational aspects of the scheme I have asked it to write to my hon. Friend setting out the consultations it has carried out with interest groups with information on the assessments they have made of the full life cycle ecological impacts of the product groups.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to subject the eco-labelling scheme to a full cost-benefit analysis to establish if the environmental improvements achieved are consistent with the time and money being invested.

Mr. Maclean: We shall evaluate the effectiveness of the policy as we do with all new policy initiatives to ensure that it meets the objectives set and provides value for money.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what reasons underlie the targeting by the United Kingdom Eco-labelling Board of hairsprays, deodorants, and hair styling aids for eco-labels; what plans he has to include furnishings, textiles, hi-fi equipment and other products with known environmental impacts; and if he will make a statement on how product categories for new eco-labels will be selected in future;

(2) what progress is being made with the European eco-labelling scheme; and which product categories he expects to be finalised for launch in June.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom Eco-labelling Board has been established to administer and promote the European Community eco-labelling scheme nationally and has responsibility for dealing with the operational aspects of the scheme. I have therefore asked the board to reply to my hon. Friend direct.

Council Houses

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each local authority (a) the amount spent on council house repairs and maintenance, (b) the number of council-owned properties and (c) the average spent on repairs and maintenance per council-owned property, for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Sir George Young: I have deposited a copy of tables showing the information requested by the hon. Member in the Library of the House. The amounts shown in the tables relate to revenue expenditure on repairs and maintenance and do not include expenditure on major repairs charged to capital.

Norbreck Parade, London

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in the report of the inspector in relation to the appeal held on 3 and 11 February at Ealing town hall in relation to the creation of an access from the north circular road to Norbreck parade, London NW10.

Mr. Baldry: The appeal has been recovered for the Secretary of State's decision.

Local Government Employees

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed full time and part time in local government in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table for each authority in Cambridgeshire. Totals have not been given because data for some authorities are not available centrally.

Inland Bathing Waters

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inland bathing waters as required by article 1 of the EC water quality directive 76/160 he has designated.

Mr. Maclean: So far, no inland waters have been identified as within the scope of the bathing water directive.

Norfolk Beaches

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require the National Rivers Authority to reinstate the programme of tests for enteroviruses on all Norfolk beaches in the current year.

Mr. Maclean: No. It is not a requirement of the bathing water directive to test for enteroviruses at all bathing waters.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons the National Rivers Authority discontinued testing for enteroviruses on all but two Norfolk beaches in 1992.

Mr. Maclean: In accordance with the requirements of the bathing water directive, bathing waters which failed the directive's coliform standards in 1991 were sampled by the National Rivers Authority for enteroviruses in 1992. Only two Norfolk bathing waters failed the coliform standards in 1991.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with the additionality criteria for European Community structrual funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department is responsible for providing public expenditure cover for forecast ERDF receipts for local authority other services block schemes, for those non-departmental public bodies, agencies and charities which fall within my Department's ambit, and for privatised water companies. Provision for some £176 million has been made for 1993-94 as shown in the Department's annual report, which was laid in the House of Common's Library on 10 February 1993.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of revenue support grant per inhabitant for (a) Ashfield, (b) Bassetlaw, (c) Broxtowe, (d) Gedling, (e) Mansfield, (f) Newark and Sherwood, (g) Nottingham, (h) Rushcliffe, (i) Westminster, (j) Wandsworth and (k) the City of London for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The level of revenue support grant per head of resident population for the authorities requested is given in the table:

Local authority	Revenue Support Grant per head 1992-93 £	Revenue Support Grant per head 1993-94 £
Ashfield	267·19	16·98
Bassetlaw	285·41	31·14
Broxtowe	264·73	15·45
Gedling	275·29	19·92
Mansfield	279·49	26·67
Newark and Sherwood	286·69	37·40
Nottingham	329·40	83·43
Rushcliffe	257·90	12·22
Westminster	958·85	802·79
Wandsworth	714·59	619·18
City of London	10,771·14	11,225·31

The figures for the two years are not comparable since revenue support grant for the year 1993-94 is to be paid direct to each billing and major precepting authority, whereas in 1992-93 it was paid into the collection fund administered by the charging authority on behalf of all tiers of authority in the area.

Shudehill Developments Ltd.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the chairman of Shudehill Developments Ltd. in regard to the proposed retail development at Dumplington in Greater Manchester; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received a letter from Mr. Melmoth only last week. Mr. Melmoth argues that the results of a study commissioned by his company show that, should the Dumplington shopping centre be allowed to proceed, the future of Manchester city centre as a regional shopping venue would be under very serious threat and the shopping development which his company proposes to develop at Shudehill might no longer be viable.

Mr. Melmoth's letter is being considered alongside the other representations we have received about Dumplington, about which we expect to make an announcement very shortly.

London Boroughs (Debt)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he proposes to make available to London boroughs and the Common Council during 1993-94 in respect of the extra costs due to his decisions on housing revenue account subsidy in respect of debt from the former Greater London Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1993, c. 283-84]: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently contemplating the recovery of the amounts of housing subsidy paid in connection with deemed debt prior to 1 April 1990. Were he to recover such subsidy in any case, he intends to issue capitalisation directions and supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) to assist the authorities concerned.

DEFENCE

C-130J Aircraft

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the percentage British input to the proposed C-130J aircraft to replace the Hercules fleet.

Mr. Aitken: The C-130J is one of the options being considered as a replacement for the existing RAF Hercules fleet. It is a new development of the Hercules aircraft being designed by Lockheed as a private venture. Several British companies are bidding as sub-contractors and I was pleased to hear recently that Dowty would be providing the propellers. However, this is a matter for Lockheed. The percentage of United Kingdom work content is one of the factors to be taken into account when bids are eventually sought.

Civil Airline Research

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions have been made in the last five years from his departmental budget towards research and development costs of civil airlines.

Mr. Aitken: My Department makes no contributions towards the R and D costs of civil airlines. However, the Defence Research Agency undertakes a number of generic research programmes, jointly funded by the MOD and the DTI, of relevance to civil as well as military aircraft applications; these have a current value of £40 million, of which the MOD will contribute £27 million.

Electronic Supplies Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the dispute between his Department and JNES engineering company; whether he will investigate difficulties met by other engineering companies in fulfilling orders for identical components; what assessment he has made of the extent to which problems are attributable to the designs provided by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has received a number of representations on this subject. The issues involved have been fully investigated and were considered and settled at an arbitration hearing in 1990.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

French Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has made to (a) the French Government and (b) the European Commission about the legality, and effects on competition, of the £33·8 million of aid provided to the French fishing industry and its effects on fair competition;

(2) what proposals he has to consult the fishing industry with a view to providing support to it equivalent to the subsidised loans and emergency aid made available to the French industry by the French Government;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect of the emergency aid given to the French fishing industry on the extent of French fishing within British waters as designated under the Fishing Limits Act 1976.

Mr. Curry: I have asked the French Government to supply information about the reported aid package for fishermen, in the course of pressing them for action in relation to the recent intolerable attacks on United Kingdom fish exports. We have also pressed the Commission to seek detailed information on this aid, so that it can discharge its responsibility to conclude whether it is compatible with the provisions of the treaty. I have no plans to consult the industry about the provision of similar aid in United Kingdom.

In the absence so far of fuller details, it is not possible fully to assess the effect of the aid. However, the vast bulk of the aid does not appear to take the form of grant but of loans to assist with the servicing of existing loans. The rights of French vessels to fish in United Kingdom waters are unaffected by the aid package, as they are strictly controlled by annual quota allocations and the rules of the common fisheries policy.

Correspondence

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the guidelines are for the average time it should take his Department to answer hon. Members' correspondence; what the average time has been, in each month, for the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: This Department's target is for Ministers to reply within 21 days of receipt to letters from hon. Members and noble Lords. The percentage of letters replied to within this deadline in each month of 1992 is as follows:

	Per cent.
January	70
February	81
March	89
April	93
May	93
June	89
July	89
August	71
September	74
October	84
November	78
December	60

We do not hold information on the average time taken to reply to Ministers' correspondence.

Vegetables

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to encourage the retention of less common varieties on the national approved list for vegetables.

Mr. Curry: The Department has, in conjunction with the French authorities, put forward a proposal to the EC Commission's standing committee on seeds and propagating material for agriculture, horticulture and forestry which would have the effect of relaxing current controls over the sale to the amateur gardener of small packets of seeds of traditional vegetable varieties. This proposal is currently under consideration by the standing committee.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague), of 15 February, Official Report, columns 91-92, what were the voting figures recorded in the meeting of the Agriculture Council held between 9 and 13 February.

Mr. Curry: At the meeting of the Agriculture Council in question a vote was taken on the proposed arrangements for bananas in the single market. Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands voted against the proposal; all other member states voted in favour.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Railways

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 February to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley), Official Report, column 19, if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultants' report on the scope for introducing a private element into the management and operation of Northern Ireland Railways.

Mr. Atkins: No. Separately from this report, the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company has recently submitted the findings of a study it had commissioned into the delivery of public transport services in Northern Ireland. It may take some time to reach firm conclusions and it would be premature, therefore, to place a copy in the Library.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firms were registered with the Fair Employment Commission on 6 February 1990; and how many of these firms had supplied their review of employment practices by 6 February 1993.

Mr. Atkins: On 6 February 1990 the Commission registered 1,569 private concerns. While every registered concern is required to conduct a review of its employment composition and practices at least once every three years, there is no statutory requirement to supply a copy of its review report to the commission.

Murders

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table of (a) the number of murders committed, (b) the number of persons charged with murder and (c) the number of persons convicted of murder in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and the current year; and for each of those years how many of the persons (i) charged and (ii) convicted actually operated the means of committing the murder.

Mr. Mates: The available information is as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	[1]1993
Number of murders committed	111	67	71	114	108	11
Number of persons charged with murder[2]	23	31	18	38	38	n/a
Number of persons convicted of murder	27	15	22	27	26	3

[1] Up to 31 January 1993.

[2] The figures provided in the above table relate to all murders. However statistics on the number of persons charged with murder are available only in respect of scheduled offences of murder.

Information in respect of (i) and (ii) as to the extent of each individual's involvement in the murder is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Non-domestic Property Rates

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will introduce legislation to reform the rating of non-domestic property in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce a general revaluation on non-domestic property in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to review the valuation of non-domestic property for rating purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: There are no present plans to change or replace the existing arrangements for the rating of the non-domestic sector in Northern Ireland. The case for a revaluation is kept under review and any plans would, as in the past, be announced well in advance.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals against the rateable value of (a) non-domestic property as a whole and (b) licensed premises have been heard in each year since 1976.

Mr. Mates: Information is available only from 1986-87 and then only in respect of the total number of all appeals, including domestic, decided by the Commissioner of Valuation. It is only possible to distinguish non-domestic property and licensed premises appeals from 1991-92 onwards.

The total number of all appeals decided by the Commissioner in each year was as follows:

Year	Number
1986-87	959
1987-88	1,005
1988-89	1,140
1989-90	1,105
1990-91	874
1991-92	702
[1]1992-93	539

The figure for 1991-92 includes approximately 386 non-domestic appeals of which eight related to licensed premises and that for 1992-93 includes approximately 302 non-domestic appeals of which 14 related to licensed premises.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the valuation of non-domestic property in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The more recent representations made about the valuation of non-domestic property in Northern Ireland have mainly concerned individual properties and circumstances affecting the quantum of assessment and distinguishment of the valuation for either derating or exemption from rates.

A number of representations with more general application have been made by district councils about the valuation of municipal leisure centres and residential and nursing homes. Representations have also been made on behalf of the retail licensed trade about problems associated with the method of valuation of licensed premises.

Manse Road, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints he has received about conditions on the surface of Manse road, Fourwinds, Castlereagh; what is the source of mud at this location; and what action he has taken to improve conditions on this stretch of roadway.

Mr. Atkins: No complaints have been received in the past 18 months. While mud may occasionally be deposited on this particular stretch of road from traffic accessing an adjacent housing development, the developer is aware of the need to keep the road clean.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the payments of compensation for miscarriages of justice made in Northern Ireland under section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 or ex gratia from public funds indicating, in each case, the period of imprisonment in respect of which the payment was made.

Mr. Mates: Since section 133 came into operation, the right to compensation under that provision has been acknowledged in three cases. In none has the full amount yet been assessed, although interim payments on account —not specifically related to the period of imprisonment —have been made. No ex-gratia payments of this nature have been made from public funds over the period.

Life Sentences

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what grounds a life sentence prisoner may be released prior to the standard 10-year review.

Mr. Mates: A life sentence prisoner may be released at any time at the discretion of the Secretary of State. In practice release before 10 years in custody may take place only where exceptional circumstances exist relating to the crime itself and the offender's role in it; on medical grounds; or where the prisoner has given significant assistance to the authorities which has put his/her life in danger.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of any life sentence prisoners released in the past six years prior to the standard 10-year review, the dates of such releases, the grounds for each release and the respective times served.

Mr. Mates: Seven such prisoners have been released on licence during this period: one in 1988 after six years; one in 1990 after eight years; four in 1991 after six, seven, eight and nine years respectively; and one this year after seven years. Those released had served an appropriate time to mark their offences. With the exception of those released after eight years in 1990 and nine years in 1991, the period served for retribution took into account significant assistance to the authorities. It would not be appropriate to give the names of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements exist to grant early release to life sentence prisoners in exchange for information and to assist such persons with relocation; and whether final decisions on such matters are taken at ministerial level.

Mr. Mates: A reduction in the retributive period may be given to those serving life sentences in exchange for information, based on the quality and quantity of the information provided; its accuracy; the willingness of the informant to confront those apprehended on the strength of his/her evidence; and the degree to which the informant and his/her family are put at risk of reprisal. All such decisions are taken by Ministers. Such individuals are released into the protection of the police.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the respective criteria for life sentence reviews applied by the Life Sentence Review Board, judges and the Secretary of State or Minister.

Mr. Mates: Life sentence cases are reviewed in order to assess whether a sufficient period has been served to mark the gravity of the offence and whether the risk of reoffending is remote. These criteria are applied by the board, the judiciary and Ministers.

Breath Tests

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many breath tests were carried out over the Christmas and new year period 1992-93 in Northern Ireland; how many of these proved positive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 1 March 1993]: During the period 19 December 1992 to 1 January 1993 a total of 156 persons were breath tested; 29 of these (18·6 per cent.) were found to be over the legal limit.

The percentage of tests which proved positive has fallen slightly since last year and maintains the downward trend of the last few years. However, it is still unacceptably high.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) men and (b) women, convicted of living on the earnings of prostitution or exercising control over a prostitute, have been sent to prison in each year since 1989; and what was the period of imprisonment imposed in each case.

Mr. Jack: Information for the Metropolitan police district, including the City of London, and England and Wales is given in the table.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the current system of inspection in identifying breaches of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the inspection system is adequate to check and monitor the current work of licence holders and conditions in designated establishments.

Police (Encrypted Radios)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 144, how many police forces currently use encrypted radios; and what assistance his Department gives to police forces in obtaining such equipment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Thirty-eight police forces in England and Wales have digitally encrypted radios for use on specialist operations. In addition, 19 police forces have purchased an analogue speech privacy device which gives a lower level of security than digitally encrypted radios but can operate with existing radio equipment. The Home Office has provided financial and engineering support for the development and trial of this new equipment and has negotiated favourable purchasing arrangements with suppliers on behalf of the police service.

Breath Tests

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were breath tested by the police in each region during the 1991-92 and 1992-93 drink-drive campaigns; and how many tests were positive.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Association of Chief Police Officers has collected figures for the number of screening breath tests required and the number of positive results in each police force area between 19 December 1991 and 1 January 1992 and between 19 December 1992 and 1 January 1993. These are given in the following table:

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will issue a consultation document on private wheel clamping.

Mr. Jack: A consultation paper on wheel clamping on private land in England and Wales was published on 23 February 1993.

Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. They have also been sent direct to all hon. Members, to individuals and groups that have already expressed an interest and to others with an identifiable interest in any of the options discussed in the paper. Copies of the document may also be obtained free of charge by writing to C4 Division, Home Office, Room 339, 50 Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT.

The document requests that observations of both fact and opinion should reach the Home Office no later than the end of May.

Race Relations

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations the Minister of State has received from the chief executive of Manchester city council about the proposed reduction in grant paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966; what reply he is sending; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received a letter dated 10 February. In my reply, dated 26 February, I reaffirmed that the Government remain firmly committed to the reduction of racial disadvantage; that section 11 grant continues to play an important role in our programme; that we regret that, due to the general economic circumstances, it is not possible to sustain throughout the next three years the level of expenditure that had earlier been planned; and that we are anxious to work closely with local authorities and others to ensure that members of ethnic minorities derive maximum benefit from the substantial amount of funding which is available.

Mrs. Khanum Jan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is to be taken on the application by Mrs. Khanum Jan (Ref.: J244929) to be granted indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The immigration department wrote to the hon. Member on 9 February confirming that the application had been granted and seeking assistance in contacting Mrs. Jan. Three attempts to post her passport to her had proved unsuccessful, apparently because she had changed address. We were finally told the new address on 25 February and returned the documents the same day.

Offenders (Staffordshire)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders in Staffordshire were (a) under 18, (b) under 21 and (c) under 25 years in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Information for 1991 on the number and percentage of known offenders by age group is given in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions have been issued to benefits agencies in the past year about refusing income support under the deprivation of capital regulations to those paying off part or all of their mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 2 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what instructions have been issued to benefits agencies in the past year about refusing Income Support under the deprivation of capital regulations to those paying off part of or all of their mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

It may help if I explain that claims to Income Support are decided in the first instance by adjudication officers. If a customer is dissatisfied, they may appeal against the decision to a Social Security Appeal Tribunal. Further appeal may also be made to a Social Security Commissioner. These authorities carry out their functions independently, consequently, no Government Minister or Departmental official is able to comment on the decisions they make or intervene in matters for which they are responsible.

Guidance on the treatment of capital and deprivation of capital is provided in the Adjudication Officers Guide. I can confirm that staff in the Benefits Agency offices have been reminded of the provisions of existing legislation and guidance available to them regarding deprivation of capital.

These reminders were issued in the form of circulars from the Benefits Agency Central Services and Central Adjudication Services. There has been no change in the treatment of capital or deprivation of capital, in Income Support Law, in the past year.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael Bellinger

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to make a decision on the application by Mr. Michael Bellinger (NI No. YB 99 28 98 A) of 2 Holman way, Ivybridge, for industrial injury benefit; and why there has been a delay in his appeal.

Mr. Scott: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 2 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when he expects to make a decision on the application by Mr. Michael Bellinger (NI No. YB 99 28 92 A) of 2 Holman Way, Ivybridge, for industrial injury benefit; and why there has been a delay in his appeal.

I am pleased to tell you that Mr. Bellinger's appeal has already been listed and is due to be heard by the Medical Appeal Tribunal later this month. The Independent Tribunal Service telephoned Mr. Bellinger on 25 February to arrange a date for his appeal hearing. Mr. Bellinger's wife took the call and agreed the date with ITS. I would like to point out that Adjudication Officers and the Independent Tribunal Service carry out their duties independently of the Department and consequently neither Government Ministers nor the Department can intervene in matters for which they are responsible.

There does not appear to have been any undue delay on the part of the Benefit's Agency in dealing with Mr. Bellinger's appeal. I have written to you separately and in greater detail about this matter.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also appear in the Library.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill [Lords].

Mr. Scott: We share the Bill's aim of eliminating discrimination against disabled people but we believe this Bill will result in extensive litigation and additional costs for business and taxpayers. The aim is best achieved by programmes of education, persuasion and practical help, backed up, where necessary, by targeted legislation.

Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of taxpayers who receive (a) family credit, (b) housing benefit, (c) community charge benefit, (d) all three benefits and (e) at least one of those three benefits.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Couples who claim family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit are treated as a single unit. Therefore, the numbers given are in terms of taxpaying households rather than individual taxpayers.

Number of households in receipt of benefit	000's
Family Credit	221
Housing Benefit	277
Community Charge Benefit	471
All three benefits	19
At least one of the benefits	704

Notes:
1. Figures in the table show the position at May 1990, the latest available date for all benefits.
2. As at July 1992 the number of taxpaying households receiving Family Credit was 282,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Crypt

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 1022, if he will seek to arrange for the Crypt, St. Mary's Undercroft, to be licensed for marriages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Chapel of St. Mary Undercroft is not registered for marriage ceremonies of any denomination, as I indicated in my letter to the hon. Member for Bradford, West which I quoted in the House last week. However, I regret that in one respect the information which I gave to the hon. Member may inadvertently have been misleading. I have subsequently been advised that it is possible for a marriage to take place in the Chapel according to the rites of the Church of England if the Archbishop of Canterbury provides a licence under the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533. As to the possibility of registering the Chapel for marriages in the future, that would be a matter for the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker and I have drawn the hon. Member's question to their attention.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Figures

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to review the procedure by which the unemployment figures are recorded and published.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans to change current procedures for recording the unemployment figures derived from the claimant count and from the labour force survey. If there are any changes to publication arrangements these will be announced in advance, as usual.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the changes that have been made to the way unemployment figures have been calculated since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 496.

Unemployed Building Workers

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each job title the number of building workers registered as unemployed in (a) the Bolton-Bury travel-to-work area and (b) the north-west region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The most recent estimates from the summer—June to August—1992 labour force survey show that in the north-west region there were 16,000 people unemployed on the internationally agreed ILO definition who were previously employed in building trades. No information is available from the survey for travel-to-work areas.

The regional estimates for unemployed people by individual building occupations are all below 10,000.

Redundant Claimants

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundant people in receipt of an occupational or personal pension aged over 55 years are receiving reduced unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms. Joan Walley, dated 3 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of redundant people in receipt of an occupational or personal pension aged over 55 years who are receiving reduced unemployment benefit. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately we do not collect the information you requested and it could only be obtained at disproportionate cost by examination of each of our client records. However, an analysis of the claims so far transferred to the new computer system we are currently introducing throughout the country, indicates that almost 4 per cent. of our clients, who are in receipt of unemployment benefit at full or reduced rate, have declared that they are in receipt of an occupational or personal pension. It is not possible to say how many of these are over 55 years of age.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Gas Extraction Industry

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what figures she has for the number of jobs dependent on the gas extraction industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates of employees in the extraction of mineral oil and natural gas industry are available from the census of employment. The most recent United Kingdom figure, from the September 1989 census is 43,000. Estimates for 1991 will be published in April 1993. The Department has no figures for people indirectly employed in any industry.

Defence-related Industries

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research her Department has commissioned or published on levels of recruitment of former workers in defence-related industries and the types and levels of skill available.

Mr. McLoughlin: In response to the July 1990 Defence White Paper "Options for Change", the Employment Department commissioned the Institute of Manpower Studies to research employers' experiences of the employment of ex-services personnel.

Women's Issues

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list (a) the women, and the organisations they are associated with and (b) the women's groups, who have been invited to advise or inform the ministerial sub-committee on women's issues.

Mr. McLoughlin: My noble Friend Baroness Denton, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and ministerial sub-committee member, is also co-chair of the Women's National Commission and has the responsibility of, among other things, informing the ministerial sub-committee about issues of concern to the WNC.

Youth Training

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of youth training scheme graduates have gained employment after the end of the scheme for each year since 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following table.

Youth Training: Great Britain
April 1988 to March 1992
Trainees gaining employment after completing agreed training

Period of leaving	Gained employment after completing YT[1] (per cent.)
April 1988 to March 1989	86

Training Schemes

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken part in Government-sponsored training schemes in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984; and what those figures represent as a proportion of the total number of people registered as unemployed in Cambridgeshire in each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available in the form requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Costs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost of an unemployed person in lost tax receipts and benefit payments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: For Great Britain in 1992-93, total unemployment-related benefits cost £9·3 billion spread across 2·74 million unemployed people—an average cost of an unemployed person of just under £3,400 per person per year. We do not consider that calculation of lost tax receipts is appropriate.

Fixed-term Contracts

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees were on fixed-term contracts in each year since 1988 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) in each standard region; and if she will express the national figure as a percentage of all employees.

Mr. McLoughlin: Available information for the United Kingdom and regions based on estimates from the spring —March to May—1992 labour force survey, are given in the following table. Comparable estimates for previous years are not available.

Employees on fixed term contracts, by region spring 1992 (not seasonally adjusted)

Employment Schemes

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average amount spent per person on (a) employment training, (b) youth training, (c) the job interview guarantee scheme and (d) job clubs for each year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average amount spent per person on employment training, youth training, the job interview guarantee scheme and job clubs in Great Britain, for each year for which figures are available is as follows:

Programme	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
ET	n/a	5,540	5,404	5,384	6,014

Notes:
(1) Actual information later than 1990-91 is not available because average length of stay calculations are based on entrants to ET and EA in a given period and it is necessary to wait until all entrants in a period have left the programme.
(2) Employment Action began on 1 October 1991.
(3) The 1992-93 unit cost is for Employment Action in the programme's first six months of operation when the programme was building up.
(4) All figures are for Great Britain. These programmes are delivered in Scotland and Wales by Scottish Office and Welsh Office respectively.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom have been registered unemployed for more than five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In January 1993 in the United Kingdom, there were 118,300 claimants who had been unemployed for more than five years. This represents a fall of 158,270, or 57 per cent., from the peak level in July 1987.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are unemployed but ineligible for unemployment benefit because they had previously been self-employed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available. There is no rule to prevent a previously self-employed person from registering as unemployed or claiming benefit, although the self-employed are normally excluded from entitlement to unemployment benefit because they fail to satisfy the national insurance contribution conditions. Nevertheless income support is available for unemployed people whose income and savings fall below specified levels.

Sellafield (Radioactive Leak)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what quality factors are normally used by health physics staff at nuclear installations; what alterations were made in them during the recent radioactive leak at Sellafield; and for what reason.

Mr. McLoughlin: The quality factors normally used by health physics staff at nuclear installations for radiological protection purposes are:

	Factor
For 'x' rays, gamma rays and beta particles	QF = 1
For 'thermal' neutrons	QF = 2·3
For 'fast' neutrons	QF = 10
For alpha particles, multiple charged particles	QF = 20

Since different types of radiation have different biological effects, absorbed doses have to be multiplied by a "quality factor" before they can be expressed on a common "dose" scale for radiation protection purposes —that is, put in terms of the "dose equivalent". No alterations were made to them in assessing the potential dose of radiation to a member of the public during the recent releases of radioactivity from the B204 and B6 stacks at Sellafield.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Somalia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of whether the Serbian Government breached United Nations Security Council resolutions by secretly selling arms to Somalia via the federal directorate of supply and procurement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any sale of arms by Serbia to Somalia would breach United Nations Security Council resolutions 757 and 733. We are aware of press reports of such deals, but we have no evidence to substantiate these.

Hong Kong

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the position reached in discussions with the Chinese Government on Hong Kong electoral issues.

Mr. Goodlad: The Governor of Hong Kong plans to make a full statement to the Legislative Council in Hong Kong on 5 March of the position reached with the Chinese side over electoral arrangements in Hong Kong. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

HEALTH

NHS Staff

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent (a) nursing, (b) midwifery, (c) management and (d) clerical and administrative staff were employed by the national health service in each district health authority of the Oxford regional health authority in each year since 1983.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures are shown in the table. Many of the functions undertaken by senior nursing and professional staff are now reflected in the national health service management figures. This means it is unreliable to compare numbers within groups between the years shown in the table. Management still accounts for less than 1·8 per cent. of the NHS work force and the ratio of clinical to support staff has never been higher.

Environmental Health Prosecutions

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prosecutions were brought by environmental health officers in each of the last five years; and what percentage of (a) cases and (b) contested cases resulted in convictions.

Mr. Sackville: Information prior to 1991 is not held centrally.

During 1991, environmental health officers brought 1,143 prosecutions in connection with hygiene and microbiological contamination. In addition, there were 691 prosecutions relating to chemical contamination and extraneous matter, some of which related to food safety and some to quality. The available information does not show whether cases were successful or contested.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received on the subject of continued tobacco advertising; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received a number of representations. The Government will consider all representations received in keeping under review the need for further action to achieve the ambitious targets for reducing smoking set out in the "Health of the Nation".

HIV (Therapy)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department is undertaking on the use of combination therapy of AXT, DDI and Pyridinone for the treatment of HIV infection, as currently being tested in the United States; whether she envisages any trial use being made available in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We do not ourselves carry out clinical trials for HIV infection. This is the responsibility of the Medical Research Council. The Department does have an influence on the research programme through a concordat with the MRC.

Recently, there have been reports from the United States that resistance developed to the drugs AZT, DDI and pyridinones renders HIV non-viable. It has been suggested that combination therapy with these three drugs may be an effective treatment for HIV disease. The MRC AIDS therapeutic trials committee, on which the Department of Health is represented, has identified combination therapy as one of a number of priority areas for further research.

So far all the evidence supporting use of this combination of drugs comes from laboratory studies. We do not know what the clinical significance will be. Unfortunately many therapies which are promising in the test tube do not give the hoped-for benefits to patients.

Surgery (Waiting Times)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average waiting period for (a) all operations, (b) cataract surgery, or the specialty within which such surgery falls and (c) hip replacement surgery, or the specialty within which such surgery falls; and what information is available as to the proportion of all people waiting for operations who are aged over 65 years.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by specialty is published in "Hospital Waiting Lists, In-Patients and Day cases", a copy of which is in the Library. Waiting time information on individual conditions and by age of patients is not held centrally.

Out-patient Appointments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce a system to limit waiting times for out-patient appointments.

Mr. Sackville: Under the patients charter, health authorities already set and publish local charter standards for first out-patient appointments, and from 1993-94 regional health authorities will set targets in their corporate contracts for local improvements.

Children (State Care)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will calculate the cost to the Exchequer of a child placed in the care of the state, from birth to the age of majority, at current prices.

Mr. Yeo: The information available represents the average weekly unit costs to local authorities for children of all ages for various placements. The latest average figures for English authorities, published in "Children in Care; England and Wales; year ending 31 March 1991", are £102 per week for a foster placement, £536 per week for a community home placement and £943 for a registered voluntary homes placement. These averages represent the gross "direct costs". The costs of field social work support are excluded as are the charges which local authorities may recover for children accommodated by them. Information is not currently available about the placement histories of children looked after since birth.

Salmonellosis

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of death certificates on which salmonellosis is shown (a) as the main cause of death and (b) as a subsidiary cause of death, for the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The number of deaths, main cause and subsidiary, from salmonella infections, other than typhoid and paratyphoid fevers, ICD 003 in England and Wales, for the last five years for which figures are available are shown in the table.[1]

	Main cause	Subsidiary
1987	52	23
1988	58	36
1989	61	23
1990	68	28
1991	62	26

[1] Excluding neonatal deaths (0 to 27 days).

Heart Disease

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the annual cost of treatment for coronary heart disease; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not routinely collected centrally. The latest year for which figures are held is 1989-90. We estimate that in that year £540 million was spent on all forms of treatment of coronary heart disease in the national health service.

Homoeopathic Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent on each of the five homoeopathic hospitals in each year since 1990-91; and what changes in funding are planned following EC directive 92/73/EEC of 22 September 1992.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Northwick Park Hospital

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 February, Official Report, columns 204-5, what instructions she has given to doctors at Northwick Park Hospital Trust about involving patients or their general practitioners in discussions about contractual issues.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service executive has issued further guidance to the NHS about involving general practitioners and other clinicians in the contracting process under cover of EL(93)10 "Managing activity and change through contracting", copies of which are available in the Library.

Green Agenda

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the guidelines and targets set for the implementation of the May 1991 DOH green agenda in respect of (a) exploiting the NHS's purchasing power by specifying environmentally friendly products, (b) using contracting to create healthier environments, (c) producing a smoking policy manual, (d) saving 15 per cent. on energy over five years and (e) changing to unleaded fuel throughout the national health service by 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Supplies Authority—NHSSA—is responsible for procurement matters for the NHS. It is a customer-driven organisation and responds to its customers' requirements, which are increasingly for environmentally friendly products. This is taken into account when procuring products and NHSSA is in the process of developing a policy, in partnership with customers and suppliers, to encourage wider usage of "green" products throughout the NHS.

In October 1992, guidance was issued to ensure that all sales of tobacco on NHS premises were stopped by the end of 1992, except to long-stay patients who are smokers, and to ensure that, by 31 May 1993, the NHS is smoke-free except for limited necessary provision of separate smoking rooms. A booklet of good practice in implementing smoking policies was issued jointly by the Department and the Health Education Authority. A copy is available in the Library.

In line with the Government-wide target, health authorities are set an overall target for reducing energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the five years from 1991-92. Guidance and advice has been issued to the NHS on options for attaining this reduction. The NHS management executive is monitoring progress towards its achievement.

Ambulance services, the main users of petrol within the NHS, are phasing out the use of leaded petrol in their fleets as part of their vehicle replacement programmes. This allows resources to be managed effectively and provides for the further option of diesel-powered vehicles.

Regional Health Authority Staff

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of staff employed in each of the regional health authority offices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of staff employed by regional health authorities—RHAs—are not directly comparable as some centrally manage NHS Supplies, blood transfusion, and ambulance services, as well as directly employing consultants and registrars for the health service in their region. Excluding these centrally maintained functions, we estimate a total of some 7,850 whole-time equivalent staff were employed by RHAs on 1 July 1992 or an average of 560 staff each. The number of each RHA is in the table:

	Number
Northern	656
Yorkshire	518
Trent	509
East Anglian	292
North West Thames	361
North East Thames	580
South East Thames	604
South West Thames	611
Wessex	331

Home Helps

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the costs per hour of the home help or home care service in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984, expressed both in actual prices and 1987 prices;

(2) what were the total numbers of home help or home care hours provided in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984; and, for each year and what were the average numbers of hours per user and per pensioner resident in the county for each year.

Mr. Yeo: The information is not held centrally. The numbers of clients, hours of service received by them and costs per hour of service are included in "Personal Social Services Statistics—Actuals" published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Several items of the CIPFA data, including hourly costs, are reproduced in "Key Indicators of Local Authority Services" published by the Department of Health. Copies of these publications covering the years up to 1990-91 are in the Library.

Fluoridation

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from local authorities about the proposed addition of fluoride to the North Yorkshire drinking water supply; and whether she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Human Tissue Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements there are for pharmaceutical companies to carry out human tissue tests in vitro prior to marketing their products.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. The requirement is for adequate and appropriate pharmacological and toxicological testing of proposed medicinal products before trials of such products in human subjects and before eventual marketing.

Certain accepted safety tests that are performed routinely on potential new medicines do use human cells in vitro to achieve their results. Other tests necessitate the use of animal models to reassure on safety issues, but research continues in order to ascertain whether in vitro tests could become valid substitutes.

Care Homes

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of places in local authority residential homes for the elderly in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Yeo: The table shows the total number of places in local authority staffed homes in Cambridgeshire reported as being primarily for elderly people form 1987 onwards. Similar information is not available for earlier years or unstaffed homes.

Number of places in local authority staffed homes for elderly people Cambridgeshire 1987-92

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average age of people admitted to local authority residential homes for the elderly in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Yeo: Information is collected centrally in age bands. The table shows the number of admissions, by age band, to local authority staffed homes in Cambridgeshire reported as being primarily for elderly people, from 1987 onwards. Similar information is not available for earlier years or unstaffed homes.

Children (Unnatural Deaths)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the number and main causes of unnatural deaths of two-year-olds each year since 1981.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Unnatural deaths of two year olds in England and Wales from 1981 to 1990

Myelograms

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue new guidelines about myelograms.

Mr. Sackville: I have no plans to issue guidelines.

Hospital Shops (Cigarettes)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys have been conducted as to the number or estimated percentage of hospital shops that sell cigarettes.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance was issued to all national health service authorities and provider units in October 1992 requiring them to stop the sale of all tobacco on NHS premises, except to long-stay patients who are smokers, by 31 December 1992. No surveys have been conducted and implementation is being monitored through normal management arrangements.

Primary Health Care Forum

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral statement on 16 February, Official Report, columns 133-37, on the national health service in London, if she will list the membership of the Primary Health Care Forum; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Primary Health Care Forum will be the engine for change and improvement for primary care in London. Its members come from a variety of backgrounds, but common to all is their work in helping to stimulate and develop high quality primary and community services. This blend of experience will provide a sharp focus on the problems in the capital. Their task is crucial if the health care of Londoners is to improve as they and we would wish.

The Primary Health Care Forum members are:

Mr. Tim Chessells (Chairman), Chairman of the London Implementation Group.
Mr. Gerry Green, Regional General Manager, South East Thames and regional general manager lead on primary care.
Mrs. Ainna Fawcett-Henesy, Regional Nursing Oficer, South East Thames on secondment to LIG.
Professor Lesley Southgate, Professor of General Practice and Primary Care, St. Bartholomew's Hospital.
Ms. Hilary Scott, General Manager, Enfield and Haringey FHSA.
Dr. Peter Skolar, an inner London GP and Chairman of Camden and Islington Local Medical Committee.
Ms. Jean Rowe, Nurse Manager, Hillingdon Community Health Trust.
Mr. Geoff Shepherd, Chief Executive, Redbridge and Waltham Forrest DHA.
Dr. Rod Smith, GP fundholder, Caversham, Berkshire.
Dr. Sian Griffiths, Regional Director of Public Health, South West Thames RHA.
Mr. Terry Bamford, Director of Social Services, Kensington and Chelsea.
Dr. Jo Ivey Boufford, Director, King's Fund College.
Ms. Rosemary Glanville, Director of Medical Architecture Research Unit, University of North London and Non-Executive Director, West Lambeth Community Health Care Trust.
Mr. Jack Barnes, Health Care Directorate, NHS Management Executive.

Drug and Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory directions have been issued to local authorities to ensure that the needs of those with drug and alcohol problems are fairly considered under care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: The whole of the community care special transitional grant, which will be made available to local authorities, has been ring fenced to protect the funding of the entire range of community care services, including those for drug and alcohol misusers. The grant will reflect existing levels of provision in the alcohol and drug field. We have not, therefore, issued separate statutory directions on the distribution of these funds in respect of alcohol and drug misuse services. Statutory directions have, however, been issued to support payment of £3·3 million to enable local authorities to further develop voluntary sector services for those with alcohol and drug problems. We have also issued special guidance to local authorities in recognition of the particular challenge they face in meeting the needs of alcohol and drug misusers from 1 April 1993.

Teleconference Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the primary care charter teleconference she held on Monday 22 February.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £53,217·92 including VAT.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has commissioned into the effectiveness of residential care and secure residential care for juvenile offenders.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The following research projects commissioned by the Department include examination of the effectiveness of residential care for all children including juvenile offenders.

1. Dartington Social Research Unit—Locking up children: secure provision within the child care system
   1978
2. Professor Timms/Professor Harris, University of Leicester—Between hospital and prison or thereabouts: a study of the implementation of the secure accommodation regulations
   1987
3. Dartington Social Research Unit—The experiences and careers of young people leaving youth treatment centres
   1989
4. Dartington Social Research Unit—Alternative care careers: the experience of very difficult adolescents outside youth treatment centre provision
   1989
5. Dartington Social Research Unit—Follow-up of young people from youth treatment centres
   1993
6. Professor Bottoms/Professor Knapp, University of Cambridge and University of Kent—Evaluation of the effectiveness of intermediate treatment
   1993
7. Professor Whitaker, University of York—culture and staff dynamics in children's homes
   Commissioned: 1992
8. Professor Sinclair—The role and quality of residential care
   Commissioned: 1993
9. Dartington Social Research Unit—Factors and processes associated with positive outcomes for troubled adolescents
   Commissioned: 1993

Copies of projects 1 to 4 are available in the Library.

Copies of projects 5 to 9 are not yet available. Copies will be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on what progress has been made in solving the commissioning problems of the A91 building at Aldermaston; and when he now expects the building to become fully operational.

Mr. Aitken: The project definition study to evaluate the scope of work necessary to overcome the corrosion problems of building A91 is due to report at the end of March 1993. This study will identify the most cost-effective repair option and confirm the date on which the building will become operational.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on each of the (a) major injuries, (b) other injuries, (c) dangerous occurences and (d) cases of disease, as defined in the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 —SI, 1985, No. 2023—reported to the Health and Safety Executive by AWE Aldermaston during 1991.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 38 such incidents occurred in 1991. Further details are as follows:

(a) major injuries (Total four)—two fractures of the wrist; one severed fingertip; one fall from a bicycle;
(b) other injuries (Total 28)—three fractures of the hands and feet; seven minor accidents/illnesses; two sports injuries; eight strains various; one dog bite; one concussion; four injuries from falls; two eye injuries;
(c) dangerous occurrences (Total five)—pipe flange steam leak in the main boilerhouse; lightning induced cable fault and fire on inductance; ignition of striker assembly; two releases of chromate dust; and
(d) cases of disease (Total one)—suspected contamination by chromate dust (no residual effects found).

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when AWE Aldermaston plans to start the red commissioning stage of the A90 building.

Mr. Aitken: White commissioning is progressing well, but red commissioning will not commence until we are fully satisfied that the facility is ready to receive radio active material.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and powers of the Health and Safety Executive concerning the atomic weapons establishments.

Mr. Aitken: The role and powers of the Health and Safety Executive in this respect were outlined on page 41 of the 12th report of the Select Committee on Defence in 1990.

Vulcan XH558

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to allow the Vulcan XH558 to fly at any of the events commemorating the 75th anniversary of the RAF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There are no plans to include the Vulcan in the RAF flypast for the royal review at RAF Marham on 1 April 1993, which will consist of current operational RAF aircraft, with Battle of Britain memorial flight aircraft providing a historical perspective for the service.

However, once the future of the Vulcan has been determined, it will be possible to consider the form of a farewell flypast.

Bandsmen

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 779, if he will set out the approximate number of bandsmen employed on (a) Operation Corporate and (b) Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No Army bandsmen were deployed on Operation Corporate. On Operation Granby approximately 940 individual Army bandsmen were deployed.

Departmental Property

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department's property, Queen Mary buildings in Stillington street, has been rendered uninhabitable; what was the cost of doing this; what is the intended future use of the buildings; and what consideration was given to using them to house the homeless in the interim period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Queen Mary buildings consists of four blocks of six-storey flats. Two of the blocks are fully occupied; the other two have been vacated because repairs are necessary in order to rectify corrosion in steel reinforcement bars. Structural investigations have been carried out at a cost of £75,000 to establish the extent of the corrosion and remedial work is now in hand.

The flats are used by military personnel who need to live within close proximity of their place of work. When repairs have been completed all the flats will be required by my Department. The empty blocks are not suitable for occupation due to their structural condition.

Vehicle Leasing

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the numbers and makes of the vehicles currently being leased by (a) the Royal Air Force, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Army.

Mr. Aitken: The Royal Navy and Royal Air Force do not have vehicles on long-term lease. The Army, which has the largest fleet of support vehicles, has the following vehicles on lease in the United Kingdom and in Germany:

	Number
Iveco Ford tractor units	112
Mercedes Benz tractor units	36
Volvo tractor units	17
Leyland DAF tractor units	1
Volvo rigid vehicles	9
Leyland refrigerated unit	1
Leyland DAF minibuses	28
Renault minibuses	11
Ford transit minibus	1
Minibuses (makes unknown)[1]	6
Box body Luton type van (make unknown)[1]	1
Mechanical grab (make unknown)[1]	1
Volkswagen pick-up	1
Peugeot cars[2]	36
Fiat cars[2]	31
Rover cars	22
Ford cars	27
Nissan cars	2
Vauxhall cars	2
Cars in BAOR[1]	268
Volkswagen minibuses in BAOR	54
Vans in BAOR[1]	15

[1] The vehicle makes are unknown because the lease contract does not specify a vehicle make but calls for a vehicle type—for example 12 seater minibus.

[2] The Fiat and Peugeot cars are being phased out and replaced by Rovers as their lease period expires.

Bands

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 778, on medical training of Army bands, what specific medical tasks medical assistants are qualified to undertake; and what is the equivalent level of qualifications in the Royal Army Medical Corps;

(2) to what level of civilian medical expertise (a) Royal Marine and (b) Royal Air Force band personnel are trained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All service band personnel are trained to a level that equates to basic first aider in civilian qualifications. In addition, Royal Marine and RAF personnel are awarded the Health and Safety Executive certificate in first aid in the workplace.

Instruction includes emergency resuscitation using basic skills, control of haemorrhage, initial treatment of bone and joint injuries and the application of bandages and dressings. It also covers the basic nursing care of a patient, the management of intravenous infusion equipment, the transportation of casualties and casualty management under nuclear, biological and chemical conditions.

Chemical Discharges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which chemicals listed under the Trade Effluents (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1989 are discharged into the environment by facilities and sites operated by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Central records are not maintained of the types and quantities of prescribed substances discharged by MOD. However, non-domestic discharges from individual MOD facilities and establishments are subject to prior agreement with the appropriate pollution control authorities. These agreements take into account the quantities, concentrations and types of prescribed substances contained in the discharges which are, in turn, dependent upon the particular processes or activities being undertaken.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 June 1992, Official Report, column 176, if he is now in a position to make a statement about his plans for an integrated army personnel centre outside London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 13 January 1993, c. 760]: The consultation period has now ended. A number of representations were received, one of which proposed an alternative building for the centre in Stockport at a purchase price to the Ministry of Defence of rather less than £4 million, against a purchase price of around £20 million for the original proposal. These representations are now being considered. No decisions have been taken and I will make a further statement on our intentions as soon as possible.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will (a) detail the cost, sample size and sample composition of the recent survey conducted by Research International for the Citizens Charter Unit and (b) place a copy of the research findings in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: (a) It is not our practice to reveal the cost of such contracts, as it could prejudice Her Majesty's Government's position when negotiating other contracts. All payments are, of course, open to scrutiny.

A sample of 940 adults was taken, which was representative of the country as a whole. The table gives a detailed profile of respondents.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research his Department has undertaken on the possible effect of the national lottery on the income of charities and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Key: The report prepared for the Department by the GAH group of consultants considered information available from other countries on the possible effects of national and state lotteries on charitable incomes.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations he has received on the effect of the national lottery on the income of charities and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Key: I have received a number of observations as to the likely effect on the incomes of charities and voluntary organisations—most recently from the Charities Aid Foundation, which wrote to all members of the Standing Committee on 4 February and the Council for Charitable Sport, which wrote to my right hon. Friend on 9 February.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what direct consultations he has had with (a) voluntary organisations in the disablement field and (b) other voluntary organisations concerning the effect of the national lottery on their income.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has met the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, which expressed its views on the lottery's effect on charities' income, along with a number of other observations on the national lottery. I have also had written representations from a number of voluntary organisations.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study he has made of the effect of a national lottery on charitable giving in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Key: I am aware of the report by DKM management consultants, which includes a chapter on the effect of the Irish national lottery on charitable incomes in the Republic of Ireland.

Package Holidays

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many people in the United Kingdom took overseas package holidays during 1992.

Mr. Key: Latest figures from the international passenger survey show that there were 10,571,000 holiday visits made by United Kingdom residents on marketed package holidays during the first three quarters of 1992 —22 per cent. higher than for the first three quarters of 1991. They represented 55 per cent. of all United Kingdom holiday visits overseas and 39 per cent. of all United Kingdom residents' visits abroad.

Sport

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total tax revenue from sports and the total Government assistance to sport by way of grant in each EC country for the most recent available year.

Mr. Brooke: This information is not available.

Children's Play

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will establish a dedicated budget for children's play from central Government.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council will take over the National Children's Play and Recreation Unit's responsibilities for information, and playwork education and training after 31 March 1993 and fund these from its main budget. This represents a very positive way forward, and I see no need to introduce any other financial arrangements.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will visit the National Children's Play and Recreation Unit to discuss the removal of ring fencing of money allocated to the unit by the Sports Council.

Mr. Brooke: In November, my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, met the chairman and vice-chairman of the play unit to discuss our plans for supporting children's play after 31 March 1993. The issue of funding after this date is a matter for the Sports Council and I therefore see no need for a further meeting with the play unit.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the representations he has received about the future of the National Children's Play and Recreation Unit.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 March 1993]: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 19 January, Official Report, column 131. Between 15 January and 2 March, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, and I received 85 letters from hon. Members, 28 from local authorities, 50 from voluntary sector play organisations, 34 from other organisations and 17 from members of the public. A significant proportion of this correspondence consists of identical letters reaching the Department by a number of different routes, and fails to appreciate that funding will continue to be available to play through the Sports Council.

Irish Cannon

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the representations from the Irish Government about the future of the 16th century Irish cannon currently in the royal armouries.

Mr. Key: The two guns cast in London by Robert and John Owen in the late 1540s were bought in good faith from a reputable dealer in 1972. There have been various rumours in the subsequent 20 years, but no evidence about their origin. In June 1992 the National museum of Ireland claimed ownership, saying that an extensive police investigation was in progress. In October its acting keeper of antiquities visited the royal armouries and was given full access to their files. The position remains that no evidence has been presented to support the Irish claim and it seems sensible to await the outcome of their police investigation.

Tourist Boards

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has had over the proposed reduction in the grant to the English tourist board and the relation between this grant and others to other tourist bodies in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department has received a number of representations from the tourist industry about the level of English tourist board funding. The ETB is currently carrying out a review of its activities which will enable it to decide how its resources can be allocated most effectively in future.

Decisions on the levels of funding for the other national tourist boards are a matter for the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, based on their assessment of their particular priorities.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of the increase in the legal aid budget is due to increased payments on account to solicitors holding legal aid certificates in each of the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information is available only in respect of payments on account made to both barristers and solicitors in respect of civil legal aid. The percentage of the increase in legal aid fund expenditure due to increased payments on account to both barristers and solicitors in those circumstances in each of the last three years was as follows:

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million
Gross fund expenditure	580	690	910
Gross annual increase	89	110	220
Increase in payments on account	8·3	12·8	22·3
Percentage of increase attributable to increased payments on account	9·3	11·6	10·1

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of legal aid in each of the last three years was accounted for by payments on account.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The percentage of legal aid fund expenditure in each of the last three years accounted for by payments on account was as follows:

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million
Gross fund expenditure	580	690	910
Payments on account	3·0 per cent.	4·4 per cent.	5·8 per cent.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the expected cost of the reorganisation of the outer London magistrates court system as proposed in Cm. 1829, "A New Framework for Local Justice"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Taylor: We have not yet formulated proposals on the future organisation of the magistrates courts in outer London. We are at present consulting the service on the options and issues. The cost of reorganisation will depend on the option for change which is selected. Any additional costs arising out of reorganisation will be recovered through the structural improvements made by the changes and by efficiency savings.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish his proposals for the reorganisation of the outer London magistrates courts by the end of February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Taylor: We have recently issued a consultation paper about the future organisation of the magistrates courts service in London. Responses are required by 31 May. The Lord Chancellor and I will give careful consideration to the views of those in the service in London before reaching any decisions about its future.

Committal Proceedings

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will abolish formal committal proceedings in court under section 6(2) of the Magistrates Courts Act 1980 in cases where the defence lawyer accepts that there is a case to answer.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

Consideration of the reform of committal proceedings is within the remit of the Royal Commission on criminal justice. We shall be reviewing the future of these proceedings in the light of the commission's findings.

TRANSPORT

Light Dues

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on light dues.

Mr. Norris: We remain committed to the principle of funding the cost of navigational aids from light dues. We are, however, pursuing a number of initiatives in this regard. We have made a joint approach with the Irish Government to the European Commission proposing that the user should pay for navigational aids throughout the Community's waters. I have opened negotiations with the Irish Government with a view to increasing the level of contributions to the general lighthouse fund from sources within the Republic. I am not yet in a position to make an announcement on the difficult issue of light dues for pleasure craft. But work continues to identify an equitable and cost-effective charging system.

On 15 February 1990 my right hon. Friend the former Member for Hertsmere, when Secretary of State for Transport, announced his intention of moving from a net to a gross tonnage basis for the assessment of light dues in 1994. The general lighthouse authorities and the payers of light dues are consulting together as to what the effects would be on differing types and sizes of vessels. I expect to make a further announcement later in the year.

The tariff for light dues is usually revised annually so that the finances of the general lighthouse fund are maintained at a satisfactory level. Despite a substantial increase in the tariff last year, light dues revenue for 1992-93 was forecast to be 26 per cent. lower in real terms than in 1987. For the forthcoming year from 1 April I am today announcing an average increase in the tariff about of 3·5 per cent.

I am therefore laying regulations to increase the light dues voyage tariff by 1·5p to 43p per tonne with effect from 1 April; I am also increasing the tariff for periodical payments including those for fishing vessels, from £205 a year plus £21 per metre—for 10 m and over—to £212 and £22 respectively, with consequential increases in related rates.

Traffic Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contribution his Department made to the conference held in London on 22 February, "Less Traffic, Better Towns".

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I addressed this conference and the head of the Department's urban and general directorate gave a talk on current departmental initiatives. Three other officials from the Department attended the conference.

Motorway Traffic

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider establishing indication markers on the back of vehicles not permitted to overtake in the third lane of motorways, as a contribution to road safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have no evidence of vehicles not permitted in the third lane regularly flouting the regulations and using that lane, and no plans to require any markings on vehicles not permitted to use the third lane.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what type and size of vehicles are banned from overtaking in the third lane of motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Regulation 12 of the Motorways Traffic (England and Wales) Regulations, as amended by the Motorways Traffic (England and Wales) (Amendment) Regulations 1992, stipulates the type and size of vehicles prohibited from the third lane of motorways. These are motor tractors, light or heavy locomotives, vehicles with a maximum laden weight exceeding 7·5 tonnes and those drawing trailers.

Trans-Pennine Study

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he used to select the consultancy organisation that produced the trans-Pennine study strategy commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As with any such consultancy award, the ability to deliver the work set out in the study brief at a competitive cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what penalty was provided in the contract with the consultancy responsible for producing the trans-Pennine study strategy report for failure to deliver the report on time.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: These kinds of commissions do not include a specific penalty for poor performance. If a consultant does not comply with the Department's requirements this would be taken into account when selecting tenderers for future commissions.

The time scale for delivery of this report was adjusted when the scope of the study was extended.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 385, if he will list the organisations that tendered for the trans-Pennine study strategy commissioned by his Department, and the estimated cost of producing the report which was put forward by each organisation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We received tenders from Transportation Planning Associates, the MVA Consultancy, Alastair Dick and Associates and Wootton Jeffreys. The value of each tender is a commercially sensitive matter which we do not divulge.

A361

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total value of the outstanding disturbance claims arising from the building of the A361 Tiverton to Barnstaple link road; and what he estimates to be the interest accumulated on this sum.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The value of third-party claims arising from the construction of the A361 north Devon link road stages 2A and 2B would be difficult to quantify, as they are subject to negotiation between the claimant, the contractors, the consultants who supervise construction, and the Department. Compensation negotiated in respect of third-party claims does not attract interest.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many disturbance claims arising from the building of the A361 Tiverton to Barnstaple link road are still outstanding.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The table provides a breakdown of third-party claims arising from the construction of the A361 north Devon link road stages 2A and 2B.

	Number
Stage 2A
Claims received	58
Claims settled	54
Claims yet to be resolved	4

A1 (Road Works)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates the A1 carriageways in the area of Ferrybridge, South Yorkshire, have been restricted due to road, bridge or other works during the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Carriageway restrictions have been imposed on the A1 in the area of Ferrybridge to enable substantial maintenance or survey work to be undertaken on nine occasions in the last five years, as follows:

Scheme	Dates
A1 Safety fencing M62 to Redhouse	18 April 1988 to 19 June 1988
A1 Wentbridge to Darrington	6 February 1989 to 20 April 1989
A1 River Aire to M62	31 August 1989 to 15 December 1989
A1 Wentbridge access	15 January 1990 to 27 May 1990
A1 Topographical survey, Wentbridge	1 June 1990 to 31 August 1990
A1 Wentbridge to Barnsdale Bar	10 December 1990 to 13 April 1991
A1 Redhouse to Barnsdale Bar	12 May 1991 to 19 August 1991
A1 Fairburn village	11 November 1992 to 19 December 1992
A1 Darrington	22 February 1993 ongoing

The list does not include daytime lane closures of a few hours' duration at off-peak times for routine work, patching or safety fence repairs.

Road Traffic (Emissions)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) carbon monoxide, (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) volatile organic compounds are from road traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The contribution from road traffic to national emissions in 1990 was:

	Per cent.
Carbon monoxide	90
Nitrogen oxides	51
Volatile organic compounds	41

Over the next few years tight new emission standards are coming into force for cars, lorries and buses and these will lead to better air quality as older vehicles are phased out.

PRIME MINISTER

Agricultural Surpluses

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the availability of facilities within the EC to store agricultural surpluses.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 4 March.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 4 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

Marriage Counselling

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are taken to co-ordinate the work of the United Kingdom Departments of the Scottish and Welsh Offices concerned with Relate; and if he will make a statement on the grants for Relate for future years.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1993, c. 421]: The last two sentences should have read

"The Scottish Office provides a grant to Marriage Counselling Scotland. In 1993-94 this will amount to £87,288, an increase of one and a half per cent. compared with 1992-93."

EDUCATION

Primary Schools

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list for each local education authority area the number of pupils aged five to 11 years educated (a) within and (b) outside the maintained sector;

(2) what percentage of pupils aged five to 11 years in England are educated within the maintained sector.

Mr. Forth: The information requested for pupils attending schools in each local education authority area in England in January 1992 is shown in the table.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for education what proportions of three and four-year-olds attended state nursery schools or state nursery classes in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Forth: The estimated percentages of the local three and four-year-old population attending maintained nursery schools and classes in Cambridgeshire local education authority for each of years 1984 to 1992 are shown in the table. The table also shows the percentages of such pupils being taught in infant classes in maintained primary schools.

Estimated percentages of three and four-year-old population attending maintained nursery schools and classes and infant classes in maintained primary schools in Cambridgeshire LEA.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing (Midlands)

14. Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figures for manufacturing output in the midlands from the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: According to provisional CSO figures for 1991, GDP for manufacturing industry at factor cost in the midlands was £21·1 billion, representing 20·3 of the United Kingdom total.

Actors

15. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on taxation arrangements for actors.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received very few representations recently.

Corporation Tax

16. Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the main rate of corporation tax in (a) Japan, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The current main rates on distributed profits are 37½ per cent. in Japan, 36 per cent. in Germany, 33⅓ per cent. in France and 33 per cent. in the United Kingdom. In Germany a higher rate of 50 per cent. is applied to undistributed profits.

Finance Ministers

17. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the discussions at the February meeting of European Community Finance Ministers.

21. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the discussions at the February meeting of EC Finance Ministers.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Members to the reply my right hon. Friend the Paymaster-General gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 18 February, Official Report, col. 315.

US Tariffs

18. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the economy and the imposition by the United States of America of tariffs upon United Kingdom-manufactured goods.

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom is concerned about recent developments in trade relations with the US, in particular the imposition of anti-dumping duties on steel, which could have a significant impact on sections of the steel industry. The United Kingdom believes that it is essential that the dialogue between the Commission and US continues and that these disputes do not escalate into a trade war.

Debt

19. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the ratio of debt to gross domestic product in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Italy, (c) France and (d) Germany.

Mr. Portillo: The OECD estimates that the gross general Government debt to GDP ratio in 1992 was 42 per cent. in the United Kingdom, compared with 44 per cent. in Germany, 50 per cent. in France and 108 per cent. in Italy.

Value Added Tax

20. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with representatives of charities and voluntary bodies on the possible imposition of VAT on their activities.

Mr. Nelson: None.

23. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the removal of VAT payable on items of sanitary protection.

Mr. Nelson: I have received a number on the subject.

24. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning rates of VAT.

Mr. Nelson: Many representations have been received and these will be considered in the run-up to the Budget.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the relative cost of sending publications by post in the United Kingdom and the other member states of the EC, when considering the question of extending VAT to books and magazines.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend is fully aware of the differing costs and VAT rates in member states on publications sent by post. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further in the period leading up to the Budget.

Retail Prices

22. Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the annual increase in the retail prices index; and what were the comparable figures for January 1992 and January 1991.

Mr. Portillo: In January the headline rate of RPI inflation was 1·7 per cent., down sharply from 4·1 per cent. in January 1992 and 9 per cent. in January 1991. Headline inflation is now at its lowest level for more than 25 years.

Matrix Churchill

25. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how Customs and Excise prosecution policy has been reviewed since the Matrix Churchill trial.

Mr. Nelson: The prosecution policy of Customs and Excise, determined within its role as an independent prosecuting authority, is guided by the code for Crown prosecutors which sets out the evidential and public interest tests which should be addressed when considering criminal prosecutions. The commissioners keep under review their prosecution policies in relation to the wide range of enforcement responsibilities laid to them, taking account of all relevant factors. One such factor will clearly be the findings of Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

Edinburgh Summit

26. Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new projects are to go ahead in Britain as a consequence of the statement at the Edinburgh summit on European economic recovery.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Paymaster-General gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 26 February, Official Report, column 765.

Public Sector Leasing

27. Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about public sector leasing policy.

Mr. Portillo: The autumn statement announced as part of the private finance initiative, certain changes affecting leasing by public sector bodies. As a form of procurement, leasing must be based on an assessment of value for money, taking into account the transfer of risk. If the great majority of the risk lies with the private sector, the capital value of leased assets will not be offset from departmental spending allocations or external financing limits. In addition, in the particular circumstances of the run-up to privatisation, British Rail will be allowed to lease some £150 million of new rolling stock.

Interim guidance on the private finance initiative as a whole was provided to Departments on 9 December and placed in the Library of the House. More detailed guidance on leasing will be available shortly.

Statutory rules require that local authorities in England and Wales should count leases as credit arrangements for which credit cover is needed, unless they are operating leases or other specified types of leases. In Scotland, authorities are similarly required to count certain categories of leases as capital transactions which must have capital allocation cover.

Unemployment

28. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on tax revenues of changes in the level of unemployment in the south-east over the last year.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the effects.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the President of the European Commission's call for an emergency summit of the Group of Seven to co-ordinate measures to tackle unemployment.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The Japanese Prime Minister is currently the chair of the Group of Seven and it is for him to respond to this proposal. On Saturday my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer hosted an informal meeting of the G7 Finance Ministers and central bank governors. Concern was expressed about the high level of unemployment in all countries and there was agreement on the need to strengthen non-inflationary growth. This meeting was in part to fulfil last year's economic summit request to Finance Ministers to strengthen co-operation and to intensify work to reduce obstacles to growth and thereby foster employment.

Repossessions

29. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Building Societies Commission to discuss repossessions.

Mr. Dorrell: Treasury Ministers meet the chairman of the Building Societies Commission from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues.

Demand

30. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of total demand in the economy.

Mr. Portillo: Latest data indicate that the level of real domestic demand in the third quarter of 1992 was 0·6 per cent. higher than a year earlier. The majority of the Treasury's panel of independent forecasters and other outside forecasters expect it to pick up further in 1993. The Government will publish a new forecast in the financial statement and Budget report on 16 March.

Consumer Spending

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the monthly change in consumer spending for each month since January 1990.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of consumers' expenditure are not compiled monthly. Quarterly estimates of the volume of consumers' expenditure are shown in table 3 of the publication "Economic Trends". Table 1 of this publication gives monthly estimates of the volume of retail sales which account for about two fifths of total consumers' expenditure. Copies of "Economic Trends" are available in the House of Commons Library.

Money Supply

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change in the money supply, M4, for each year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for the percentage change in the money supply, M4, for each year since 1987 are available in table 28 of "Economic Trends", January and February 1993 issues.

Health and Education Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been public spending on health and on education in each year since 1975 at current prices.

Mr. Portillo: Table 2.2 of the statistical supplement to the 1992 autumn statement, Cm. 2219, shows general Government expenditure by function from 1978-79. Figures are also available on a national accounts basis back to 1977, in cash terms, from the CSO database in the following series, identified by their database code:

GTGH: General Government expenditure on Health,
GTGN: General Government expenditure on Education.

The database can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Sterling (Devaluation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of the devaluation of the pound sterling against the basket of international currencies since Wednesday 23 September 1992, on the latest available figures.

Mr. Nelson: Between close of business in London on 23 September 1992 and opening 1 March 1993 the £ sterling has declined against its exchange rate index by 6·74 per cent.

Car Tax

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total annual amount lost in taxation by the changes in car taxation announced in his autumn statement.

Sir John Cope: As a result of the abolition of car tax announced in the autumn statement it is estimated that there will be a total loss of revenue, including consequential VAT, of £750 million in 1993-94. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced at the time that the costs would be recouped in the next Budget through other taxes on motoring.

Bloodstock

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives from the Jockey Club to discuss the level of VAT on bloodstock in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I meet representatives of the Jockey Club from time to time, but have no meeting scheduled at present.

Exchange Rates

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the benefits to industry of fixed exchange rates within the European Community.

Mr. Nelson: Exchange rate stability can be beneficial if there is sufficient convergence of monetary policy requirements among the countries concerned. The European Commission's 1990 report on the costs and benefits of economic and monetary union—"One Market, One Money"—surveyed a number of studies on this subject.

Wages and Salaries

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimate of annual change in levels of wages and salaries and of the retail prices index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: In December underlying average earnings growth was 4¾ per cent. This is estimated to be the lowest since 1967. In January headline RPI inflation was 1.7 per cent., also the lowest since 1967.

Local Authorities (Loans)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the quotas for lending to local authorities by the Public Works Loan Board.

Mr. Lamont: The public works loan commissioners have issued a circular today notifying local authorities of a change in the formula for calculating the quotas for 1993-94. The change reflects the Government's continued concern about the level of investments held by some authorities. The revised formula will reduce the quota available to local authorities which hold substantial investments, some of which could be used in place of fresh borrowing. It will have little or no effect on authorities where investments are small. Interest rates will continue to be set near but just below market rates.

A copy of the circular has been placed in the House Library.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the extent to which the introduction of PEPs has increased investment in equities, unit trusts or investment trusts by type of investor; and to what extent it has resulted in switching from client equity, unit trust or investment trust investment.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Over £6 billion had been invested in personal equity plans by April 1992. Many investors will have been encouraged to invest more in equities and in unit and investment trusts, but the detailed information requested in not available.

Charities

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts charities received in tax concessions and Government grants in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The total cost of direct tax reliefs benefiting charities is not available. The latest information on the cost of income tax reliefs to charities, including donations by individuals and companies and relief for charities, is given in the table. In addition, inheritance tax relief for gifts and bequests to charities costs about £150 million per annum. The value of VAT reliefs specifically targeted on charities and the disabled is now worth some £150 million per annum. Information on grants to charities specifically in not available, but grants to the voluntary sector totalled £2·36 billion in 1989-90 and £2·68 billion in 1990-91. Comparable information for 1991-92 is not yet available.

	£ million[1] Cost of income tax relief
1990-91	500
1991-92	570
1992-93	530

[1]These figures comprise the total sum repaid to charities and scientific research associations in respect of tax credits on dividends, and income tax deducted at source from other investment income, payments under deeds of covenant, single donations by individuals and companies under the Gift Aid Scheme and donations under the payroll giving scheme. Information is not available about income received by these bodies without deduction of tax and no allowance in the figures is made for this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the definition of employees of each of the health and social services boards as (a) Irish, (b) United Kingdom, (c) British and (d) EC citizens is the result of decisions by the boards or of self-definition by the employees.

Mr. Hanley: The health and social services boards do not define the nationality of their employees as Irish, United Kingdom, British or EC. Applicants are asked to indicate on the application form whether they are EC or non-EC nationals.

Caesarean Section Births

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many babies were born by Caesarean section in hospitals in Northern Ireland during each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The figures for 1971-1986 and 1991 and 1992 are given in the table. Equivalent information is not available for the years 1987-1990 when adjustments were being made to the data collection process.

The figures in the table include both live and still births.

Irish Language

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many schools at each level Irish is presently taught to a majority of the pupils at some stage in their education in that school; how many children have achieved a pass in Irish at (a) GCSE, (b) O-level and (c) A-level, in each of the last five years; what is the percentage of schools at each level offering Irish as a subject; how many of the schools offering Irish are (i) voluntary, (ii) controlled, (iii) maintained and (iv) integrated; and what is the percentage offering Irish in each of these categories.

Mr. Hanley: No information is available centrally on the number of primary schools which teach Irish.

The latest available information on the teaching of Irish at post-primary level relates to a survey conducted in respect of the 1988-89 academic year, based on a 10 per cent. sample of pupils.

That survey identified 92 schools in which Irish is taught. All are voluntary schools of which 29 are voluntary grammar schools and 63 are voluntary maintained secondary schools. These figures represent 50 per cent. and 79 per cent. respectively of the total number of schools in these categories. It is probable, however, that there are other schools in which Irish is taught, but which were not identified in the sample used in the survey.

The number of pupils who have obtained a pass in Irish at GCSE and A-level in each of the last five years is as follows:—

	GCSE		A level
GRADE	A-C	D-G	A-E
1988	1,046	469	203
1989	1,133	486	183
1990	955	436	229
1991	959	462	214
1992	1,037	504	270

1987 was the last year of NI GCE 'O' level examinations.

Educational Administration

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take, in the light of the consultative document, "Educational Administration in Northern Ireland", to consult parents and teachers before concluding which of the three possible systems set out in the document he intends to install; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Copies of the consultative document on educational administration in Northern Ireland have been widely distributed to schools, colleges, teachers unions and professional associations. The views of parents have been sought through the Parents Action Group on Education. Press advertisements have also been placed informing the public of the publication of the document and inviting comments by 25 June. Furthermore, there have been detailed press articles setting out the contents of the document. The Government have stressed that no decisions will be made until all representations have been considered.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what study his Department has made of the potential impact on the current numbers employed within the five education and library boards, in the light of any move towards each of the three proposed models set out in chapters 6, 7 and 8 of the consultative document on educational administration in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The models described in the consultative document are intended to be illustrative of the broad frameworks within which educational services might be provided rather than to be detailed blueprints for future structures. They do not exclude consideration of any other models that might be suggested. The Government are committed to extensive consultation on the way ahead and will not make any final decisions until that consultation is completed. In these circumstances any notional assessment of the implications of the three models for present levels of employment in the education and library boards was not considered to be of significant value at this stage of the review process.

Slopping Out

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when slopping out will end at each of the gaols; and if he will make a statement on prison refurbishment.

Mr. Mates: Slopping-out does not take place in either of the two Maghaberry prisons as integral sanitation is provided.

At the young offenders centre, Hydebank Wood, a system of electronic unlocking provides inmate access to sanitation at night in much of the accommodation. As a progressive regime operates in the centre, inmates normally progress into such facilities. Refurbishment at the centre costing £3·5 million over the next three years is planned.

At Belfast prison a major £25 million programme aimed at ending slopping-out and greatly improving facilities by the year 2000 has now been planned and elements of work already begun. Due to the scale and complexity of the project and the need for it to be done while the prison is largely operational, work will take some years and the first elements will be security related. The remainder involve installation of many improvements for prisoners and staff, including en-suite toilet facilities in the wings.

In both Maze and Magilligan prisons, prisoners often have their own cells. This allied to a regime which enabled them to spend much of the day out of cell, means that the sanitation difficulties experienced in other jurisdictions are much less prevalent. But we are currently developing a strategic plan for the entire prison estate in Northern Ireland which will include consideration of the installation of integral sanitation in these prisons.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Atkins: A provisional list of regulations that have an impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consideration of definition.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a breakdown of regional preferential assistance to industry for each year since 1981-82, inclusive, at 1992-93 constant prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: The amounts spent on regional preferential assistance in Great Britain for the period 1981-82 to 1991-92 are set out in the table. The values are all expressed in terms of 1992-93 prices.

Government expenditure on Regional Preferential Assistance to Industry at 1992-93 prices

Notes:
1. All figures are gross and include payments to Nationalised Industries.
2. Expenditure on a 1992-93 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.
The items included in the expenditure are Regional Development Grants, Regional Selective Assistance and Regional Enterprise Grants; expenditure on Land and Factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Gas Reserves

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the present known reserves of gas in terms of the number of years present consumption can be maintained.

Mr. Eggar: Figures for gas reserves and consumption are published annually in the Brown Book. [1]I expect to publish the 1993 edition around the end of April.

[1] "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom": a report to Parliament by the Minister for Energy.

Coal Imports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much coal designated for power generation was imported into the United Kingdom in 1992; and how much was imported from each exporter.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of coal imported into the United Kingdom and designated for power generation[1] during 1992 was 7,568,000 tonnes. The breakdown by exporting countries is:

	Thousand tonnes
USA	3,390
Former USSR	2
Poland	52
Australia	1,224
South Africa	388
China	238
Colombia	2,274
Total imported coal	7,568

British Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what policy he has for developing (a) competitive and (b) comparative advantages within British industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 71, and the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 27 January 1993, Official Report, column 735.

Departmental Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the individuals currently acting as inspectors for his Department have business connections with the organisations criticised in the reports published by him.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Two. The accountant inspectors in the Guinness plc and Astra Holdings plc investigations are, or have been, partners in KPMG Peat Marwick. One of the firms that now form KPMG Peat Marwick was criticised in the inspectors' report on Orbit Holdings plc, published on 23 December 1981. The firm's Bermuda office was criticised in the inspectors' report on Alexander Howden Holding plc, published on 29 August 1990. In both cases, the events in question occurred between 10 and 20 years ago.

Recycling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from (a) Safeway and (b) other retail trade organisations on the problems of the comparative practices of the United Kingdom and German recycling industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware of the concerns that Safeways and others in the retail sector have about the damaging effects on the United Kingdom recycling industry of the German approach to packaging recycling. My Department has received written representations from individual retailers and the British Retail Consortium, and from wider industry groups such as the Consortium of the Packaging Chain. We are currently discussing the position with the interests concerned.

Aircraft Subsidies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 772, what information on US/EC aircraft production subsidies from defence programmes has been exchanged; when the meetings between EC and US representatives were held; and whether these or related issues have been raised recently with the United States Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: The first meeting to exchange information under the terms of the agreement is expected to take place at the end of March. Indirect support programmes will be among the topics covered at that meeting.

Global Technology Partnership Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of the invitation to his Department's global technology partnership conference, to be held in Birmingham on 23 to 25 March, have been distributed; at what cost; which Ministers from his Department plan to attend; and what speeches by Ministers are planned.

Mr. Eggar: The global technology partnership conference is aimed at encouraging greater technology co-operation between businesses in the United Kingdom and those in the more industrialised developing countries. In addition to environmental improvement, such co-operation can lead to commercial opportunities for all businesses involved. To ensure this message was widespread, just over 8,500 invitations were distributed in the United Kingdom and the selected developing countries. The distribution costs of this were £5,392.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, will speak at the conference.

Petroleum Production

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the Government's latest forecasts of levels of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Eggar: The latest forecasts for petroleum production in the years 1993 to 1997 are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1993	85-105
1994	95-125
1995	95-125
1996	95-125
1997	85-120

The forecast is presented as a range of outcomes for each year to take account of the many uncertainties involved. The figures include stabilised crude oil, natural gas liquids and condensates.

These figures and a range of other information about the development of United Kingdom oil and gas resources may be obtained from "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom 1993"—the Brown Book—due to be published by the DTI at the end of April.

Flats (Terrorism Insurance)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the additional premiums to be charged for terrorism cover for blocks of flats.

Mr. Heseltine: The new arrangements under which the Government will act as reinsurer of last resort in respect of damage caused by terrorist activity apply primarily to industrial and commercial property. The arrangements do not affect the property and homes of private policy holders, and these continue to be covered by insurance companies in exactly the same way as in the past.

In the case of blocks of flats, the insurance companies have now decided that they will also continue to cover a property whose sum insured is under £2·5 million. Where a property's sum insured is above £2·5 million, the policy holder will be able to buy additional terrorism cover. The basic additional terrorism premium for a block of flats in London and other major city centres will be about one ninth of that for other industrial and commercial property and about one third in other parts of the country.

These arrangements for blocks of flats represent a significantly more modest contribution from policy holders than previously envisaged.

WALES

Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions the World Health Organisation's one hour guidelines on (a) sulphur dioxide and (b) ozone have been exceeded in Wales in each year since 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Records indicate that the World Health Organisation's one hour guidelines for ozone were exceeded in Wales on 21 occasions and 16 occasions in 1990 and 1992, respectively, but that no excesses occurred in 1991. For sulphur dioxide, the guidelines were exceeded on two occasions in 1992 but were not exceeded in either 1990 or 1991. No excesses have occurred to date in 1993 for sulphur dioxide or ozone.

Independent Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from independent schools regarding the provisions of the Education Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: One.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the Education Bill upon independent schools; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Independent schools will welcome the measures in the Education Bill which aim to prevent the employment of barred persons and also the proposals to exclude certain independent boarding schools from registration as children's homes. The Bill complements the long-established role of the independent sector in providing for greater choice and diversity to meet the needs of pupils and parents and in encouraging schools to specialise in their particular strengths.

Caesarean Section Births

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many babies were born by Caesarean section in Wales in each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of caesarean deliveries reported in NHS hospitals in Wales since 1982 is given in the following table. Data for years prior to 1982 are not readily available and data for years after 1990 are not yet complete.

Caesarean section deliveries	Number
1982	3,311
1983	3,552
1984	3,820
1985	4,225
1986	4,238
1987	4,385
1988	4,508
1989	4,465
1990	4,204

Note:
Figures may understate the true position in that not all hospitals supply complete medical details on patient discharges and deaths.

Aberconwy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the subject of granting objective 5(b) assisted area status to the borough of Aberconwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from Gwynedd county council and Aberconwy borough council seeking the inclusion of Aberconwy as an objective 5(b) area. This matter forms part of the wider consideration that is currently being given by my Department's structural funds review working group for Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys. I support strongly the case for its inclusion.

Local Government Reforms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he now proposes to make a statement on his proposals concerning local government reforms.

Mr. David Hunt: I made a statement to the House on 1 March.

Health Service Resources

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions he has reached regarding the allocation of resources for hospital and community health and related services in Wales for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced on 16 December my decision on the allocation of resources for the national health service in wales for 1993-94. Within the £1,974 million resources available we propose to allocate £1,465 million for hospital and community health services and the cash-limited element of the family health services in Wales.

For health authorities, the current resources within this sum which is subject to parliamentary approval to the supply estimates totals £1,290 million and represents a cash increase of £47 million or 3·7 per cent. over 1992-93 estimated outturn provision. This sum, together with the additional £14 million which it is anticipated health authorities should, as a minimum, realise from further cost improvement savings and income generation schemes, will provide an effective increase in resources over 1992-93 of 5 per cent. Authorities will also benefit from further efficiency savings resulting from workload-related productivity increases through their contracts with service providers.

£8·5 million of the sum available for health authorities will be allocated to fund the continuing and full-year cost of developments which are being funded centrally in 1992-93. £8·6 million will be allocated to other centrally funded developments which will be announced in due course.

£29·4 million of the provision available will be made available for the discretionary use of health authorities. This provides for a 2·2 per cent. increase in HAs' discretionary revenue provision, or 0·4 per cent. in real terms, taking account of the 1·5 per cent. public sector pay restraint and the latest forecast of general inflation in 1993-94. In addition, authorities will be expected to generate the equivalent of at least a further 2 per cent. recurrent provision in efficiency savings from cash-releasing cost improvements and income generation schemes—1·3 per cent. minimum target—and productivity increases as throughput increase—0·7 per cent. minimum target—via their contracts with service providers.

Authorities should therefore be in a position to make further improvements in the services offered to patients in accordance with the objectives of the patients charter.

In order to continue progress toward weighted capitation funding, I have decided that all authorities will receive a minimum cash increase of 2 per cent. and that the balance of 0·2 per cent. will be provided to those authorities which would otherwise be more than 2 per cent. below their capitation formula targets in proportion to their respective distances from target.

The formula targets used in determining the distribution of the 0·2 per cent. further tranche of equalisation funding have been updated to take account of 1991 census data and other changes which affect the 1993-94 revenue allocations—notably revised capital charge estimates following the revaluation of the NHS estate, a further redefinition of capital—which alters the balance of HA capital to revenue expenditure—and a decision to exclude from the formula assessment revenue provision associated with long-stay hospital services for patients with a mental handicap which will be predominantly transferred to local authorities in due course as hospital services for this group are progressively replaced by community care.

These changes together with the equalisation funding provided over the past two years have together contributed to a narrowing of the range of differences between the most over-target and the most under-target HAs. Compared with 1991-92 when the range was from Powys at 14·61 per cent. over-target to Gwynedd 6·89 per cent. under-target, the position for 1993-94 prior to the distribution of the additional 0·2 per cent. equalisation provision shows a spread from Powys at 13·04 per cent. over-target to Clwyd at 4·82 per cent. under-target; and the latter figure reduces to 3·93 per cent. after its distribution.

The resultant discretionary revenue allocations for 1993-94, the increases which they represent over their 1992-93 discretionary revenue provision in cash and percentage terms, and the consequent revised distances from authorities latest formula targets are shown in the table 1.

Table 1

	Allocation	Cash increase		Remaining distance from target
	£ million	£ million	per cent.	per cent.
Clwyd	170·805	4·625	3·2	−3·93

South Glamorgan	185·893	2·810	2·0	2·88
West Glamorgan	146·327	2·746	2·0	1·65

Steady progress therefore has been made toward the equalisation goal set in 1991; but the progress to date has been neither so great as to justify bringing forward the 1998-99 target date for achieving weighted capitation shares, nor so small as to require extending the process. However, the formula will be subject to further review in 1993-94 and this will focus particularly on whether any progress has been or might be achieved in distinguishing the separate effects of differential morbidity and social deprivation on relative needs; and, if so, how these effects might be better reflected in the formula. Since this further review could have an impact upon formula targets, I will look again at the target date for achieving weighted capitation funding in the light of whatever emerges from the review.

Under the new capital allocation arrangements which came into force on 1 April 1992, £80·1 million will be earmarked for the purpose of the Welsh major capital programme. The funding will be made available respectively via specific cash allocations or external financing limit approvals to those HAs and NHS trusts that are responsible for managing the schemes in question. Details of this programme are set out in table 2.

Note: The Welsh Capital Building Programme reflects a degree of over-programming in anticipation of slippage during the course of 1993-94.

A further £37·6 million will be made available for the discretionary minor capital requirements of HAs and the 14 national health service trusts which will be operational on 1 April 1993 as well as the minor capital needs of other service providers which are not managed by HAs. This sum will, however, be abated by some £4·3 million which will be transferred to HAs' current provision in recognition of the further redefinition of capital expenditure which will become effective on 1 April 1993. £16·1 million of the £33·3 million balance will be allocated in the form of additional revenue provision to the prospective purchasers of national health service trusts' services. It will thus form part of the trusts' income for 1993-94 which can then be recapitalised to meet their minor capital requirements. This capital expenditure will, together with any capital expenditure on major capital schemes, be taken into account in determining EFLs. Provisional EFLs for the 14 national health service trusts in Wales in 1993-94, which are subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary estimates, are shown in table 3. They will be subject to revision during the course of the year as a consequence of national health service trusts updating their financial plans for next year to take account of the revenue allocations to their prospective purchasers that are covered in this announcement.

(−) denotes a negative external financing limit (i.e., no new borrowing—the sum indicated being invested by the trust concerned or used to reduce outstanding debt).

A nominal capital allocation of £10,000 per authority will be allocated to HAs to cover their minor capital needs as purchasing organisations. Authorities will be able to supplement this by virement from revenue, subject to the normal 1 per cent. discretionary limit, if this nominal amount is insufficient. The £15·4 million balance of minor capital provision will be allocated between the HAs on behalf of their residual directly managed units. As was the case last year, and in order to ensure the fair distribution of this sum between service providers, it will be allocated between authorities pro rata to the revenue income which their units are expected to attract next year. In this way, capital provision, like revenue will "follow the patient".

The resultant capital allocations are set out in Table 4. Nominal sums only are included for the Pembrokeshire and Powys health authorities, since they are no longer responsible for the capital needs of any directly managed units.

In addition, health authorities are expected to benefit from £5·4 million which will be generated in property sales in 1993-94.

A further £1·5 million will be held in reserve to meet the minor capital requirements of various other service providers such as the dental hospital and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

£11·8 million is to be made available to family health services authorities for their management and administration functions. The current element of this provision—£11·2 million represents a cash increase of 3·9 per cent. over 1992-93 provision and includes specific provision to finance the cost of strengthening the monitoring and accountability arrangements for GP fund holders and to buy in additional medical advice in respect of health promotion undertaken by general medical practitioners. The provision includes £0·13 million which will be differentially allocated between FHSAs in recognition of the need to make further progress toward the equalisation of discretionary resources between FHSAs. This differential distribution will result in the achievement of a good measure of equalisation in 1993-94 with most authorities achieving parity with each other and only two authorities, South Glamorgan and Powys, remaining significantly better funded than the rest.

The provision to be made available to FHSAs for the cash-limited general medical services funding for GP practice support costs is £42·7 million. This represents a cash increase of 9·6 per cent. over 1992-93 provision and includes £5·1 million for GP fund-holding practices' operating costs and preparatory fees for aspirant fund holders. This sum will not be distributed until after 1 April, when the number of participating practices in each FHSA area is known. Prospective GP fund holders have until 1 April to decide whether or not to participate in the scheme. Once the numbers are known, allocations for management support for practices operating funds, and preparatory fees for aspirant fundholders—both revenue and the capital costs associated with upgrading computer systems —will be calculated and allocated.

A further £0·9 million of the total sum available for cash-limited GMS needs has been held in reserve subject to the outcome of consultation with the service about the extension of the weighted capitation approach to this component of FHSA provision. It is anticipated that this reserve will be distributed early in 1993-94 in a way that enables a start to be made on the equalisation of this category of provision. Subject to this the allocations to be made to FHSAs are set out in table 5.

Table 5

	Allocations (£ million)
	FHSA management and administration costs	FHSA GP practice support costs
		Revenue	Capital
Clwyd	1·285	4·673	0·095
Dyfed	1·107	5·029	0·103
Gwent	1·350	5·897	0·120
Gwynedd	0·876	3·803	0·078
Mid Glamorgan	1·650	5·952	0·121
Powys	0·619	2·182	0·045
South Glamorgan	1·425	4·627	0·094
West Glamorgan	1·117	3·762	0·077

These allocations together represent another substantial increase in provision for hospital, community and family health services. They once again underline the Government's commitment to the NHS and recognise our undertaking to increase activity and maintain downward pressure on waiting times. They also serve to underpin patients charter guarantees about service availability and quality.

ENVIRONMENT

Ecological Balance

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on the ecological balance in the United Kingdom of (a) grey squirrels, (b) foxes, (c) Canada geese, (d) mink and (e) sparrow hawks.

Mr. Maclean: There is some difficulty in assessing what, if any, effects a given species has on the ecological balance throughout the United Kingdom. There are continual fluctuations in populations, with each variation being dependent upon many factors and the ecological balance can be seriously disturbed locally without the overall United Kingdom balance being disturbed.

The grey squirrel is a non-native species and now has spread through most parts of the United Kingdom. The only areas free from grey squirrels at present are north Scotland, Cumbria, Northumbria, Isle of Wight and north Wales. In all other areas which have been taken over by greys and where reds have become extinct, the reds have never managed to re-colonise. In coniferous habitats the populations of reds and greys are more evenly balanced. Grey squirrels also cause serious damage to growing timber and sometimes cereals, fruit, bulbs and crops.

Foxes can have severe localised impacts on ground nesting bird colonies if not controlled. For example, the RSPB is having to destroy foxes on the Abernethy game reserve because of the damage foxes are causing to the rare capercaillie. English Nature is also having to take similar action on one of its nature reserves. Apart from farm animals and birds, the main wildlife killed by foxes are: small rodents, earthworms, insects and rabbits.

Mink have spread throughout all parts of the United Kingdom and have even managed to swim the stretches of water and have colonised parts of the Western Isles. Detailed studies show that, overall, they have little impact so far on prey populations on mainland Britain although they have severe localised impacts on ground nesting bird colonies. Studies show that mink main food sources are fish, frogs and waterside birds especially moorhen, loot and mallard. Competition between mink and otter occurs when food sources and suitable breeding habitats become scarce.

Canada geese numbers are increasing rapidly from 19,000 in the 1970s to over 60,000 now. This non-native species causes damage to crops as well as amenity land in parks, public open spaces and golf courses. Goose droppings may pose health and safety risks and standing water in lakes become polluted. The geese can be aggressive while they are breeding and there are indications that the species competes with other wild birds for food and nest sites. My Department has set up a working group to assess the possible impacts on the environment, target appropriate research and plan a strategy for managing the species.

In the past 20 years sparrow hawk populations have increased rapidly from a low in the 1960s. There are now 25,000 breeding pairs, plus around 30,000 non-breeders. There is insufficient evidence to show what the effect is on other bird species, but their main food sources are small birds.

Rural Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the recommendations of the report "Homelessness in Rural Areas" by the school of advanced urban studies, Bristol, in collaboration with Acre, for the Rural Development Commission, on the case for restricting the right to buy and offering portable discounts in rural areas where restrictive planning policies apply; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to restrict the right of tenants in rural areas to buy their homes. In certain designated rural areas current legislation allows landlords to impose restrictions on resale or permanent letting which favour local people, or reserve a right of pre-emption for 10 years.

We do not plan to introduce incentives in the form of portable discounts. The only purpose of these could be to compensate for the loss of the right to buy and we have no intention of preventing the exercise of that right by rural tenants.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take on the findings of the report "Homelessness in Rural Areas" by the school of advanced urban studies, Bristol, in collaboration with Acre, for the Rural Development Commission in the incidence of homelessness in deep rural areas and the relative increase in overall rural homelessness.

Mr. Baldry: We will be reviewing our policy on the provision of social housing in rural areas in the light of research which we have ourselves commissioned. The proportion of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme going to the special rural programme, which is targeted on villages with populations of 3,000 or fewer, is to be increased from 5 per cent. in 1992-93 to 6 per cent. in 1993-94, and our policy of allowing development providing affordable housing in rural areas on sites which would not otherwise be available continues to bear fruit.

Merseyside Housing Associations

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much housing association grant was paid to each housing association operating on Merseyside during each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Baldry: The allocation of grant to individual housing associations is a matter for the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current annual rent for a housing association tenant on Merseyside; and by how much it has increased over each of the last four years.

Mr. Baldry: The average housing association rents for unfurnished accommodation in Merseyside metropolitan county are:

	Weekly	Annual	Percentage change
Registered fair rents (excluding service charges)[1]
Q3 1992	25·52	1,327	+ 5
Q3 1991	24·75	1,267	+ 6

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties are owned by housing associations on Merseyside.

Mr. Baldry: Housing association stock in the Merseyside region of the Housing Corporation, which includes Merseyside metropolitan county plus Ellesmere Port and Neston, Halton, Warrington and West Lancashire at 31 March 1992 was:

	Units
Self contained accommodation	50,500
	Bedspaces
Bedspaces in hostels	2,800

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 11 December 1992, Official Report, column 835, about the take-up of grants under the home energy efficiency scheme, what plans he has to improve access to, and take-up of, the scheme in London.

Mr. Maclean: The home energy efficiency scheme is a nationwide scheme and access to the grant in London is the same as elsewhere. Take-up in London has been lower than in other parts of the country but is now beginning to improve. Neighbourhood energy action is undertaking a study into the causes of the low take-up in London and I await the results of that study with interest.

EC Environmental Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which policy proposals and priorities on the environment established by the Danish presidency of the European Council will have (a) immediate effect and (b) longer-term effect on environmental policy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom, with all other member states, will be bound by all environmental measures which are adopted by the Environment Council during the Danish Presidency and will need to ensure that they are properly implemented in the United Kingdom in the timescale specified in each measure.

Housing Resources

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are considered by the Housing Corporation in making decisions regarding the allocation of resources, other than the housing needs indicator; and what consideration is given to a housing authority's performance.

Mr. Baldry: Each year, the corporation discusses with individual local authorities their needs for housing association development and sets out the results in a series of regional policy statements which it publishes in July. These describe the types of development which the corporation is prepared to fund in each local authority area and the resources which it anticipates will be available in the following year. The policy statements form the background to the competitive bids which the corporation then invites from housing associations.

Following further consultations with local authorities, the corporation allocates funds to those bids which meet the locally identified needs at the lowest cost in terms of corporation subsidy, subject only to the association concerned achieving the corporation's regulatory standards. A summary of the framework and criteria for bids for the 1993-94 programme was published in November last year and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Other than the HNI, the factor which most influences distribution between local authority areas is the availability of good-value bids, which in turn is influenced by the extent of the contributions made by the local authorities concerned either in terms of discounted land or cash contributions, including those made under the capital partnership arrangements announced last November.

As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 10 February, allocations are made to housing associations and take no account of the performance of local authorities themselves, other than the way in which they work with housing associations in their capacity as housing "enablers".

Local Government Planning

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has concluded his consideration of the response from the London borough of Waltham Forest to the notice served on the authority on 29 July 1991 under section 19A of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has now completed his careful consideration of the response which the London borough of Waltham Forest made to the notice served on the authority on 29 July 1991, as well as the authority's direct service organisation annual accounts for the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 which showed a continuing failure to achieve the required rate of return, and has today given a direction under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. The effect of the direction is that authority is required to seek the Secretary of State's consent when it wishes to undertake certain maintenance work in circumstances where it has not submitted the lowest tender.

Business and Environment Working Group

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the report of the financial sector working group of his advisory committee on business and the environment; and when he expects to respond.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment received the report of the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment's financial sector working group on 6 January. He and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have welcomed the report and circulated it widely. They will respond to this report and other recommendations from the advisory committee in response to the committee's final report, which is expected in May.

CBI (Waste Minimisation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent communications he has had from the Confederation of British Industry on its programme of waste minimisation.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour organisations made significant financial losses in 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: Statutory notices under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 were served on 36 local authorities between July and September last year in respect of financial failure in 1990-91. My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 2 December 1992, Official Report, column 209, his decision in respect of 10 authorities. He has now considered the responses of a further 16 authorities on which notices were served on 11 August 1992 and 2 September 1992. He has today given a direction under section 14 of the 1988 Act to Gloucestershire county council in respect of ground maintenance work.

My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to take no further action in respect of financial failure in 1990-91 by the London borough of Barnet—building cleaning; Blyth Valley borough council—new construction in excess of £50,000; Brighton borough council—highways and sewerage; Buckinghamshire county council—other cleaning; Castle Morpeth borough council—building maintenance; Dartford borough council—ground maintenance; Fareham borough council—ground maintenance; Harrogate borough council—ground maintenance; Holderness borough council—ground maintenance; North Norfolk district council—building maintenance; Reigate and Banstead borough council—building maintenance; Rotherham metropolitan borough council—ground maintenance; Surrey Heath borough council—highways and sewerage; West Lancashire district council—building maintenance; and Wycombe district council—highways and sewerage.

In all these cases the authority:—

(a) appears to have successfully responded to the financial losses incurred in 1990-91, and has either achieved a surplus in 1991-92, or expects to achieve the appropriate financial objective in 1992-93, or,

(b) has re-tendered or intends to re-tender very shortly the works in question, or,

(c) has disposed, or intends to dispose, of its direct labour organisation, or,

(d) is now operating below the "de minimis" level and, as such, is outside the scope of CCT legislation.

My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering responses from the remaining authorities on which notices were served in September 1992.

Council Tax

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, from reports so far monitored by his Department, of the regional average council taxes in band C for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The regional average council taxes in band C reported to my Department so far are as follows:

	Band C	Average	Community charge average
Northern	590	460	527
North West	570	470	548
Yorkshire/Humberside	530	430	474
East Midlands	500	420	499
West Midlands	520	440	528
East Anglia	450	395	456
South East	470	480	464
London	500	495	422
South West	490	460	493
ENGLAND	505	460	486

The average council tax bill is likely to be more than £25 less for two people than under the Community charge.

City Challenge Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue formal guidance in the form of a planning policy guidance note or a circular to local authorities in respect of the city challenge scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans at present to issue formal guidance or a circular on planning policy for city challenge schemes.

Energy Efficiency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was invested in energy efficiency in the United Kingdom in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A large part of the investment in the United Kingdom economy will have some effect on improving energy efficiency, although it is not possible to separate out an aggregate total of investment specifically directed at this purpose. However, in 1991 the amount of energy required per unit of GDP was some 18 per cent. lower than 1979.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners, Cambridgeshire

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners and people aged 85 years or over were resident in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Insurance

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances national insurance credits can be stopped for an unemployed person.

Mr. Burt: Generally, the same conditions for benefit apply to credits and are set out in regulations, copies of which are in the Library.

Circumstances in which the conditions are not satisfied include the following:

The unemployed person—
- ceases to register;
- is no longer available for work;
- is not considered to be actively seeking work;
- is engaged in employment (not the usual main occupation) for more than 8 hours in that week or
- is engaged in employed earner's employment (usual main occupation) on more than one day in the week or earnings exceed the lower earnings limit (currently £54 per week);
- fails to comply with a written notice to attend an interview in connection with his employment prospects;
- fails to comply with a written notice to an officer of the Department of Employment in order to make a written declaration in connection with his satisfaction of the conditions for unemployment benefit;
- becomes a student.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in the London borough of Lewisham received mortgage interest payments on homes where mortgages exceeded £100,000 or £200,000 in each year since 1987; and for how long the payments were received.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of housing benefit within the London borough of Lewisham have lived in (a) council housing, (b) other public sector housing and (c) private rented accommodation in each year since 1987.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the table. Information on tenants in other public sector housing is not available.

Notes:

Figures are only available for the new Housing Benefit scheme which was introduced in April 1988. Lewisham did not start submitting figures to the Department until May 1989 and have also failed to submit returns for quarters marked with an asterisk.

Although authorities have been asked to identify Housing Association tenants separately since May 1992, returns from Lewisham do not show this information.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest information held about pensioners' income.

Miss Widdecombe: The presentation and calculation of pensioners' income data has been changed to harmonise with the households below average income series. The latest details, based on the 1989 family expenditure survey, are in the tables.

Notes:

1. Estimates of the percentage of pensioner units in receipt of occupational pension income are based upon data from the Family Expenditure Survey (1979 and 1989) and the GAD Survey of occupational pension schemes (1979 and 1987). They assume that the number of individual pensioners in receipt has remained at its 1987 level.
2. Estimates of percentage growth are based on unrounded income figures and may not therefore be the same as those calculated from the rounded amounts shown in the table.

3. All average amounts are means.
4. All figures are before housing costs.
5. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of persons aged 16 to 18 years living in the city of Edinbrugh who are not in employment or in full-time education.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Deregulation Unit

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those areas of legislation for which he is responsible which are subject to investigation by the deregulation unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No areas of legislation for which MAFF is responsible are subject to investigation by the DTI deregulation unit. MAFF's deregulation unit is co-ordinating a major deregulation programme within the department. All areas of legislation which impose burdens on industry will be subject to review with formal deregulation plans prepared for the main policy areas. One of the seven task forces to be set up following the Prime Minister's seminar on deregulation on 2 February will cover the food, drink and agriculture sector. It will be up to the task force chairman to decide what particular areas of MAFF legislation to investigate.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to give a Minister in his Department responsibility for animal welfare; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Farm animals welfare is already included among the specific responsibilities of the Parliamentary Secretary, House of Commons, in the Department.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to other EC Agriculture Ministers on the transport of live animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Agriculture Council is currently awaiting proposals from the Commission for further measures to safeguard the welfare of animals in transport. The United Kingdom has made clear in the Council that it attaches high importance to the development of further Community rules on this subject.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) of 18 February, Official Report, columns 345-46, which research study estimated that a 10 per cent. change in wages council rates would lead to a change in employment of 0·6 per cent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An estimate of this order of magnitude was made by Kaufman in 1989. That is one of several United Kingdom studies which show that statutory minima reduce job opportunities, although different estimates have been made about the size of the effects.

Trade Unions (Subscription Check-offs)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to her answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 590, what representations she received, and on what dates, that employers should be required to seek renewed consent to check-off deductions from their employees each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations to Government are automatically treated as confidential. The Institute of Directors publicly supported annual renewal of consent to check-off deductions in its response of 23 October 1991 to the Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s". As a result of that consultation exercise, our proposal was modified and the period of reaffirmation was increased to three years.

Unemployment, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many travel-to-work areas in each standard English economic region have (a) higher levels and (b) lower levels of unemployment than those areas including Southampton, Itchen on the latest available figures.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Skill Centres

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 337-38, on disposal of skills training agency or skill centre properties, if he will make a statement on the position of the remaining 10 properties.

Mr. McLoughlin: The ex-skill centre properties which remain unsold following the privatisation of the skills training agency are being actively marketed, on the open market, by the Department's agent surveyors, King Sturge and Co.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 337-38, on closure of skill centres, if she will list (a) the original 60 skill centres and (b) the eight sold with the skills training agency which she understands no longer to be functioning.

Mr. McLoughlin: (a) the original 60 skill centres were:

SCOTLAND

Water

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now intends to publish the Government's response to the consultation on options for the future of Scotland's water supplies.

Sir Hector Monro: Responses to the consultation paper are currently being studied. A large number of responses has been received and analysis will take time. A decision will be taken after this process is complete.

Crown Office Fraud Unit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those cases resulting in conviction on charges brought by the Crown Office fraud unit since its formation; and what were the dates of those convictions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the policy of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to make known historic information which identifies cases against individuals, in particular where they have served their sentences. In accordance with that policy, the annual report for the Crown Office and procurator fiscal service for 1991-92, which was placed in the Library, gives details, omitting names and dates, of cases which were prepared by the Crown Office fraud unit and were disposed of during that period. Between the establishment of the unit in 1984 and 1991 a total of 65 persons were convicted in cases which were prepared for prosecution by the fraud unit. Since the period 1991-92 three persons have been convicted of offences in three separate cases, two involving fraud and one of corruption, and they were respectively sentenced to imprisonment for three years and four years and to pay a fine of £400. Criminal proceedings are pending in eight cases, and in two further cases warrants have been issued for the arrest of the accused.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have had their period of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts extended pending the results of forensic tests.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend considers each application to extend the 48-hour period for which a person may be detained in light of arrest under section 14 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 very carefully. It would not be appropriate to categorise cases in the manner requested; but in his most recent report on the operation of the Act in 1992, Lord Colville, who looked at all the extension order files held by the Scottish Office for that year, states that "... the proper criteria are being carefully observed in considering whether extensions should be granted".

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided the level of fee remission grant which will be available to parents under the assisted places scheme in school session 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is making £9·965 million available for fee remission in 1993-94. Fifty-eight schools across Scotland will participate in the scheme. This funding will enable the record number of 3,000 pupils currently benefiting to be maintained.

KS Properties Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer on 2 February 1992, Official Report, columns 167-68, when his Department was informed by the Scottish Development Agency that (a) the security for the loan was by mortgage deed with KS Properties Ltd., (b) the waiving of the security as a result of the decision made by his Department is shown in the accounts of KS Properties Ltd. as financially benefiting KS Properties Ltd. and (c) there are no loans from the Scottish Development Agency recorded in the accounts of KS Construction Ltd.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Prevention

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what crime prevention initiatives his Department is currently supporting.

Mr. Jack: We are currently supporting 20 safer cities projects and planning the creation of a new type of project in order to fulfil our objective of achieving up to 40. We are setting up a National Board of Crime Prevention. The ministerial group on crime prevention will meet soon with its new membership. We are developing a good practice guide to provide advice for practitioners on the setting up and evaluation of crime prevention initiatives.

We continue to provide a contribution to the core costs of Crime Concern, the independent crime prevention organisation, and to fund the Home Office crime prevention centre to provide training and advice to police crime prevention officers and others. We run various publicity programmes and, in particular, we are following up the success of Car Crime Prevention Year. We continue to encourage the establishment of neighbourhood watch schemes and of crime prevention panels and the development of local multi-agency partnerships for crime prevention. Our police research group is currently supporting 16 crime prevention research and development initiatives. In addition, the programme development unit is funding a range of innovative local projects, which includes schemes aimed at tackling family violence. The probation service grants scheme also supports crime prevention projects.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the law relating to amusement arcades to restrict their use by children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the Home Office research study, "Amusement Machines: Dependency and Delinquency", published in July 1988, we have concluded that further legislative controls on the use of amusement machines by young people are not justified, although we continue to keep the need for legislation under review.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the prevention of the manufacture and use of gaming machines which can be adjusted to make illegal pay-outs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. We are satisfied that the enforcement powers of both the police and Gaming Board under the Gaming Act 1968 are sufficient to tackle any breaches of that Act as it relates to gaming machines.

Pornographic Material

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the penalty for possession of videotapes which are obscene by reason of the sexual or violent nature of their contents in cases where it is not alleged that trading has taken place.

Mr. Jack: The simple possession of an obscene videotape is not in itself a criminal offence, and the Government have no plans to make it so. It is, however, an offence under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to possess an indecent photograph, film or video recording of a child under the age of 16, subject to a maximum penalty on summary conviction of a level 5 fine (currently £5,000). It is also an offence under the Protection of Children Act 1978 to possess indecent pictures of this sort with a view to their distribution, while the Obscene Publications Act 1959, as amended by the Obscene Publications Act 1964, makes it an offence to have an obscene article for publication for gain. The offences under the 1959 and 1978 Acts are both subject to a maximum penalty on conviction on indictment of three years' imprisonment or an unlimited fine, or both. The Video Recordings Act 1984 prohibits the possesssion of an unclassified video recording for the purposes of supplying it, unless the recording is exempt from classification, or the supply, if it took place, would be an exempted supply. This offence is subject to a maximum penalty on summary conviction of a £20,000 fine.

The Government have no immediate plans to increase the penalties for these offences.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to engage private contractors to assist the police to search for and seize pornographic material and to recover the costs of such action from those who import, distribute, and sell, such material;

(2) what plans he has to encourage the use of section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 to order the seizure of pornographic magazines, books, videos, and other materials; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what assessment he has made of the desirability of changing the rules of evidence so as to enable pornographic magazines, books, videos and other materials to be seized more cheaply and efficiently.

Mr. Jack: As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point on 5 February at column 350, we are currently considering what improvements might be made in the enforcement of the Obscene Publications Acts 1959 and 1964, and other legislation relating to obscenity. This includes consideration of possible improvements in the effectiveness of the operation of section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959, which enables the police to obtain a magistrate's warrant to search for and seize obscene articles kept for publication for gain, and provides that such articles shall be brought before the magistrates for forfeiture.

The deployment of police resources in matters such as seizures is an operational matter for chief constables and it would not be right for my right hon. and learned Friend to seek to influence the priority which they attach to the various demands placed upon them. There is no evidence that chief constables are unaware of their powers in this area. In 1992, over 17,000 video tapes were seized by the Metropolitan and Greater Manchester forces alone.

Right of Silence

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to modify the right of silence so that courts may take fully into account the failure of defendants to answer questions put to them by an investigating officer in the presence of their solicitor and recorded on videotape.

Mr. Jack: The opportunities available for an accused person to state his position and the extent to which it might be appropriate for courts to draw proper inferences from his failure to do so, are among the matters being considered by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, which will be taking into consideration both the existing safeguards for accused persons and the potential for any further safeguards. The Government intend to study the Royal Commission's conclusions before deciding any and if so what changes may be necessary.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to extend the function of the Child Support Agency to pay to the victims of crime the sum awarded to them by a court compensation order and to recover that sum from the offender against whom the order was made.

Mr. Jack: I am writing to the hon. Member to explain why the Government do not think that it would be appropriate to proceed in this way.

North Devon Police

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of policemen on the beat in North Devon.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The deployment of resources within the Devon and Cornwall constabulary is a matter for the chief constable. He must decide how best to deploy his officers in order to meet his operational priorities and the objectives of his force.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish crime figures for North Devon for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will provide details of the numbers of crimes, by category, (a) committed and (b) solved in North Devon between April 1991 and April 1992.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally for north Devon.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish figures showing the level of funding of Devon and Cornwall constabulary for each year since 1987 at 1987 prices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following table shows the total expenditure of the Devon and Cornwall constabulary for the years requested. Specific grant at the rate of 51 per cent. is paid on police expenditure.

Year	Total net expenditure £ million	Expenditure at 1987-88 prices £ million
1987-88	76·629	76·629
1988-89	85·227	79·443
1989-90	93·697	81·951
[1]1990-91	107·797	87·313
[1]1991-92	121·467	92·027
[1] [2]1992-93	137·560	99·971

[1] Because of change in capital financing arrangements in 1990 some caution should be used in comparing 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 with earlier years.

[2] Estimated expenditure.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to enable the appointment of more police officers in Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In view of the present economic situation, and the need to constrain public expenditure, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided that the costs of increases in establishment for police forces in 1993-94 cannot be justified.

Criminal Records

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a national computer database for the immediate registration of bail orders for the information of any other court when considering an application for bail by an arrested person.

Mr. Jack: The national criminal record system, which is expected to come into operation in spring 1994, will have the facility for recording the remand status of the defendant, although it will only be at a later state of the project that courts will be able to enter and retrieve this information directly.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that the computer database containing the criminal records of convicted persons is kept fully up to date, including brief facts of each offence, for the information of courts when sentencing or considering bail applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The national criminal record system, which is expected to come into operation in spring 1994, will be kept up to date through the direct input of data by police forces and will include brief details of each offence entered on the system.

Unit Fines

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the operation of the unit fine system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The operation of the unit fine scheme is being carefully monitored. However, as it only came into operation on 1 October 1992, there is, at present, insufficient experience of its operation for precise or firm conclusions to be drawn about its effectiveness.

Prisons

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make more room available in prisons by removing prisoners who are not a danger to the public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present intention of using his power under section 32 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982. This allows him to order the release of some prisoners, essentially non-violent property offenders, up to six months before what would otherwise have been their release date. It is, however, one of the principal aims of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to ensure that the use of custody is imposed only on those offenders whose offences are so serious that custody is the only appropriate response or for whom custody is necessary in order to protect the public from serious harm.

Secure Schools

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to provide secure schools in which any child over the age of 10 years can be educated in a kind but disciplined environment until the attainment of their normal school leaving age.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend on 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-42.

Prison Education

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the role of education in prisons; and if he will allow remission to prisoners who apply themselves to their education and obtain a recognised educational qualification while in prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice: The Way Ahead for the Prison Service in England and Wales" (Cm 1647), the Government stated that education is an essential part of the opportunities which must be provided in a prison. In recent years, the Government have significantly increased the resources devoted to education in prisons; the details of which were provided in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 16 December 1992 at column 215.

It would not be right to use the royal prerogative to award a prisoner special remission for educational achievement. It is, however, a consideration which the Parole Board can take into account in determining whether an offender, who has shown a willingness by attitude or behaviour in custody to address his or her offending behaviour and has made positive efforts and progress in doing so, should be recommended for early release.

Ilfracombe (Drug-related Crime)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about drugs-related crime in Ilfracombe, North Devon.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There has been a recent increase in drug-related crime in Ilfracombe. Devon and Cornwall constabulary is aware of the problem and is taking measures to tackle it.

Special Constables

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will encourage police authorities to recruit more special constables in order to protect the public in shopping centres, on public transport, in areas with a high incidence of burglary, and in other places where the public is particularly at risk.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A national recruitment campaign for special constables has been running since 1991. In the first year of the campaign, numbers increased by 14 per cent. to just over 18,000. The deployment of special constables within a police force area is a matter for the chief constable concerned, but they commonly perform patrol duties in public places.

Crime (Clear-up Rates)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the clear-up rate for each police force in 1992 was accounted for by offences taken into consideration.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not yet available for 1992.

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussion he has had with senior police officers in areas of England and Wales which have the problems of prostitution and violence, as to action that will give protection to people living in such areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: From time to time Ministers meet senior police officers to discuss crime including prostitution and violence. It is for chief officers to decide what action should be taken in areas which are particularly affected by prostitution and violence.

Prevention of Terrorism Legislation

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list all cases since the passage of the 1974 Prevention of Terrorism legislation in which persons have been found guilty of offences connected with Irish terrorism in Great Britain, stating, in each case, the sentence imposed by the courts and whether the person concerned was originally arrested under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism legislation; (2) how many persons have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism legislation since 1974, stating (a) how many were charged with offences, (b) how many were tried, (c) how many were convicted, (d) in the cases of those convicted, how many were imprisoned and (e) in the cases of those sentenced to imprisonment, how many of those were sentenced for (i) up to three months, (ii) three to six months, (iii) one to nine months, (iv) nine to 12 months, (v) 12 to 18 months, (vi) 18 to 24 months and (vii) more than 24 months, listing these individually by length of sentence.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information is contained in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin on the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism legislation (issues 10/84 and 5/93).

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those persons who have been found to have been wrongfully imprisoned for offences in Great Britain connected with Irish terrorism, stating, in each case, whether he or she was originally arrested under Prevention of Terrorism legislation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since the coming into force of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1974 on 29 November 1974, the convictions of the following people for offences connected with Northern Irish terrorism have been quashed by the Court of Appeal following a reference under section 17(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968:

Paul Hill	Patrick O'Neill
Gerard Conlon	Patrick Conlon* (deceased)
Patrick Armstrong	Patrick Hill
Carole Richardson	Robert Hunter
Anne Maguire*	Noel McIlkenny
Patrick Maguire	Hugh Callaghan
William Smyth*	William Power
Vincent Maguire	John Walker
Patrick Joseph Maguire*	Judith Ward

Of these the four marked with an asterisk had been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism legislation before being charged with the offences in question but this had no relevance to the quashing of their convictions.

There have been no referrals in such cases to the High Court in Scotland by the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Information on people who have been convicted by the courts of offences connected with Northern Irish terrorism and whose convictions have subsequently been quashed by the Court of Appeal or the High Court in Scotland other than on a reference by the appropriate Secretary of State is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the terrorist incidents carried out in Great Britain since the enactment of the 1974 Prevention of Terrorism legislation with, for each incident, where appropriate, the numbers, respectively, of killed and injured.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1974 came into effect on 29 November 1974. A list of terrorist incidents relating to Northern Irish terrorism in Great Britain since that date, including the date, the location and, where appropriate, the numbers of people killed or injured, is in the following table. Before 1989, only those incidents which caused death or injury are recorded.

Medomsley Prison

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current situation of the building that formerly housed HM Prison Medomsley; and what plans his Department have for that building.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to use the site at Medomsley as a prison again. The property has been advertised for sale, but no acceptable offer has yet been received.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish his provisional list for market testing in respect of his responsibilities with a view to contracting out for the period September 1993 to March 1995.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not yet decided the content of future market testing programmes.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much capital money his Department (a) has available and (b) has allocated for the provision of secure units for young people in England in 1992-93; and if he will provide a list of the establishments concerned and the sums allocated in each case;

(2) how much capital money his Department (a) made available and (b) spent on the provision of secure units for young people in England in 1991-92 and each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 March 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 3 March at cols. 169-70.

Convictions

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of crimes led to successful convictions in each of the last five years for which figures are available for each county; what was the average figure (a) for England, (b) for Wales and (c) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of recorded crimes has led to successful convictions in each of the last five years for which there are figures, in each county in England and Wales; what were the average figures for England, Wales and for the United Kingdom for the same years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The information is not available. Information on recorded offences and court proceedings is compiled on different bases and a measure that combines the two therefore cannot be prepared. Figures for crimes cleared up by means of charge or summons were given in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 4 February at cols. 291-92.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about revising the basis on which crime statistics are collected.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My Department is currently looking at revising the rules and instructions for the forces to follow in collecting crime statistics. As part of this process each force, as well as representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, have been consulted. I expect a set of proposals to be submitted for my approval later this year.

Crime (Staffordshire)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was (a) the number of reported thefts from motor vehicles in Staffordshire in each year since 1979 and (b) the percentage differences in the number of reported thefts from motor vehicles in Staffordshire between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what was (a) the number of reported thefts of motor vehicles in Staffordshire in each year since 1979 and (b) the percentage difference in the number of reported thefts of motor vehicles in Staffordshire between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(3) what was (a) the number of reported burglaries in Staffordshire for each year since 1979 and (b) the percentage difference in the number of reported burglaries in Staffordshire between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(4) what was (a) the level of recorded crime in Staffordshire for each year since 1979 and (b) the percentage difference in the level of reported crime in Staffordshire between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The available information is for recorded offences. Statistics for 1979 are published in table 32 of the 1979 volume of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Statistics for 1980-91 are published annually in table 3.1 of the "Criminal Statistics, Supplementary Volume 3"—copies of these publications are available in the Library. Figures for 1992 are not yet available. Figures for percentage changes between 1979 and 1991, the latest available year, are as follows:

Notifiable offences recorded by the police—Staffordshire

Offence	Percentage change 1991 compared with 1979
Theft from vehicle	+248
Theft of vehicle	+223
Burglaries	+193
Total overall recorded crime	+127

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Firms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take the necessary action to require all employees of security firms (a) to be registered by the police authority, (b) to be issued with a personal number and (c) to be required to wear their personal identification number prominently and visually; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The Government's policy is to promote self-regulation in the private security industry.

Electoral Malpractice

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the penalties for electoral malpractice;

(2) what proposals he has to increase the penalties for corrupt or illegal electoral practices;

(3) what proposals he has for the revision of the law on illegal electoral practices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The penalties for corrupt practices, illegal practices and other offences are set out in the Representation of the People Act 1983. We have no proposals for revising the law.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for amendment of the legislation on the conduct of elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have set up five working groups of Home Office officials and representatives of returning officers and local authorities to consider different aspects of the electoral process. We shall consider the findings of the working groups once they have concluded their work.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for extension of the time for submission of electoral expense returns.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such proposals.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to investigate the value of human tissue as an alternative to both live animal experimentation and experiments with animal tissues.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office, on the advice of the Animal Procedures Committee, funds research into ways of refining, reducing and replacing the use of living animals in scientific procedures. Applications for funding are considered by the research sub-committee of the APC.

Police Interview Notes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many instances in each of the past three years criminal convictions have been referred back to the Court of Appeal following re-examination of the original police interview notes.

Mr. Jack: The re-examination of original police interview notes was a factor in the reference to the Court of Appeal of one case in 1990, four cases in 1991 and three cases in 1992.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests have been made to the police in each of the past three years for the disclosure of original interview notes in cases where criminal charges have been brought; in how many instances these requests have been denied; and for what reasons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available. Records are not held in a form which would identify such requests.

Prison Service (Supply and Transport)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future arrangements for the warehousing and distribution function of the prison service's supply and transport branch.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following the market testing of the warehousing and distribution function, I approved, in July 1992, the award of a contract to a private sector company, subject inter alia to the negotiation of a satisfactory contract. It has not been possible to negotiate such a contract, and the next best bid, which is the in-house bid, now becomes the preferred bid. I have instructed officials to negotiate a service level agreement with the in-house providers. I expect the outcome of this market test to reduce the present costs of this function by about a quarter over three years.

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the probation service budget in England and Wales was spent on (a) research and information and (b) administration in 1981, 1991 and 1992 respectively.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 February 1993]: Probation service expenditure, while broken down, is not done so in such a way as to enable this information to be given.

Probation areas, taking account of both national and local plans and priorities, make their own decisions about expenditure on research and on administration. Much valuable research work as well as essential information work is conducted within probation areas.

The number of personnel employed by probation committee in England and Wales as research and information officers and as clerical, secretarial and adminstrative staff was as follows (percentage of total staff in parentheses):

	31 December 1981	per cent.	31 December 1991[1]	per cent.	30 September 1992[1]	per cent.
Research and information officers	n/a	(n/a)	63·5	(0·4)	66·7	(0·5)
Clerical, secretarial and administrative staff	[2]3,461	(29·0)	4,378	(30·5)	4,513	(30·8)

[1]Figures are full-time equivalents.
[2] Includes 947 part-time staff.

Telephone Sex Lines

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to ban sex lines from the public telephone system.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

There is an effective system of regulatory control of these services; they are obliged to operate under a code of practice drawn up and monitored by the independent committee for the supervision of standards in telephone information services (ICSTIS). The code sets detailed conditions for the content, conditions of access and advertising of the services.

Telephone subscribers also have the opportunity to request call barring, which makes it impossible to call the services from their line. BT provides this facility free of charge.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

High Court Judges

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether additional judges will be appointed to reduce delays in the High Court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice have now considered the advice of the group of judges and officials chaired by Lord Justice Kennedy. This is contained in the group's report on High Court judges' work, deployment and numbers, copies of which will be made available to the Libraries of both Houses.

As a result of that advice, the Lord Chancellor and I have decided to seek parliamentary and Privy Council approval in the near future to increase the statutory maximum number of judges.

Subject to that approval, the Lord Chancellor intends as soon as possible to recommend the appointment of 10 additional High Court judges, and he has agreed with the Lord Chief Justice and the Vice-Chancellor that the additional judges will be deployed in such a way as to reduce delays and backlogs in the chancery division, the Court of Appeal criminal division, the Crown Office list, the employment appeal tribunal and the commercial court.

EDUCATION

Market Testing

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will subject the work of his Department's solicitors branch to market testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: There are no immediate plans to market test the work of the Department's legal branch.

Education Spending

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority in England and Wales for each year since 1985 (a) their total spending, (b) their spending per pupil and (c) their spending per pupil at nursery, primary and secondary stages of education.

Mr. Forth: The information for England for parts (a) and (b) is given in table 1, and for part (c) in table 2. Expenditure on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. Figures given relate to net institutional expenditure rather than total LEA spending. The tables show spending in cash for years up to 1990-91, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available.

Notes:

1. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. For 1990-91, figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.
2. Table 1 omits data for 1988-89 because comparable figures are not available.
3. Figures in both tables up to 1989-90 are from the Cipfa publication "Education Statistics Actuals incorporating The Handbook of Unit Cost" for each relevant year. For 1990-91, figures are derived directly from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education.
4. Spending on nursery and primary schools was not collected separately for years after 1986-87.

TRANSPORT

Road Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those road schemes currently proposed by his Department which will have effects on (a) sites of special interest, (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty and (c) national parks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We place great emphasis on environmental considerations when assessing road proposals. Wherever possible roads are kept away from protected areas such as sites of special scientific interest, areas of outstanding natural beauty, and national parks. We consult statutory environmental organisations from the earliest stages of route development to ensure that impacts on protected areas, where unavoidable, are limited, and appropriate mitigation measures put in place, including the creation of new habitats.

The following lists are confined to schemes for which preferred routes have been announced, but have not reached construction stage.

Proposals for road schemes which would affect sites of special scientific interest are:

M1-A1 link (Lofthouse—Bramham)
M6 junctions 30—32
M25 junctions 12—15 (link roads)
M66 Denton—Middleton
A1 (M) Redhouse—Ferrybridge
A1 (M)Ferrybridge—Hook Moor
A2/A282 Dartford improvements
A3 Hindhead improvements (preferred route under review)
A5 Dunstable bypass
A6 Clapham bypass
A10 Wadesmill and Colliers End bypass
A10/A47 A134 to Hardwick roundabout
A13 Thames avenue—Wennington
A17 Leadenham—Sleaford improvements
A30 Shallowater hill improvement
A30/A39 Indian Queens/Fraddon bypass
A34 Newbury bypass
A35 Chideock—Morcombelake bypass
A43 Geddington bypass
A45 Stonebridge grade separated junction
A49/A465 Hereford bypass
A64 York bypass—Malton bypass
A65 Hellifield—Long Preston bypass
A120 Stansted—Braintree
A259 Bexhill and Hastings western bypass
A259 Dymchurch—M20 (junction 11)
A259 Pevensey—Bexhill improvement
A259 Rye bypass
A303 Wylye—Stockton Wood
A406 East London river crossing
A585 Norcross—M55 link
A650 Airedale Route (Crossflatts—Cottingley Bar)
Birmingham northern relief road
Kidderminster, Blakedown and Hagley bypass

Proposals for road schemes which would affect areas of outstanding natural beauty are:

M20 junctions 3-5
M25 junctions 12-15 (link roads)
M25 widening junctions 16-23
A3 Hindhead improvement (preferred route under review)
A4/A46 Batheaston/Swainswick bypass
A5 Dunstable bypass
A16 Fotherby bypass
A16 Partney bypass
A21 Lamberhurst bypass
A21 Tonbridge-Pembury
A21 Kippings Cross-Lamberhurst
A23 Handcross-Warninglid improvement
A27 Patching junction
A27 Worthing-Lancing improvement
A30 Marsh-Honiton
A30 Shallowater hill improvement
A34 Newbury bypass
A34 (A34/M4 junction 13) improvement
A35 Chideock-Morecombelake bypass
A36 Codford-Heytesbury
A39 Allins-South Penlean
A40 Witney bypass-Sturt Farm improvement
A41 Aston Clinton bypass
A46 Upper Swainswick-Pennsylvania
A64 York bypass-Malton bypass
A65 Ilkley bypass
A66 Stainmore-Banksgate
A259 Winchelsea bypass
A259 Dymchurch-M20 (junction 11)
A259 Hastings eastern bypass
A303 Ilminster-Marsh
A303 Wylye-Stockton Wood
A417 Brockworth bypass
A417 Cirencester-Stratton bypass
A417 North of Stratton-Nettleton

Proposals for road schemes which would affect national parks are:

A65 Gargrave bypass
A65 Hellifield-Long Preston bypass
A616/A628 Salters Brook-Stockbridge

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate his Department has made of the increase of carbon dioxide emissions from transport from 1985 to 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1985 the transport sector emitted 26 million tonnes of carbon (calculated by source). It is estimated that in 2000 transport emissions will be between 38 and 40 million tonnes of carbon (Source: Warren Spring laboratory).

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) energy consumption and (b) carbon dioxide emissions transport was responsible for in the most recent period for which an estimate has been made; what percentage of this was attributed to roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1991 the transport sector accounted for 22 per cent. of total inland energy consumption of primary fuels and equivalents (Source: Department of Trade and Industry). Road transport accounted for 80 per cent. of the sector's energy consumption. In 1990 24 per cent. of carbon dioxide emissions, by end user, were allocated to the transport sector, of which 90 per cent. came from road transport (Source: Warren Spring laboratory).

Railways (Crimes)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statistics for crimes of all kinds committed against passengers on all British Rail lines over the past five years.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Figures for crimes committed against passengers are not readily available prior to 1991. However, figures for 1991 and 1992 are in the following table:

	1991	1992
Robberies	591	760
Rape and indecent assaults	195	217
Assaults	615	664

	1991	1992
Others (non-violent)	28,996	29,432
Total	30,397	31,073

Road Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to issue guidelines to local authorities concerning the use of red light and speed cameras for deterrent and road safety purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Advice was issued to local authorities in England and Wales in March 1992 (Department of Transport Circular Roads 1/92, Welsh Office Circular 22/92) and to local authorities in Scotland in June 1992 (SOID Circular 7/92).

Rail Freight

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparative statistics he has on the use of rail to transport freight in each country in the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Table 8.10 of Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992 shows freight moved by national vehicles on national territory in 1980 and 1990. Copies are available in the Library.

An important reason for national differences is economic geography. The long coastlines of the United Kingdom, Italy and Spain favour coastal shipping, while the topography of the Netherlands favours inland waterways. France, Belgium, Luxembourg and Germany cover a land mass favourable to rail for bulk transport, and with long hauls giving some advantage to rail over road.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

War Crimes Act 1991

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the operation so far of the War Crimes Act 1991.

The Solicitor-General: Investigations continue in the manner set out in the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the hon. Member on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 14. The number of cases under investigation in England and Wales is 90. The prosecuting authorities will consider each case at the conclusion of the relevant police investigation. I cannot predict whether and when any prosecutions will be initiated.

EC (Acquired Rights Directive)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions the Government have appeared before the European Court of Justice in cases concerning the European Community acquired rights directive (77/187); and what was the total cost to the Government of such representations.

The Attorney-General [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The United Kingdom has intervened on five occasions before the European Court of Justice in cases concerning the acquired rights directive, 77/187, the first of which was in 1983. The cost of time spent by officials in preparing and in some cases presenting the cases cannot be calculated retrospectively. Some information is however still available about disbursements and I will write to the hon. Member with details about this once the records have been checked.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Language

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to embrace cultural diversity within the Province and to support the Irish language in the context of European Community policy on lesser-spoken languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is the Government's policy to promote cultural diversity—for example, through the cultural traditions group funded under the cultural traditional programme—and I hope that it will soon be possible to hold further talks to take forward the preliminary consideration given to this matter last year. As for support for the Irish language, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 9,and on 17 November 1992 Official Report, columns 149-52, where information was provided on Government support for the Irish language. The Government are still considering whether to sign the Council of Europe convention on regional and minority languages.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Irleland what is his estimate of the number of people in Northern Ireland who use Irish as a medium of communication in their daily life.

Mr. Hanley: Up-to-date information on the number of people in Northern Ireland using Irish as a medium of communication in their daily lives is not available. The 1991 census of population, which contains the most recent information on knowledge of the language, indicates that 131,974 persons aged three or over had some ability. The 1987 continuous household survey indicated that, of those with some knowledge of the language, 1 per cent. of those aged 16 to 69 and five per cent. of those aged three to 15 years used it in the home on a daily basis.

North-South Co-operation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to seek the removal of all barriers occasioned by the border to the closest possible relationships in Ireland between north and south, through people-to-people contacts and co-operation across a range of policy areas, as part of a wider framework of European Community inter-regional co-operation involving the EC and the new Committee of the Regions; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: It is already my policy to promote cross-border co-operation at individual level, through bi-lateral contact, and in the wider European Community framework.

I have welcomed in particular the removal of barriers to trade with the creation of the single market and will continue to look for opportunities for the promotion of educational exchanges, cultural contacts, community development projects, tourism, export promotion and measures to improve the infrastructure of Northern Ireland's economy. These were issues addressed during last year's talks which focused on relationships among the people of the island of Ireland, as well as those within Northern Ireland and between the two Governments. I hope that it will soon be possible to hold further talks to continue to address these issues as part of a comprehensive agenda.

Educational Administration

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that any change in structure of educational administration in Northern Ireland, as advanced in the consultative document, will not result in any real cut in the appropriation of funds to the Department of Education, after the implementation of a revised administrative structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: While the stated objectives of the consultative document include achieving greater effectiveness, efficiency and economy so as to improve education services in Northern Ireland, the extent of any net savings cannot be evaluated until the Government have analysed the cost of setting up and operating any new structures. At that stage, the overall expenditure needs of the Department of Education, like those of other Northern Ireland Departments, will have to be decided in the public expenditure survey, in the usual way.

Assembly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will establish an inquiry into the case for a Northern Ireland assembly elected by proportional representation, with a high degree of autonomy within the United Kingdom, with the ability to represent Northern Ireland directly to the institutions of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I continue to urge the need for further political dialogue on such issues. The talks which took place last year identified common themes and principles which should underlie any new political institutions in Northern Ireland and examined possible structures which might reflect these. Preliminary consideration was also given to the possible future relationship between any new political institutions in Northern Ireland and the institutions of the European Community. I hope it will be possible to agree a basis for fresh talks which could make further progress towards agreement on these and other relevant issues.

Police Interview Notes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many instances in each of the past three years criminal convictions have been referred back to the Court of Appeal following re-examination of the original police interview notes.

Mr. Mates: One case, involving four men, in 1991.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on vehicle registration for Derry city outlining the reasons for avoiding alphabetical sequence by progressing from EUI to GUI registration.

Mr. Atkins: In common with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Great Britain, the Department of Environment (NI) vets vehicle registration marks to avoid the issue of any combination of letters, or letters and numbers, which might cause, or be thought to cause, offence. FUI was regarded as such a combination.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil List

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange for those payments to members of the royal family made through the civil list to be subject to audit and scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

The Prime Minister: The payments of the annuities to members of the royal family from the Consolidated Fund are already subject to National Audit Office audit. Her Majesty the Queen has agreed to refund those costs, except for the annuities for the Queen Mother and the Duke of Edinburgh.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what is the highest rank in the civil service or Government to which market testing will be applied.

Prime Minister: Market testing could apply in principle to any suitable activity and would, therefore, affect staff at any grade in market tested areas.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received on nuclear testing during his recent visit to Washington.

The Prime Minister: During my visit I received one letter about nuclear testing from a United States congressman.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 671, if he will list the titles of the papers his office has made available to the Scott inquiry.

The Prime Minister: No. It would not be appropriate to do so.

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the latest figure for people employed in the tourist industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people were employed in the tourist industry in Wales in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In September 1989 there were 71,100 people directly employed in tourism in Wales. More recent data are not available. The definition of these industries is consistent with that of table 8.1 in the Employment Gazette a monthly periodical produced by the Employment Department, which is available in the Library of the House.

Community Charge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many summonses have been served concerning moneys outstanding on the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total number of summonses issued by Welsh courts in respect of arrears in payment of community charge for the period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1992 was 1,179,064. Some people may have been summonsed in more than one financial year.

Prompt action by local authorities in the use of enforcement procedures has had the desired effect. Welsh local authorities anticipate that they will collect more than they budgeted to collect when the 1992-93 charges were set. This surplus will be passed on in council tax bills for 1993-94, giving an average reduction for a band C property of £15.

Business Rate

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many business rate appeals are currently outstanding; how many non-domestic rating appeals were originally received following the revaluation on 1 April 1990; and how many of these original appeals have since been resolved.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Following the revaluation of non-domestic property on 1 April 1990, 26,710 appeals were received. Around 18,000 of these have been resolved. The total number of appeals outstanding at 31 January 1993 was 18,290.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of bankruptcies in each year since 1987 (a) in Wales and (b) in England.

Mr. David Hunt: Official estimates of bankruptcy orders are compiled for Wales and England together and are not separately available for Wales.

Estimates of bankruptcy orders for England and Wales for each of the years in question are as follows:

	Bankruptcy Orders
1987	6,994
1988	7,717
1989	8,138
1990	12,058
1991	22,632
1992	32,106

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government remain committed to the wider application of compulsory competitive tendering to local government. This will secure greater efficiency and a higher standard of service to local tax payers.

DSS (Transfer of Funds)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a figure for the cumulative transfer of funds from the Department of Social Services to his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: The amount transferred from the Department of Social Security to local authorities and the NHS in Wales is as follows:

	Cumulative Amount
	£ million
1993-94	27.8
1994-95	72.9
1995-96	108.6

School Populations

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average size of each school population for which each education authority in Wales is responsible.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the average size of schools maintained by each local education authority at January 1992 is given in the table.

	Primary[1]	Secondary[2]
Clwyd	164	811
Dyfed	103	775
Gwent	205	891
Gwynedd	100	667
Mid Glamorgan	184	876
Powys	96	600
South Glamorgan	244	983
West Glamorgan	227	847
Wales	164	827

[1] Includes full and part-time pupils.
[2] Excludes grant-maintained schools.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many professional assessors there are in the county of Powys who are capable of assessing the needs of children and young people who are prima facie in need of special education provision through the medium of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Development Agency regarding new regional headquarters offices for the north East Wales and Swansea and West Glamorgan district operations of the agency.

Mr. David Hunt: I regularly meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss a wide range of issues.

Orthopaedic Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the south Glamorgan health authority regarding the completion of the contract with his Department to provide 200 additional knee and hip replacement operations for those on consultants' waiting books for more than 18 months; what approaches have been made to him in relation to staffing difficulties in orthopaedic operating theatres in the Cardiff Royal Group of Hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for meeting the patients charter guarantees for knee and hip replacement operations rests with health authorities, who need to negotiate appropriate contracts with a range of providers.

No approaches have been made to the Department about staffing levels in orthopaedic theatres in any of the hospitals in the Cardiff Royal Group.

Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement to the House on 1 March, Official Report, columns 22-23, in relation to Cardiff's status as capital city of Wales, when he proposes to meet the leaders of Cardiff city council and South Glamorgan county council, and the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation; by what date he intends to complete the definition of the study into Cardiff's future; what financial contribution he intends to make towards the cost of such consultancy studies as arise from the definition of a study; what public consultation exercise he will propose; and when he proposes to make a further statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect the meeting to take place shortly. No decisions will be taken until I have discussed the proposal fully with those concerned.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the West Glamorgan and the North East Wales training and enterprise councils requesting approval for an expenditure from accumulated surpluses on TEC headquarters buildings; if he will issue guidelines on capital expenditure financed from accumulated surpluses on accommodation; if he will make it his policy to cap expenditure on office accommodation by TECs in excess of own requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: TECs are required to seek my approval for all expenditure including the use of operating surpluses. To date only one major capital expenditure project, the North East Wales TEC business development centre, has been approved. TEC proposals are considered on their merit in support of local economic development but the normal criteria governing expenditure on capital projects are applied.

EMPLOYMENT

President of Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of the removal of the accommodation of the president of industrial tribunals to 29 Woburn place; and how much of that cost was incurred for the refurbishing of those premises.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is planned to move the president of industrial tribunals and support staff from existing accommodation in Gatcliffe house, Ebury Bridge road, to refurbished accommodation at 29 Woburn place. The estimated cost of this relocation is £427,000 of which £383,000 is for refurbishing the premises.

Women's Issues

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd), of 8 February, Official Report, column 504, on how many occasions decisions of the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Women's Issues have been made known to Parliament and the public.

Mr. McLoughlin: Announcements on the Government's decisions, arrived at through Cabinet Committee meetings, will be made as appropriate.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 469, what is her Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department's current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 is £11·5 million. Budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94 is £12 million. These figures include publicity expenditure for the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service and the Health and Safety Executive.

Unemployment

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 319, if she will give a regional breakdown of the figure of 275,000 unemployed whose last job was in self-employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates from the summer (June to August) 1992 indicate that in each region of Great Britain the numbers unemployed on the International Labour Organisation definition (not seasonally adjusted), who reported their employment status in their last job as self-employed were as follows.

Region	Number
Great Britain	275,000
Northern	[1]
Yorkshire and Humberside	17,000
East Midlands	19,000
East Anglia	12,000
South East	117,000

Region	Number
Greater London	51,000
Rest of South East	66,000
South West	32,000
West Midlands	20,000
North West	26,000
Wales	11,000
Scotland	14,000

[1]— Estimate below 10,000.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people who had been unemployed in the United Kingdom for 12 months and more were (a) 18 to 25 years, (b) 26 to 40, (c) 41 to 50 and (d) 50 to 65 plus years in May 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Claimant unemployment figures by age and duration are only available from October 1983, and only on a quarterly basis, for specific age and duration bands. The table gives the extent of the available data.

United Kingdom claimant unemployed for over 12 months (not seasonally adjusted)

Age	October 1983	January 1993
18-24	320,202	209,554
25-39	358,197	431,239
40-49	177,077	191,449
50+	268,636	197,844
Total 18+	1,124,112	1,030,086

Employment Training

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 126, if she will give for each year of operation the numbers getting jobs immediately after leaving an employment training scheme and in jobs six months after leaving a scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information available is in the following table.

Employment training: Job outcomes for Great Britain

per cent.

Year	Proportion of leavers in a job[1]
	Immediately after leaving their training	Six months after leaving their training
July 1989 to March 1990	26	n/a
April 1990 to March 1991	25	n/a
April 1991 to March 1992	20	[2]31

Source: Employment training leavers and follow-up databases.
Notes:

[1]Jobs includes full-time, part-time and self-employment.
[2]Former trainees have been surveyed six months after leaving employment training only since January 1991.

Community Work, Swindon

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to encourage work in the community in Swindon.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has been reviewing with colleagues the range of measures we already have in place to help unemployed people to find and keep jobs, to ensure that they are as effective as possible.

We have been examining further ways in which to enable unemployed people to use their time actively and constructively so that they remain in touch with the world of work.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by her Department to ensure the payment of redundancy payments at Matrix Churchill in the Coventry area; and how many jobs are involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: The redundancy payments service has paid statutory redundancy payments from the national insurance fund to 209 former employees of Matrix Churchill Ltd. A further five claims were rejected as ineligible. The last payment was made on 15 February; there are no outstanding claims.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average value per user of concessionary bus fares schemes for the elderly provided by each district council in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Information on concessionary fare schemes for the elderly is not available.

Expenditure each year on concessionary fares schemes in total by Cambridgeshire county council and each district council in Cambridgeshire is shown in the table. The figures, supplied by local authorities, include expenditure on concessions for the elderly, disabled, blind and young people. The Department does not have information on the number of users of the concessionary fares schemes.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Children's Theatre

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the Arts Council project grants which have been granted to children's theatre.

Mr. Brooke: During the current year, there were nine project grants awarded to children's theatre companies, as follows:

Lambeth Children's Theatre	28,000
Neti Neti	28,000
Open Hand	22,220
Dodgy Clutch	18,070
Action Transport	16,650
The Glee Club	15,600
MYPT	15,000
Token Gestures	11,700
Working Parts	6,000

There were additionally seven project grants to young people's theatre and theatre in education groups. The Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils and the regional arts boards also made project grants to a large number of children's and young people's theatre groups.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will discuss with the regional arts boards the establishment of specific awards to children's theatre within their areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Arts Council and the former regional arts associations issued a joint policy statement on theatre for children and young people, following the 1985 Warwick conference. That policy still applies and continues to be widely endorsed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetic Diversity

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to ensure preservation of genetic diversity in vegetable, fruit and grain varieties.

Mr. Curry: The Department funds a number of plant genetic resource collections, including the vegetable gene bank at Wellesbourne, Warwickshire and the national fruit collection at Brogdale, Kent. The Government, through the Overseas Development Administration, is a major funder of the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources and other centres that hold collections of genetic resources. The Government participate in international efforts to establish networks of ex-situ plant genetic resource collections.

Poultry Inspection

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place or are taking place on the establishment of an egency for the purposes of poultry meat inspection.

Mr. Soames: The Government announced last year that a national meat hygiene service is to be established. It will be responsible for enforcing hygiene and welfare rules in licensed fresh red and white meat plants in Great Britain. It will have an important deregulatory impact by providing a consistent and cost-effective service which will be of benefit to industry and consumers alike. Detailed planning is under way, in close consultation and discussion with all the interested organisations concerned.

Agricultural Training Board (Secretary)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what post inspection was undertaken by his Department in the case of an Agricultural Training Board secretary who failed the civil service typewriting grade test in 1987, and had the grade of post altered to assistant administrative officer.

Mr. Curry: We are unable to supply the information required without further details to enable identification of the post in question. The grade of assistant administrative officer is not one used within the agricultural training board.

Myxomatosis

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 209, if he will make a further statement on the availability of myxomatosis vaccine.

Mr. Soames: On 18 February the Veterinary Products Committee considered the data supplied by Intervet (UK) Ltd. in support of their application for a licence for a myxomatosis vaccine. It advised that a licence could be issued provided the company met certain conditions. The company is addressing these. I hope a licence will be issued later this month, although, on this basis, it is likely to be May before the company is able to make supplies widely available.

Oxamyl

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will detail the measures taken by his Department to ensure the absence of Oxamyl from imported food; and how many prosecutions for the presence of Oxamyl there have been during the past 12 months.

Mr. Soames: Oxamyl is approved for use on food crops in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. Monitoring of both domestically produced and imported food is carried out by the Government's working party on pesticide residues. Maximum residue levels for oxamyl in various crops have been set by the United Nations Codex Alimentarius Commission. There have been no prosecutions for the presence of Oxamyl during the past 12 months.

Moroccan Tomatoes

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the importation of Moroccan tomatoes.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has received one letter about the effect of tomato imports from Morocco on growers' returns.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has now completed his review of the five environmentally sensitive areas which were first designated in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am today laying before both Houses of Parliament statutory instruments providing for the upgrading of the five environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) that were first designated in 1988. These are:

Breckland;
Clun (formerly Shropshire Borders);
North Peak;
Suffolk River Valleys;
Test Valley

In the Breckland ESA I am introducing new payments aimed at extending the area of lowland heath. New payments will also be available in the Clun ESA to enhance grassland diversity and encourage hedgerow and woodland management. The provisions extend the boundaries of the North Peak ESA and provide additional encouragement to regenerate heather moorland. In the Suffolk River Valleys ESA the boundary extensions bring in additional valleys and provide for further enhancement of the valley grasslands. I have also decided that new management agreements should be offered to farmers and landowners in the Test Valley ESA and that the boundaries of this area should be extended. I hope that the changes that I am introducing in this ESA will attract wider support than has the current scheme.

I am also laying before both Houses a short amending order which will bring the Pennine Dales ESA scheme into line with other ESAs by extending the scope of woodland payments.

Information packs giving details of the new schemes are being placed in the Libraries and are being sent to farmers in each area from whom applications are now invited. The revisions that I am introducing build on the achievements of the existing schemes. They will strengthen their beneficial environmental effects which are described in the published monitoring reports which will also be available in the Libraries later this month.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep were tested for organophosphate residues and with what results after the last compulsory dip.

Mr. Soames: The last compulsory sheep dip occurred between 22 September and 2 November 1991. In 1991, 82 samples of renal fat were taken from sheep under the national surveillance scheme and tested for residues of organophosphorus compounds. No residues above the maximum residue limits were detected. Sixty samples have been taken in 1992. Of the 48 analysed to date, no residues have been detected above the maximum residue limit.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the amounts, expressed as appropriate, of the main generic compounds of (a) organophosphates, (b) organochlorines and (c) pyrethroides used or sold as sheep dip in Britain in each year since 1973.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member when it has been obtained.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has regarding the possibility of organophosphorus compounds or their metabolites getting into and remaining in the flesh and/or offals of sheep dipped in MAFF-approved dips.

Mr. Soames: The licensing assessment carried out under the Medicines Act 1968 requires applicants to submit data demonstrating the persistence of residues of veterinary medicines in food-producing animals including sheep. Where necessary, withdrawal periods, i.e. the minimum time between completion of treatment and slaughter, are subsequently specified in product literature. The Animals, Meat, Meat products (Examination for Residues and Maximum Residue Limits) Regulations 1991 make it an offence to fail to observe these withdrawal periods.

In addition, Ministry veterinary staff undertake random sampling each year under the national surveillance scheme for monitoring residues of veterinary medicines in meat. No organophosphorus residues above the maximum residue limit have been detected in sheep meat under this surveillance programme in recent years.

Meat Inspections

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to the equivalence of the qualifications of veterinary officers in each member state of the EC in respect of the hygiene and inspection requirements for fresh meat.

Mr. Soames: Since 1978 the Community has had harmonised rules on training requirements and the mutual recognition of veterinary surgeons. They require any member state to allow veterinary surgeons, upon presentation of the correct certification, to practise on their territory.

Other member states have traditionally made more use of veterinary personnel in meat hygiene work. In many instances their salaries are comparatively lower than in the United Kingdom and they are used not only to supervise abattoirs and perform ante-mortem inspections on all animals, but also for post-mortem inspection which will normally continue to be done by meat inspectors in this country.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make an estimate of the number and percentage of (a) unmarried and (b) married women who have retired at 60 years of age and have during the past 12 months become entitled to receive a full state retirement pension based on their own contributions.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested.

At 31 March 1992, 162,570 women resident in Great Britain aged 60 at their last birthday were receiving basic state pension—either on their own or their husband's contributions. Of these 46,120 (28·4 per cent.) were receiving the full rate basic pension based on their own contributions.

A breakdown by marital status is not available.

Earnings Link

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer on 1 March, Official Report, column 47, on the cost of reintroducing earnings upratings for retirement pensions and linked benefits, if, on the basis of the same assumptions as used in the answer, he will estimate the effect on national insurance contribution rates in the years from 1996-97 to 2005-06.

Miss Widdecombe: An estimate of the increase in the main class 1 joint employee-employer contributions for national insurance which could be required is in the table. The estimate excludes contributions payable to the national health service.

	Percentage increase
1996-97	0·2
1997-98	0·4
1998-99	0·6
1999-00	0·8
2000-01	1·0
2001-02	1·2
2002-03	1·3
2003-04	1·5
2004-05	1·6
2005-06	1·8

Note: Derived from estimates underlying tables 13, 14 and 15 of the "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial Estimates—Report of the Government Actuary on the Second Quinquennial review under Section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975", published in July 1990 (HoC 582).

Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on Treasury revenues in 1993-94 and in a full year of raising child benefit to £9·55 a week for all children assuming (a) corresponding increases in income-related benefits for families and (b) no corresponding increases in income-related benefits.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Based on the latest estimates of the numbers of children for whom these benefits will be paid in 1993-94, there would be additional costs of about £260 million after corresponding increases in other benefits, and about £150 million without such increases.

Mrs. Helen Dacey

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in relation to the withholding by the solicitors acting for the estate of the late Mrs. Helen Dacey of the money paid by the Benefits Agency in respect of attendance alllowance DSS reference 379091501, and its delayed transfer to the beneficiary of the estate.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Jane Kennedy, dated 4 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what representations he had received in relation to the withholding by the solicitors acting for the estate of the late Mrs. Helen Dacey of the money paid by the Benefits Agency in respect of attendance allowance DDS reference 379091501, and its delayed transfer to the beneficiary of the estate.

Following Mrs. Dacey's death, the Benefit's Agency was in contact with the solicitors who were administering her estate regarding the arrears of Attendance Allowance. Correspondence was received from various other parties about this. However a thorough search of the papers relating to Mrs. Dacey at both the Attendance Allowance Unit and the local benefit office have revealed no representation that the solicitors were withholding payment of the arrears to the beneficiary of the estate.

I am sorry that I am unable to be of more assistance in this matter. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Spending Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of money in real terms spent from the national health service budget per head of population for each family health service authority, district health authority and regional health authority in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The allocation of funds to district health authorities (DHAs) is a matter for regional health authorities (RHAs) and detailed information is not collected centrally. The spending of family health services authorities (FHSAs) is primarily demand-led and funded accordingly. However, information which relates the 1991-92 total revenue expenditure of RHAs, DHAs and FHSAs to their resident populations have been placed in the Library. Similar information for 1992-93 will be available towards the end of the year.

The figures for the FHSAs do not include the full cost of general dental services as the Dental Practice Board became responsible for making most payments direct to dental practitioners from 1 April 1991. Consequently the figures are not fully comparable with those for earlier years. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 7 December 1992 at columns 515-20.

The RHA and DHA figures for 1991-92 are not comparable with those for earlier years as they show the authorities primarily as purchasers rather than providers of health care. The figures for DHAs will vary significantly reflecting a transitional position as each RHA moves towards allocating funds to DHAs on a weighted capitation basis. Figures for total spending per capita include other resources (such as regional budgets and local income) in addition to allocations for resident population.

Patient Services

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what services to patients were increased in each region in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Information about general and acute activity in each regional health authority is given in the table.

Forelands Hospital, Bromsgrove

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what departmental guidelines apply to the sale of Forelands hospital, Bromsgrove; what is the role of her Department; and if she will make a statement on the proceeds of the sale and the use to which they have been put.

Mr. Sackville: Departmental guidelines to health authorities on the sale of surplus National Health Service property are set out in "Property Transactions in the National Health Service". Property disposals are fully delegated to health authorities, and the Department was not involved in the sale of Forelands orthopaedic hospital.

Of the £4.2 million realised from the sale, £50,000 was returned to South Birmingham district; the remaining money was transferred to the region's operational capital programme funding to form part of the overall capital resources available to the region.

Huntington's Chorea

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside, (Mr. Blunkett) of 17 February, Official Report, column 206, if she will make additional funding available to health authorities to make provision for the care of people suffering from Huntington's Chorea.

Mr. Yeo: The provision of appropriate care for people suffering from Huntington's Disease is a matter for health authorities. As announced in December, allocations to health authorities for 1993-94 have been increased by an average of 0·8 per cent. above projected inflation, after public sector pay restraint has been taken into account.

Childhood Cancers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what preliminary reports she has received from the United Kingdom co-ordinating committee on cancer research on its five hypotheses on the cause of childhood cancers research project; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 1 March 1993 at column 28.

Information Technology

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of current inquiries made by her Department into the purchasing of information technology and software.

Mr. Sackville: The purchasing of information technology and software by the national health service is a local matter for health authorities, and my Department is not informed routinely. In common with other matters, these purchases may be the subject of local audit enquiry.

In January this year, authorities were instructed to submit all proposals for investments of £1 million or more on such projects to the NHS management executive for scrutiny against published criteria.

The Department assists by issuing guidance on good practice in procuring computer systems. The latest revision of this guidance will be published in April 1993 under the generic title of "Procurement of Information Systems Effectively" (POISE).

Tomlinson Report

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 541, on the Tomlinson report, if she will list the 10 recommendations which have not been accepted.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have accepted 96 of the recommendations in the Tomlinson report and have not accepted three: those which refer to the relocation of the Royal Brompton and the Royal Marsden to the Charing Cross building. The remaining seven have either been referred to the London implementation group for further advice or, although agreed with in principle, are being taken forward in a different manner to that recommended in the report.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to encourage regular medical checks for consultants, doctors and nursing staff in the national health service with particular reference to hepatitis B infection; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of national health service employing authorities to provide occupational health services for health care workers.

Revised guidelines designed to strengthen arrangements for preventing transmission of hepatitis B in the hospital setting have been produced by the advisory group on hepatitis, which advises the four United Kingdom health departments. The guidelines have gone out to consultation with professional bodies and the NHS.

Suicide

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will identify the cost-effective NHS interventions intended to contribute to the targeted reduction in suicide rates.

Mr. Yeo: There are a number of measures which national health service and social services staff can take to help meet the suicide targets. These include the establishment of multi-disciplinary audit meetings in relation to suicides, the implementation of observation policies in all units for those patients who need them and the regular training of teams in the assessment and management of suicidal risk and in the latest treatment techniques for those at risk.

Information on evaluating the effectiveness of interventions is contained in "The Health of the Nation" mental illness key area handbook which has been distributed to both NHS and social services managers. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Elderly Patients, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average number of beds available in wards responsible to Newcastle district health authority caring for elderly patients in each year since 1982.

Mr. Yeo: The answer is given in the table.

Total number of average daily available beds.

Figures shown relate only to beds specifically designated for the elderly. Elderly patients also occupy a significant number of beds in other wards.

Doctors (Alcohol Consumption)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish guidelines as to the amount of alcohol doctors should drink while on duty.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

"Making London Better"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra money, in real terms, will be made available to regions, outside the Thames regions, in 1993-94, following the implementation of "Making London Better".

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply of 8 December 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) at columns 635-36, announcing the 1993-94 allocations to all regional health authorities. These allocations were made after setting aside sums to improve health services in the capital.

Ponteland Hospital

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in Ponteland hospital, Northumberland (a) in 1991 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Yeo: Ponteland is a geriatric hospital with an overall capacity of 61 beds. Since 1990 the number of beds occupied has declined to between 32 and 38 for continuing care patients. Newcastle district health authority has replaced the continuing care service provided by Ponteland hospital with the purchase of 38 nursing home beds.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is responsible for the out-of-hours care of the patients of school dentists.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since October 1990 all children have been able to register with a general dental practitioner who, as part of their continuing care, makes arrangements for treatment out of hours. Any child not registered with a general practitioner can seek treatment from the Community dental service, who would then be responsible for arranging any necessary out-of-hours treatment.

District Health Funding

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made towards providing a greater allocation of resources for health care in Southend, as announced on 12 May 1992, Official Report, column 482;

(2) if she will give a general direction to regional health authorities to ensure that no underfunded district receives less in real terms in 1993-94 than in 1992-93;

(3) what measures she is making to ensure that underfunded health districts receive extra funds annually until the discrepancy is removed.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the movement of their districts towards weighted capitation funding. The following guidance was issued to all RHAs on 4 December 1992:

"Regions will therefore be asked to report on their planned deployment of the 1993-94 allocation and in particular to demonstrate clear progress towards equalisation. The pace of such progress and whether it should be achieved by reducing resources allocated to districts above their capitation share is a matter for individual regions to judge in the light of local circumstances."

Comprehensive national information on sub-regional allocations for 1993-94 is not yet available, but the guidance above gives clear direction on the policy to be followed.

North East Thames regional health authority gave Southend district health authority £2·7 million real growth in 1992-93 and a further £1·6 million real growth is planned for 1993-94. This growth has occurred over a period when the district's weighted capitation entitlement has also been increasing due to population changes and to changes in the allocation of formula. These changes mean that despite the additional growth, Southend DHA will remain 8 per cent. below its new weighted capitation entitlement in 1993-94. The new DHA into which it will merge in April 1993 will receive further growth in future years with the aim of bringing it to its capitation share.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Decision-making

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances, where cases are raised with the Minister, decisions are made at ministerial level; in what circumstances cases are referred to officials at the high commission or embassy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In all entry clearance cases where a Member corresponds with the Minister, the migration and visa correspondence unit is asked to assess, on information supplied by the post, whether there is any evidence of illogicality or procedural error, or whether there are any compassionate circumstances that have not been taken into account. Should the inquiry raise such matters, the Minister will consider the case.

Mongolia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to have British Council representation in Mongolia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans at present for British Council representation in Mongolia.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the President of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have congratulated Mr. Clerides on his recent election success and welcome his commitment to attend continuing negotiations on the intercommunal dispute to be held by the United Nations in New York. No firm date has yet been set for a meeting with President Clerides, but we hope a mutually convenient opportunity may be found in advance of those talks.

Hong Kong

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for improving relations with China over Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: Diplomatic contacts with China have taken place in recent weeks in Peking. Our aim has been to explore whether a firm and productive basis could be found for the two sides to enter formal talks on the arrangements for the 1994-95 elections. In announcing last week that the Bill embodying those arrangements would not be published on 26 February, the Hong Kong Government promised to set out the reasons for the delay. The Governor made a statement to the Legislative Council on 5 March to this end.

Since the Governor's policy address to the Legislative Council last October, we have made clear that we are ready to talk at any time and without pre-conditions in an effort to reach an understanding with the Chinese side on these electoral arrangements. The Legislative Council is already examining the boundaries and Election Commission Bill. The Executive Council endorsed on 2 February draft legislation embodying the remainder of the Governor's constitutional proposals. So there is no mystery about what the draft legislation contains. We passed a copy of it to the Chinese side on 6 February. At the same time we repeated formally our willingness to talk at any time without pre-conditions; and we explained to the Chinese side that the Bill was ready for gazetting.

We received a positive response on the principle of talks from the Chinese side. To help ensure that talks got off to the best possible start, we and the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, decided to postpone our original plan for gazettal on 12 February, while making clear to the Chinese side that there could not be an indefinite delay, given the practical need to press ahead with legislation. We proposed an early starting date for the talks and told the Chinese side of the composition of our negotiating team.

In the absence of a Chinese response, we and the Governor decided, again with the advice of the Executive Council, to delay gazettal for a second time on 19 February and for a third time on 26 February. We wished to give every possible opportunity for the Chinese side to respond.

At the beginning of March, we did receive a reply. But despite further diplomatic contacts, in which we have continued to press for early talks, we have not yet been able to announce a starting date for them. We have made plain that we are ready for the talks to proceed on the basis of the Joint Declaration, the principle of convergence with the Basic Law, and the relevant understandings and agreements reached between China and Britain. We consider the Governor's proposals are wholly compatible with these.

As far as we are concerned, we are ready to talk immediately. Following further exchanges in Peking in recent days, there remain only a few points of disagreement which could and should be resolved quickly. In the meantime, we and the Governor decided to defer gazettal for a fourth time.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report on Hong Kong will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Goodlad: The report is being published and laid before Parliament today. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Thames Helicopter Pad

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking in respect of the plans submitted by Thames Heliport plc for a mobile helicopter pad on the Thames; and what representations he has received.

Mr. Baldry: I am aware of the proposal by Thames Heliport plc for a floating heliport on the Thames. The scheme's promoters have been encouraged to discuss their plans with the appropriate local planning authorities. It is, of course, for those authorities to consider whether an application for planning permission should be made.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received correspondence on this matter from the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms. Hoey), the Theatres Trust, the Shakespeare Globe Trust, the London Rivers Association, the London Boroughs Association, and from the London borough of Tower Hamlets.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the start date of a new authority for the Isle of Wight and the arrangements for a shadow authority for the island.

Mr. Howard: In line with my announcement on 21 December I have consulted the authorities on the Isle of Wight about the timing and arrangements for structural change. In the light of this consultation I intend, if Parliament approves a new local government structure for the island in due course, to establish any new authority on 1 April 1995, with a shadow authority elected in May 1994. This will ensure there is adequate time for preparation of effective arrangements for the provision of services to the people. The county council elections will go ahead on 6 May and are not affected by these proposals

Radiation Leak, Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he plans in the arrangements for publishing details of leaks of radiation from Sellafield, following the leak of 13 February.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Any need for change would be based on the outcome of current investigations of recent incidents, which would have to be discussed and agreed with other Government Departments.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications of the recent leak at Sellafield for the process and cost of decommissioning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 March 1993]: None. The process and cost of decommissioning is primarily a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry and Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he received from the Meteorological Office at the time of the recent leak from Sellafield about weather conditions in the area.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 March 1993]: No information was received from the Meteorological Office.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the total staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and (b) the number of field inspectors currently in post at HMIP; and what were the corresponding figures for (a) and (b) for the air pollution inspectorate at the point of transfer to HMIP.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 March 1993]: HMIP currently employs 169 inspectors out of a total complement of 377·5 staff. On its formation in April 1987 HMIP had a total complement of 199 staff, including 42 inspectors and eight sampling officers who transferred from the former industrial air pollution inspectorate.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1 April 1990 every instance of his using his powers under section 40(6) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to give a direction to treat expenditure as being for capital purposes, showing separately in each case the name of the authority or authorities, the estimated amount of the expenditure and his reason for giving the direction.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Directions under section 40(6) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 have been issued between 1 April 1990 and 2 March in respect of the following types of expenditure:

Redundancy costs

Directions have been issued in respect of substantial expenditure on lump-sum redundancy or severance payments.

Late rating adjustments

Directions have been issued in respect of substantial "late rating adjustments". These are refunds by authorities of rates under the old rating system arising from retrospective changes in ratepayers' liabilities, normally as a result of appeals.

Losses arising on bank deposits

Directions have been issued in respect of substantial provisions for estimated losses arising from financial difficulties of certain banks (BCCI, Chancery and Edington).

Tenants' choice scheme

A direction has been issued in respect of interest arising on instalment payments by an authority to the purchaser of housing under the Tenants' Choice scheme.

It is intended to issue directions in respect of certain costs arising in connection with debts inherited from the former Greater London Council. No such directions had been issued at 2 March.

Details of all the individual directions issued are set out in the tables.

Climate Change

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the working group II session of the intergovernmental panel on climate change held in Geneva on 8 to 12 February.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Good progress was made towards agreeing a work plan for the reconstituted working group II, which will feed into the IPCC's second assessment report to be published in late 1995.

Supplementary Credit Approval

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much supplementary credit approval has been granted to each local authority for each year since 1 April 1990, showing separately the name of the authority, the amount and the purpose for which it was given.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Supplementary credit approvals are issued by a number of Government Departments and comprehensive information at this level of detail is not held centrally. In their regular returns to my Department local authorities report the total amount of supplementary credit approvals they have received, or expect to receive, and I have arranged for a summary of the most recent information from each authority to be placed in the Library of the House.

I have arranged for more detailed information regarding supplementary credit approvals issued by my Department to be collated and this will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Recycling Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department will be represented at the international exhibition of recycling in Paris on 17 to 19 March.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 March 1993]: My Department is not being represented at the international exhibition in Paris.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prime Minister's Questions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the names of hon. Members who have in this Parliament had a question for oral answer to the Prime Minister listed on the Order Paper among the top six more than four times.

Mr. Newton: I am informed by the Table Office that, in this Parliament, up to and including questions tabled on Tuesday 2 March for answer on Tuesday 16 March, two hon. Members have had five questions to the Prime Minister for oral answer draw among the top six as a result of the random computer shuffle: they are my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) and the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Tony Banks). No hon. Member has had more than five such questions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cohesion Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 October 1992, Official Report, columns 460-61, on the cohesion fund, if he will provide the calculations on relative wealth and fund eligibility on the basis of (a) real exchange rates and (b) normal rates.

Sir John Cope: The normal rate for calculations of relative wealth in respect of the structural funds is purchasing power parities; and the Edinburgh European Council confirmed that this would be the basis used for calculations of relative wealth and eligibility for the cohesion fund.

The Edinburgh European Council also agreed that the four member states with a per capita GNP of less than 90 per cent. of the EC average in purchasing power parities would be eligible for the cohesion fund. These member states are Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Spain. The United Kingdom's per capita GNP on a purchasing power parities basis is around the EC average.

Tax Offices, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason market-testing of clerical work in the Southampton tax offices was abandoned.

Mr. Dorrell: Last year the Inland Revenue started pilot market tests of certain services at four separate local sites including Southampton. It became clear that these initial tests would not be properly representative of market testing on a wider scale, and they were replaced early this year by a larger market test of the Revenue's secretarial and typing services across the whole of the South West region.

Income Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1993-94 of introducing an allowance against income tax of (a) £1,000 and (b) £2,000 for all working mothers; giving both full and first-year costs;

(2) if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1993-94 of introducing an allowance against income tax of (a) £1,000 and (b) £2,000 for all working mothers with at least one child under five years, giving both full and first-year costs.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Estimate of the cost of introducing allowances against taxable incomes for working mothers and lone parents at 1993-94 levels are set out in the table. The first year cost would depend on how the measure was implemented.

	Cost (£ billion)
	Allowance of (a) £1,000 per year	Allowance of (b) £2,000 per year
All working mothers[1]	0·6	1·1
All working mothers with a child under five[1]	0·2	0·4

[1] Including lone parents who are working.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update, to take account of the 1992 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his answer of 3 March 1992 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, column 122.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Latest estimates of the reduction in tax liability resulting from the changes in tax rates, allowances and thresholds are in the table. The 1978-79 income tax regime has been indexed to 1992-93 levels by reference to the statutory formula, and allowing for independent taxation. A reliable analysis of taxpayers with incomes over £80,000 is not available.

For the purposes of these calculations the indexed regime of 1978-79 is applied directly to the income base of 1992-93. In practice, retention of the regime, indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Reduction in income tax compared with 1978-79 indexed regime

Range of individual's income in 1992-93 (£)	Number of individuals[1] 1992-93 (million)	Total reduction in tax (£ million)	Average gain per individual (£)

Income Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 21 January 1992, to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), Official Report, column 128, on the introduction of an upper limit for income tax allowances and reliefs for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Estimates of the direct revenue yield in a full year at 1992-93 levels of income from imposition of the specified limits for allowances and reliefs within the current income tax system are given below. These are based on information compiled from a number of statistical surveys and are subject to more than the usual margin of uncertainty.

Limit £	Yield £ million
10,000	690
15,000	380
20,000	280

After restriction of the relevant allowances and reliefs to the basic rate the estimated further yield from imposing the specified limits would be as follows:

Full year yield at 1992-93 income levels, £ million
Limit for total allowances and reliefs

	After restriction to the basic rate of
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000
(a) all personal allowances except the basic personal allowances	610	360	270
(b) relief for personal pension contributions	560	310	230
(c) relief for employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes	630	370	270
(d) allowances and reliefs in (a) and (b)	510	300	230
(e) allowances and reliefs in (a) and (c)	580	350	270
(f) reliefs in (b) and (c)	500	300	230

	After restriction to the basic rate of £10,000	£15,000	£20,000
(g) allowances and reliefs in (a), (b) and (c)	480	290	220

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is just under 600,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 85,000 and 45,000 respectively. The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the changes. It is not possible to provide detailed information for 1993-94.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average individual cumulative gain (a) in cash prices and (b) in 1991-92 prices to those earning (i) £5,000, (ii) £10,000, (iii) £15,000, (iv) £20,000, (v) £25,000, (vi) £30,000, (vii) £40,000, (viii) £50,000, (ix) £60,000, (x) £70,000 and (xi) £100,000 as a result of changes in (1) income tax and (2) income tax and national insurance since 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Latest estimates of the reduction in liability resulting from changes in national insurance and income tax rates, allowances and thresholds are in the table. The 1978-79 and 1987-88 income tax regimes have been indexed to 1992-93 levels by reference to the statutory formula and allowing for independent taxation.

Over 80,000	48,200	47,500	18,900	18,900
Average	1,200	1,000	400	480

I regret that a reliable analysis of taxpayers with incomes over £100,000 is not available.

For the purposes of the calculations in the first two columns of the table the indexed regime of 1978-79 has been applied directly to the income base of 1992-93. In practice retention of the 1978-79 regime, indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total and average income and earned income in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 of (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 10 per cent., (d) the bottom 70 per cent., (e) the bottom 10 per cent. of taxpayers and (g) all taxpayers.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Estimates are given in the table.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the Treasury revenues in 1993-94, and in a full year, of introducing a child care tax allowance of £50 a week for (a) working mothers and (b) either partner in a two-earner couple, assuming that relief is available at the basic rate only, giving figures separately for (i) all families with dependent children and (ii) families with at least one child under five years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Estimates of the full year cost of introducing such an allowance in 1993-94 are set out in the table. The first year cost would depend on how the measure was implemented.

Cost (£ billion)

	Allowance of £50 per week restricted to basic or lower rate relief and given to
	(a) working mothers and lone parents	(b) the higher earner in a two-earner couple

Family with at least one child under the age of five	0.5	0.9

Employee (Definition)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to clarify the definition of employee in relation to the payment of PAYE in connection with the payment of fees to private companies in lieu of salary.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 March 1993]: We have no plans to do so. Whether an individual is an employee for tax purposes is a question of fact and general law and will depend, therefore, on the circumstances of the particular case.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to reduce opportunities for tax avoidance by payment of fees to private companies in lieu of salaries for full-time positions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Tax avoidance arrangements of all kinds are kept under review and appropriate action is taken where necessary.

DEFENCE

Redundancies

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis Royal Navy captains retire on a one-star pension after six years in the rank; what compensation for the loss of this pension increment was allowed for in the current round of redundancies; how many of those made compulsorily redundant at the rank of captain has completed six years in the rank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with the current (and long-standing) pay arrangements for Royal Navy officers, Royal Naval captains who attain six years seniority in that rank automatically receive the pay, and thus retire with the pension benefits, related to one star rank in the Army and RAF. Only those captains selected for redundancy who had attained six years seniority would receive redundancy benefits based on the higher pay rates as the redundancy compensation scheme, although it includes a payment to compensate for lost career, does not include specific provision for taking into account future pay or pension increases. In the first phase of the Royal Navy redundancy programme, which covers the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, none of the captains selected for complusory redundancy will have completed more than six years in the rank by the end of this period. Six captains who applied to be considered and were selected for redundancy will have over six years seniority. In the second phase, which covers the period from 1 April 1993 to 30 November 1993, three of the captains selected for complusory redundancy have completed more than six years in the rank or will have done so by the final date. Five captains who had applied to be considered will also fall into this category.

Bands

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 778, if the band of the Cheshire Regiment has been deployed as part of the UNPROFOR in Bosnia; if the band of the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment is to be deployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The band of the Cheshire Regiment has deployed to Bosnia but the band of the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment is not due to do so.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 778, if he will set out the number of fee-paying engagements by each service band in the latest full year for which figures are available; what is the contribution to public funds made, and how it is calculated; and what proportion of fees is retained by the unit concerned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of the number of fee-paying engagements undertaken by each service band are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The contribution to public funds is calculated on a percentage basis dependent on the net earnings each band makes. The remainder of the charge is apportioned between the performers and individual band funds. With regard to the total contribution made to public funds I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 February 1993, Official Report, column 778.

Service Pensions

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what entitlement widows of post-service marriages to armed forces personnel have to a widow's pension based on the service of their late husband; and what the position was prior to 1978, and from 1978 to 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current terms of the armed forces pension scheme include provision for a pension to be awarded to the eligible widow of a service man who marries after leaving the armed forces provided that some part of his service was given on or after 6 April 1978 and that he himself qualified for retired pay or pension. Before that date, widows of post-retirement marriages had no entitlement to a pension.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to extend entitlement to armed service widows' pensions to all widows of armed service personnel, irrespective of whether marriage was contracted before, during or after the period of service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces pension scheme already provides pensions for the eligible widows of service personnel leaving the armed forces on or after 6 April 1978 irrespective of whether marriage took place before or after service was completed. There are no plans to backdate these arrangements.

HMS Coventry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current role of HMS Coventry in the Gulf; what arrangement he has made for HMS Coventry to deal with anti-submarine patrols; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Coventry is currently assigned to the Armilla patrol which is tasked to provide reassurance and protection if necessary to British entitled ships and to operate in support of United Nations sanctions on maritime trade with Iraq. It is not our practice to release more detailed operational information.

2nd Gurkha Rifles

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distance being flown by 2nd Gurkha Rifles for training at Wainwright in Canada; how many aircraft will be needed for the journey; what consideration was given to sending units from the United Kingdom or Germany instead of part of the Hong Kong garrison; and when a battalion from Hong Kong last went for training in Canada.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is proposed that the 2nd Gurkha Rifles will travel direct from Hong Kong to Edmonton in two chartered aircraft. The distance flown will be approximately 11,500 miles. Consideration was given to sending an infantry battalion from United Kingdom land forces or British Army of the Rhine, but neither command was able to release a battalion due to other commitments, drawdown and reorganisation. There is no record of a Hong Kong battalion previously training in Canada.

Armed Service Personnel

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed service personnel went absent without leave last year; and what punishments they received.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were 2,724 personnel in the Royal Navy and Army reported as absent without leave in 1992 (excluding absences of less than seven days for which no central records are kept). Information in respect of Air Force personnel could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the punishments awarded to personnel of all three services convicted at courts martial or summary proceedings of a charge of unauthorised absence or desertion is gathered on an annual basis, but the details for 1992 are not expected to be available until late April. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State forDefence will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

Overseas Commitments

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the current overseas commitments demanded of the armed services; and if he will make a statement about the requirement for a defence review.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Britain's armed forces have a number of overseas commitments, which they are well placed to meet. We shall continue to keep these plans, and our defence policy as a whole, under review.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) of 13 January, Official Report, column 760, what has been the outcome of the consultation concerning the proposal that an integrated Army personnel centre should be established in Glasgow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 4 March, Official Report, column 229.

RAF Lossiemouth

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the RAF squadron based at Lossiemouth;

(2) what plans he has for future developments at RAF Lossiemouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently there are two Buccaneer squadrons, the Jaguar operational conversion unit, an air defence RAF regiment squadron, and a ground defence RAF regiment auxiliary field squadron at RAF Lossiemouth. Two Sea King helicopters also operate out of Lossiemouth in the search and rescue role. At the beginning of next year, we plan to deploy two squadrons of Tornado GR1b to RAF Lossiemouth. In addition, the Tornado weapons conversion unit will move to RAF Lossiemouth from RAF Honnington.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office Services

Dr. Bray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to place a statutory duty on the Post Office to continue to offer special concessionary rates of postage for despatching such items as talking books and Braille books to the blind or disabled.

Mr. Leigh: The current concessionary postage facilities for the blind are detailed in section 21 of the inland letter post scheme and section 2 of the overseas letter post scheme. These arrangements appear to work very well and I see no case for further legislation at present.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many sub-post offices have had their opening hours reduced; and what is their location in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested is not available. The number of community and restricted hours offices operating in Scotland at the end of each of the last four financial years was as follows:

	Community offices	Restricted hours offices
March 1989	236	0
March 1990	287	2
March 1991	314	7
March 1992	340	8

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many new sub-post offices have been opened, and what has been their location in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Leigh: The numbers of new post offices opened in Scotland in the last four financial years are as follows:

	Post offices opened
1988-89	6
1989-90	8
1990-91	6
1991-92	2

The numbers of new post offices opened in earlier years and individual locations could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many island post offices have closed in Scotland in each year since 1979;

(2) how many post offices have closed in Scotland in each year since 1979;

(3) how many rural sub-post offices have closed in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Leigh: The numbers of post offices closed in Scotland in each of the last four financial years are as follows:

	Post offices closed
1988-89	21
1989-90	19
1990-91	32
1991-92	12

Many of these closures were in rural areas where, due to the decline in the number of village shops, it has not been possible to find suitable candidates for sub-postmasterships. The number of post office closures in earlier years and a breakdown of information by rural or island areas could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many sub-post postmasters and sub-post mistresses have been employed in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Leigh: Data are not available for the numbers of sub-postmasters and sub-postmistresses employed in Scotland since some hold more than one sub-post office.

The total number of sub-post offices in Scotland at the end of each of the last four financial years was as follows:

	Number
1988-89	1,999
1989-90	2,019
1990-91	2,022
1991-92	2,046

The net increase is the result of the Crown Office conversion programme.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recourse or protection is available against a person who, contrary to the repeatedly expressed wishes of the recipient, persists in sending letters to that recipient through the Royal Mail.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Subject to certain statutory prohibitions, the Post Office has a duty to deliver all mail as addressed. It is, of course, open to an individual to seek an injunction against a persistent sender of unwelcome mail. Persons who do not wish to receive unsolicited mail can register with the mailing preference service, which covers some 90 per cent. of direct marketing firms, to have their names removed from mailing lists.

Advanced Technology Research

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on Government support for private sector advanced technological research.

Mr. Leigh: The Government encourage the private sector to carry out additional technological research through a number of collaborative Research and Development schemes eg the Government-wide LINK scheme and DTI's advanced technology programmes.

There are also DTI schemes specifically designed to meet the needs of smaller companies, such as SMART (small firms merit award for research and technology) and SPUR (support for products under research), both of which provide single company research and development support.

Furniture Safety

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to publicise the new regulations relating to the sale of non-compliant second-hand foam furniture.

Mr. Leigh: My Department published, in August 1991, "A Guide to the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations" which explains the main requirements of the regulations in some detail and sets out the dates when they come into force. This guide, which was prepared in consultation with the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards and the Institute of Trading Standards Administrations, is to assist suppliers of domestic upholstered funiture. It is provided free of charge, and, to date, 50,000 copies have been distributed by my Department and trading standards officers throughout the country. My Department has also issued a separate guide for consumers—"Making Furniture Safer" —some 80,000 copies of which have been distributed.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library details of advice notes given to (a) trading standards officers, (b) charities or voluntary organisations and (c) businesses in regard to foam-filled furniture in respect of (i) warning labels, (ii) information on non-compliant foam and (iii) proof of purchase of smoke alarms.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has expressed the view to the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards that the simple distribution of secondhand furniture by a charity in pursuance of its charitable objectives to needy persons, either free of charge or at a nominal cost only, would be unlikely to constitute a supply in the course of business within the meaning of the legislation.

My Department has also given guidance to charities in accordance with the above, but has recommended that individual charities should seek separate legal advice in the light of their particular circumstances.

Copies of the guidance given to charities, together with the guidance booklets on the requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Safety) Regulations will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made on the European directive relating to flammability of furniture.

Mr. Leigh: The European Commission announced, in May 1991, the suspension of work on an EC directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture pending research to establish a scientific basis for the development of test methods on burning behaviour. This research is now under way and is expected to be completed in 1994.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the quantities of second-hand furniture sold by shops, auctions and car boot sales which will have to go to landfill as a result of the implementation of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) (Amendments) Regulations 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, allowed a period of five years for suppliers of second-hand upholstered furniture to prepare for the application of the fire resistance requirements to this furniture, and to adjust stocks of non-complying furniture accordingly. No information is available as to the quantity of second-hand furniture which will have to go to landfill.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will provide a list of the auditing guidelines formulated by the Auditing Practices Committee after his Department acquired a non-voting representation on it.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department was represented on the former Auditing Practices Committee by a non-voting member from May 1987 until the Committee was dissolved in 1991. The auditing guidelines developed by the Committee and issued after May 1987 were as follows:

	Date
Applicability to the public sector of Auditing Standards and Guidelines	July 1987
The impact of regulations on public sector audits	March 1988
Analytical review	April 1988
Pension schemes in the United Kingdom	November 1988

General business insurers in the United Kingdom	March 1991
The auditors' statement on the summary financial statement	May 1991
Life insurers in the United Kingdom	October 1991

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the dates of the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board which his representative has attended.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's representative attended the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board held on the following dates:

1991
3 July
9 September
15 October
3 December

1992
14 January
11 February
10 March

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to propose legislation under which members of the general public would have access to the minutes of the meetings of the councils of the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to replace the five recognised accountancy supervisory bodies with a single body.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to revoke the recognition of the supervisory bodies recognised under part II of the Companies Act 1989.

Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to adopt a policy under which his Department's report published under section 729 of the Companies Act 1989, will show the business connections of the inspectors appointed during that year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I take it that the reference should be to the Companies Act 1985. My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times since 1979 any individual criticised in an inspectors' report has acted as an inspector for his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Once. In 1977 inspectors were appointed to investigate the affairs of Gilgate Holdings Limited and they submitted their final report on 8 April 1991. The accountant inspector was subsequently criticised in a report on Ramor Investments Limited, published in 1983.

Company Returns

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proposals he has to modify the contents of the annual returns filed by companies with the Registrar of Companies;

(2) how many times in 1989, 1990 and 1991, companies have filed a statement in respect of auditor removal in respect of section 391(2) of the Companies Act 1985;

(3) how many companies failed to file an annual return in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hamilton: These are matters for Companies house. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from D. Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 4 March 1993.

You tabled three Parliamentary Questions on 1 March, concerning matters which are my responsibility as Registrar of Companies. The questions concerned proposals for modifying the annual returns provided by companies; the number of companies which have failed to file such returns since 1985; and the number of times in 1989, 1990 and 1991 that auditors were removed under S391(2) of the Companies Act 1985. I will answer the points seriatim.

We have at the present time no specific proposals to modify the annual return. As I explained in my letter of 22 February 1993 in answer to your previous Parliamentary Question, about checks made on annual returns, we now have a "shuttle" annual return form. The information it contains is mostly pre-printed by Companies House, and a company either confirms the information or amends the details as necessary. The "shuttle" systems is relatively new, and as we and companies gain greater experience in using it, we may wish to propose changes if they appear necessary or desirable. However, the annual return is prescribed by regulations, and any changes would, of course, require Parliamentary approval.

Turning to your second question, the figures you require on the number of companies failing to file an annual return are as follows:—

	Number
1985	266,000
1986	93,000
1987	93,000
1988	103,000
1989	126,000
1990	100,000
1991	138,000
1992	101,000

These figures are calculated up to the end of June in each year: those for 1985, 1986 and 1987 relate to England and Wales only. All the figures have been derived from the number of companies in default for an annual return, in relation to the number of companies assumed to be active.

Your final question was about removal of auditors. The figures are as follows:

	Number
1989	596
1990	665
1991	2,507

These are calendar year figures, and relate to Great Britain.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what actions he takes after referring the criticisms of auditors in his Department's inspectors' reports to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As a recognised supervisory body, the ICAEW is responsible for taking any disciplinary or regulatory action against an auditor registered with it. The institute keeps my Department informed of the progress in considering relevant information in inspectors' reports.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 November 1992, Official Report, column 310, how many of the accountancy firms listed by him currently act as auditors to public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Two of the accountancy firms listed in the previous answer currently act as auditors to public bodies sponsored by my Department—Coopers and Lybrand, and Ernst and Young.

J. S. Bass plc (Liquidation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will institute a DTI inquiry into the conduct of the liquidation of J. S. Bass plc in Manchester.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

British Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to identify areas where customer demand at home and abroad cannot be satisfied by British goods; and how he intends to encourage production to move into these areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is continually working to assist United Kingdom firms to identify market opportunities both at home and abroad. It also aims, to help businesses take full advantage of these by stimulating enterprise and innovation and encouraging best practice in quality, design and management.

Transfer Pricing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to require all multinational companies to disclose their transfer pricing policies in notes to their annual accounts.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Company Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to examine the fees paid to company receivers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Secretary of State does not have powers to examine the fees paid to company receivers.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money in 1993 values has been received from the European regional development fund in each year since 1984.

Mr. Sainsbury: European regional development fund allocations to the United Kingdom since 1984 have been as follows:

	1993 prices £ million
1984	555
1985	492
1986	464
1987	583

	1993 prices £ million
1988	469
1989	411
1990	381
1991	454
1992	501
1993	693

Structural Funds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 17 February to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), Official Report, column 269, what parishes, districts and counties within Wales fall within the definition of rural Wales for the purposes of grants from structural funds.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Under the current structural funds regulations, the area covered by the objective 5(b) programme known as Rural Wales includes the whole of the three counties of Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys with the exception of the Llanelli travel-to-work area; those parts of the Swansea, Aberdare and Blaenau Gwent (formerly Ebbw Vale) and Abergavenny travel-to-work areas in Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys; and that part of the Conwy and Colwyn travel-to-work area in Gwynedd.

Article 8(1) of Regulation (EEC) 2052/88 requires that objective 1 regions shall be regions at NUTS II level. The NUTS II level region of rural Wales comprises the entire counties of Clwyd, Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys. It is in respect of this region that the Government continue to press the case for objective 1.

Coal Task Force

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the report from the coal task force on the United Kingdom's future coal research requirements; and what conclusions he has reached regarding its contents.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The coal task force report on the United Kingdom's future coal research requirements was received by the then Secretary of State for Energy in July 1991. The subject of clean coal technology is currently being considered within the context of the coal review.

Gulf Co-operation Council (Market Share)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the market share held by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) China, (e) Japan, (f) Italy and (g) the United States of America in each country of the Gulf Co-operation Council in each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 March 1993]: The information requested is in the tables:

Community Care

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are being made to ensure that moneys raised within the area of the Highland health board through the sale of Craig Dunain hospital are re-invested in community care in the health board area.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards and NHS trusts are allowed to retain the full receipts from the disposal of surplus property, to invest in developments which improve patient care within their area. Community based developments to replace any long-stay institution will be required before it is closed and will be funded from a number of sources including the normal health service capital programme and local authorities.

Made in Scotland

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's annual expenditure on Made in Scotland, Beauly; and for how many years this is planned to continue.

Mr. Lang: There is no direct Scottish Office expenditure on Made in Scotland Ltd. The company was established in 1991 with assistance from Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, on the basis that it would be required to become commercially self-supporting within a given period. The terms of the assistance are a matter between the company and the enterprise bodies.

Women's Aid

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when 1993-94 provision for Scottish Women's Aid will be decided under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Women's Aid was advised of its 1993-94 provision in a letter issued on 1 March 1993.

Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many continuing care beds for elderly patients there were in NHS hospitals in each of the last five years; and what projected figures he has for the future.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested for each of the last five years is shown in the following table. Health boards are constantly reviewing their assessment of need, consequently projected figures are not available.

NHS average available staffed beds: Geriatric long-stay and psychogeriatrics Years ending 31 March 1988 to 31 March 1992

Year	Total	Geriatric Long-stay	Psychogeriatrics
1988	13,728	8,535	5,193
1989	14,857	8,896	5,961
1990	14,794	8,880	5,914
1991	14,715	8,727	5,988
1992	15,214	8,522	6,692

Crafts

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was his Department's annual expenditure on the craft section of Scottish development agency and Highlands and Islands development board in the year before their abolition.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board in 1990-91 was £377,000 and £569,000 respectively. These figures exclude any management and administration expenditure incurred by these bodies, and financial assistance to crafts made available by HIDB other than through Craftpoint, which cannot be separately identified.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proposals he has for the administrative relationship between Made in Scotland and the Crafts Council and the Scottish Art Council;

(2) what will be the administrative base for decisions concerning the crafts within the Scottish Arts Council;

(3) what is to be the administrative relationship between the Crafts Council and the Scottish Arts Council in terms of (a) the establishment of priorities and (b) the allocation and distribution of grants to crafts people and craft operators.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 1 February 1993 (Official Report, column 37) his intention to establish new arrangements for the support of crafts in Scotland. The details of these arrangements are still under consideration and a further announcement will be made in due course.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the annual Scottish Office expenditure of the craft section of the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board in the three years immediately prior to the winding up of both organisations.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1993]: The expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board was as follows:

Scottish Development Agency

1988-89	303
1989-90	315
1990-91	377

The figures exclude any management and administration expenditure incurred, which could not be identified without incurring disproportionate cost.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

	£000
1988-89	230
1989-90	495
1990-91	569

The figures exclude any management and administration expenditure incurred by HIDB, and financial assistance to crafts made available through other than Craftpoint, which cannot be separately identified.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual expenditure of the Scottish Office on Made in Scotland, Beauly, in each of the past three years; and what it will be for each of the next three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Made in Scotland Ltd. was only established in 1991. The company has received no direct support from the Scottish Office; but was formed with assistance from Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise on the basis of the support it would provide for the marketing and promotion of the crafts industry in Scotland. The terms of the assistance are a matter between the company and the enterprise bodies.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is to be the administrative relationship between the Crafts Council and the Scottish Arts Council in establishing priorities, deciding on allocation and dispersing grants to craftspeople and craft operations in Scotland;

(2) what will be the administrative base for craft discussions within the Scottish Arts Council;

(3) what is the administrative relationship between Made in Scotland and the Crafts Council/Scottish Arts Council administering the new money.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 March 1993]: I announced on 1 February 1993, Official Report, column 37, my intention to establish "new arrangements" for the support of the crafts sector in Scotland. The details of these arrangements are still under consideration and I will make a further announcement in due course.

Extraction of Minerals

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 562, if he will give the amounts received by the Forestry Commission from licences and leases for permitting the extraction of minerals in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The information is given in the table. Detailed records are available only for the last four years; the amounts for the first six years are therefore based on estimates.

Obscenity Law

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has had from groups and individuals about the law in relation to obscene, violent and pornographic material; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has had from groups and individuals calling for Government action to review the law in relation to obscene, violent and pornographic material; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: We receive occasional representations both from groups and individuals about the law concerning such material. Current legislation on this matter is kept under constant review. The Government are supporting the Video Recordings (Amendment) Bill introduced in another place, which aims to improve the enforcement of the Video Recordings Act 1984.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of convictions of offences relating to obscene, violent and pornographic publications each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of persons with a main charge proved of handling obscene material.

Nimmo Smith/Friel Report

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the individuals and groups who have made representations to him following the publication of the Nimmo Smith/Friel report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend has received two representations, one from me on behalf of a constituent, and one from a member of the public in Fife.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation he has had with representatives of the children's panel on the way to deal with persistent juvenile offenders aged between 12 and 15 years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Officials of the Scottish Office meet representatives of the children's panels regularly to discuss issues affecting children who are referred to reporters on offence and non-offence grounds. In addition there is a children's hearings representative group which meets twice a year under the chairmanship of a Scottish Office official.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum custodial sentence available to the courts for a persistent juvenile offender aged (a) 14 years and (b) 17 years in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The term "persistent juvenile offender" is not legally defined but there is a range of sentences—custodial and non-custodial—available to the courts for a 14 or 17-year-old convicted on indictment. The maximum custodial sentence available for both these age groups for the most serious crimes—including murder where the sentence is mandatory—is detention without limit of time.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many juveniles have been convicted of offences involving the carrying or using of knives in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) June 1991 to July 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Information is held centrally only on the numbers of persons with a main charge proved of possession of an offensive weapon under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953. The number of persons aged less than 16 years and the number of 16 and 17-year-olds with a main charge proved of possession of an offensive weapon are shown in the table. The information relates to 1990 and 1991, the latest years for which data are available.

Prison Education

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the expenditure on education within Scottish prisons including staff costs each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The expenditure on education in Scottish prisons since 1979 is as follows:

£000

Year	Amount
1979-80	203
1980-81	228
1981-82	447
1982-83	411

Stabbings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assaults with a knife or similar weapon resulted in either a serious injury or death in each police force area since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1993]: The available information is provided in the tables. Figures for patients dealt with as outpatients are not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers in each police force area have been wounded or murdered by stabbing with a knife or similar weapon in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Since 1979 one police officer in Scotland has been murdered by stabbing, in Strathclyde police area in 1982. Information recorded by forces on the number of police officers wounded by stabbing is set out in the following table.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were (a) arrested or (b) stopped and questioned under the terms of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts in 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1993]: The information sought by the hon. Member is set out in the report on the operation in 1990 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 by Viscount Colville of Culross QC, published on 21 February 1991, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Lilley and Company

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been made to him by the management and receivers of Lilley and Company relating to the London rules and the unanimity rule among banks.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend has not received any such representations.

Drug Offences

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the value of (a) money and (b) assets that have been confiscated from persons convicted by courts in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole for drug offences in each of the past four years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: On conviction in drug trafficking cases the court may, in addition to imposing a sentence of imprisonment, impose a fine, order the forfeiture of specific assets (including drugs, cash and vehicles) and, in the case of the High Court, make a confiscation order. A confiscation order is an order to pay a sum of money and does not relate to specific assets, although specific assets may be realised to enforce it. Forfeiture is extensively ordered by the courts in drug trafficking cases, but figures are not available in the form sought. Confiscation orders were made by the High Court in each of the last four years as follows:

	Strathclyde £	Scotland £
1989	15,000	26,795·70

Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified nursing staff were employed in each health board in each year since 1989.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The information requested is given in the table:

Prescription Charges

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many claimants of disability working allowance are also in receipt of exemption from prescription charges by reason of (a) low income and (b) prescribed illness or condition;

(2) what is his estimate of the number and types of eligible persons who fail to claim exemption from prescription charges.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 February 1993]: The requested information is not available. However, we believe that the figures are comparable with those in England and Wales and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health.

European Time

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the net extra numbers and categories, of people who would avoid injury due to road accidents if Scotland adopted common European time; and if he will summarise the considerations that will influence his policy on Scotland's time zone.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Estimates based on figures for Strathclyde published by the Transport Research Laboratory in 1989, updated to take account of 1991 casualty data and extended to the whole of Scotland using the results from the study of the BST experiment in 1969-70 indicate an estimated saving of five fatalities, 23 serious and 256 slight injury casualties. No breakdown of these figures by road user category is available but it is thought that pedestrians would be the largest group to benefit. These estimates do not take into account any possible increase in casualties which might result from additional activity in lighter evenings.

Given Scotland's particular geographical position, we wish to give the most careful consideration to the views of various sectors of the community and public generally on any proposals to change the present summer time arrangements.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made following the further consultation exercise in respect of the setting up of a proposed register of land which may be contaminated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Good progress has been made in the further consideration of the proposals for registers of land which may be contaminated. An announcement will be made shortly.

SCOTLAND

Tenants' Rights

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the instructions and guidance he has given to Scottish Homes about the way to handle cases where local authority or Scottish Homes tenants have been the subject of compulsory purchase orders and have lost their tenant's right to buy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: I have given no such guidance to Scottish Homes, which has no formal responsibility in such cases apart from the involvement it would have as landlord if one of its houses were subject to compulsory purchase. A Scottish Homes or local authority tenant whose house was subject to compulsory purchase would only lose his right to buy if he declined to accept an alternative tenancy which would normally be offered by the landlord or another public sector landlord.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people whose homes were owned by local authorities or by Scottish Homes have been the subject of a compulsory purchase order which has resulted in the tenant losing the statutory right to buy in each of the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify the statutory powers which give tenants of local authority or Scottish Homes domestic properties the right to financial compensation in lieu of the loss of tenant rights.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Where a short tenancy (that is, a tenancy the duration of which is no greater than a year, and runs from year to year) has been terminated early, the provisions of section 114 of the Land Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1845 apply in respect of the payment of compensation for early termination of the lease.

NHS Premises (Access)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the rights of access to national health service premises of (a) blind patients with guide dogs and (b) patients who suffer from other physical disabilities; and what guidance he has issued or proposes to issue on this question of access.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 February 1993]: The Government's policy is that suitable access and facilities should be provided for disabled people who have problems of mobility or orientation. This includes those who are wheelchair bound and those who are blind. Such measures are inevitably constrained by practical considerations; eg in relation to the adaptability of existing accommodation. It covers patients, staff and visitors. This policy is reflected in general and specific terms in the hospital planning guidance notes prepared by the Management Executive and published by HMSO.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, in 1992-93 prices and cash terms, the total amount spent of the budget for training for Scotland in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1992-93 and plans for 1993-94.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 February 1993]: Training expenditure in Scotland was not recorded separately in the years prior to 1991-92. Since then, resources have been made available as part of the grant-in-aid of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to support the training programmes administered by these bodies. The following table provides details:

£ million

	1991-92 (outturn)	1992-93 (estimated outturn)	1993-94[1] (plans)
Cash	227·985	216·451	195·650
1992-93 prices	237·674	216·451	190·413

[1] The approved estimate for 1993-94 is expected to include additional provision of up to £4 million.

Unemployment

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details from the 1991 census of the numbers unemployed as a proportion of the economically active population in each ward making up the Cunninghame, North constituency.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 March 1993]: The figures are given in the table.

Unemployed as a percentage of the economically active population

Ward	Per cent.
Ardrossan North	12·4
Ardrossan South	16·8
Arran	8·3
Beith	9·6
Dalry	10·5
Fairlie, Skelmorlie and Cumbrae	7·8
Garnock East	8·3
Kilbirnie North	13·6
Kilbirnie South	14·8
Largs North	9·5
Largs South	9·0
Saltcoats East	20·2
Saltcoats North	17·0
South Beach	11·9
West Kilbride	10·4
All wards in constituency	11·7

Note: The areal definition of ward used for census output involves some approximation but it is thought unlikely that this would have a significant effect on the figures.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department and Historic Scotland have made of the effect of extreme weather conditions in January on archaeological sites in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Inspectors from Historic Scotland have visited a selection of sites damaged by the January storms on Orkney, Shetland and the Western Isles. The Orkney Islands archaeologist is conducting detailed inspection of damage to sites in Orkney with financial support from Historic Scotland. Historic Scotland will fund at least one small excavation at Tuquoy in Orkney, to follow up damage in January to a site on which excavations were undertaken in advance of coastal erosion which took place up to 1988. Historic Scotland also plans further assessment at the Brough of Birsay as a consequence of storm damage. Sampling is being arranged at one damaged site in the Western Isles; other sites visited by an inspector following storm damage had been sampled previously and no systematic survey is planned. No request has been received to date from the Shetland Islands archaeologist for emergency assessment of sites following the January storms. No systematic survey is planned but Historic Scotland inspectors will shortly be carrying out a further inspection. Assessment of the effects of pollution from oil spilled from the Braer wreck on Jarlshof and neighbouring sites has already commenced. No reports have been received of damage to archaeological sites elsewhere in Scotland from the extreme weather conditions in January.

Ecological Steering Group

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the budgetary arrangements for the ecological steering groups referred to in his statement of 11 January, Official Report, column 626.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The sum of £20,000 has been made available to support the ecological steering group in this financial year, and adequate provision will be made for 1993-94. I expect that its work will largely be founded on investigations carried out, or to be carried out, by other bodies, but if it should become clear that further funding is needed the Government will respond appropriately.

Arbroath Infirmary

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reductions Tayside health board intend to make on X-ray facilities at Arbroath infirmary.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Tayside health board currently has no plans to change X-ray facilities at Arbroath infirmary. The board is undertaking public consultation on its proposal to withdraw specialist general medical services from the Infirmary and, in their place, develop a GP-led service. If that proposal goes ahead the board will review, with the GPs, the level of X-ray facilities required.

Casualty Services

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what finance and other resources are currently made available to general practitioner-provided casualty services by hospitals in each health board.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what limitations are imposed on general practitioner hospital casualty services; and how these are regulated.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The scope of the casualty service provided by general practitioners is a matter for health boards and individual practitioners. In each case, clinical judgment will determine whether a patient should be treated by the general practitioner or referred to a larger hospital or a specialist. Where necessary, referral protocols can be agreed between GPs and the hospitals with which they regularly deal.

Out-patient Clinics, Angus

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which specialist out-patient clinics are currently being proposed by Tayside health board at each Angus hospital; and which they propose to end.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Specialist out-patient clinics currently held at each Angus hospital are set out in the table. Tayside health board has no plans to change these.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payments have been made to general practitioners in respect of community hospitals in each health board in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Donna Bromham

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Donna Bromham in Nairn on 19 July 1992; and what alterations have been made to the Scottish road safety vehicle which hit her.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1993]: Mrs. Donna Bromham dies tragically from injuries sustained when she was struck by a loose flap of a road safety display vehicle. The accident happened on 19 July 1992 in the town of Nairn. Mrs. Bromham was on the footpath when the accident occurred. The police reported the matter to the procurator fiscal at Inverness who, after consultation with Crown counsel, took criminal proceedings against the driver on charges of careless driving and use of a vehicle in a dangerous condition. The driver went to trial at Inverness sheriff court and was found not guilty on the first charge but was convicted on the second. He was fined £100 and had his licence endorsed with three penalty points.

The vehicle was held for inspection by Northern Constabulary and released to Highland regional council on 3 August 1992, since when it has not been in use. It will not be permitted on the roads until modifications have been carried out by the regional council, and inspected by the police. The modifications will provide additional security and allow for visual confirmation that the flap is in a safe condition for transportation.

Caesarean Section Births

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many babies were born by Caesarean section in hospitals in Scotland during each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The number of recorded deliveries by Caesarean section for the years 1975-92 is given in the table. Comparable information for 1970-74 is not available centrally.

Year	Number	Percentage of total deliveries
1975	5,627	8·7
1976	6,083	9·4
1977	6,297	10·0

Dairy Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the dairy industry in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The information sought is not held centrally. Estimates of the number of people employed on dairy farms are set out in the following table:

Year	On-farm
1982	11,756
1983	11,680
1984	11,288
1985	10,737
1986	10,230
1987	9,994

Midwifery Services, Angus

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which locations have been selected for general practitioner/community-led midwifery services in Angus;

(2) what estimates he has of the staff implications of creating general practitioner community-led midwifery services in Angus hospitals; and what representations or discussions he has had on this subject.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 March 1993]: As a pilot study, Tayside health board plans to introduce, in Forfar, a general practitioner-led maternity service which has on-call support from the local community midwives.

The new service will be located at Whitehills hospital and replace the current maternity service provided at Fyfe-Jamieson maternity home. The relocation, together with the change of service will result in a decrease in staffing of 10 whole-time equivalent nurses and 3·4 whole-time equivalent support staff.

The Secretary of State has not received any representations about the planned service or held discussions on the subject.

Tayside Health Board

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what salaries and other payments have been made to Tayside health board members in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 February 1993]: Remuneration of non-executive members of Tayside health board commenced only in April 1991 and has remained at its initial level of £5,000 per annum. In addition these members are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances at rates set for members of public bodies. Information is not held centrally on the amount of allowances claimed on the payment of executive members, which is a matter for the board itself.

Maternity Provision

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the maintenance of current maternity provision in Montrose and Arbroath.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 February 1993]: I understand that Tayside health board has no plans, at present, to change the existing maternity provision in Montrose and Arbroath.

White Fish

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Scottish inshore fleet to discuss the problems resulting from undisclosed landings of white fish; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet with representatives of the Scottish inshore fleet to discuss undisclosed landings of white fish.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to control undeclared landings of white fish at east coast ports in breach of vessels' quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency devotes substantial resources to detecting and preventing undeclared landings. There are regular out of hours patrols by fishery officers and fishery protection vessels are deployed to patrol harbours where there is a risk of undeclared landings.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers are available to him to deal with white fish landings which are undisclosed for quota purposes; and how many times those powers have been used in the last two years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Vessels which fail to declare landings of white fish may be in breach of European Community regulations requiring the master of a vessel to submit to the authorities documents on the vessel's fishing activity and the catch landed. Failure to submit such documentation may lead to the imposition of a fine not exceeding £2,000. Masters of vessels will normally supply the necessary documentation when a landing is detected by the authorities. There has been one successful prosecution in the last two years.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken by his Department to investigate the extent of undisclosed white fish landings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: There is no reliable source of information on the overall extent of undisclosed white fish landings. My Department's main priority is to take action to detect and prevent attempted clandestine landings and, where appropriate, to report cases to the prosecuting authorities.

Eastwood/East Kilbride

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to implement the proposed changes to the local government boundary between East Kilbride district council and Eastwood district council.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 March 1993]: As is usual is such cases, my Department invited the affected local authorities to propose a mutually convenient date for the transfer to take effect. No date has yet been volunteered. My officials have now written to the authorities setting a deadline of the end of March 1993 for them to agree a date. In the absence of agreement by that date the Secretary of State will make the order required to implement the changes. The date selected will be binding on all parties.

M80

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received to date from public bodies, organisations and individuals concerning the proposed extension of the M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The formal presentations made to regional and district councils and other bodies in the latter part of 1992 and the series of public meetings which followed have prompted 53 representations to date. Of these, seven have been from local authorities and public bodies, six from community councils and residents associations, eight from organisations and 32 from individuals. In their representations the local authorities and public bodies have mainly supported the Kelvin Valley route with none coming out against it. The remainder of the representations have tended to reflect the particular interest of the group or individual concerned, with those living alongside the alternative A80 route opposing it and those affected by the Kelvin Valley route rejecting that line. A small number of individuals have questioned the justification for either route.

Computer Literacy

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote computer literacy among those aged 12 to 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Under the five to 14 programme, national guidelines provide schools with guidance on the application of computer learning in each of the curricular areas. In this way pupils will develop knowledge of computers and relevant skills in using technology.

Also, as part of a series of reports on effective learning and teaching, the Scottish Office education department plans to publish a report covering computing later this year. This report will make recommendations to help ensure quality in provision.

Improving standards of attainment, including those in information technology, will also be central to our consideration of the way forward in relation to the Howie committee's proposals for the development of upper secondary education.

New Towns

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what position has been reached in the wind-up of Scottish new town development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Orders to wind-up East Kilbride and Glenrothes development corporations were made on 24 February 1992 with wind-up to be completed by 31 December 1995. These development corporations are due to make their first interim reports to the Secretary of State on progress towards wind-up by 30 June of this year. The dates planned for completion of the wind-up of Cumbernauld, Livingston and Irvine development corporations are 31 December in 1996, 1998 and 1999 respectively. Consultation about winding-up Cumbernauld development corporation will take place later this year with a view to an order being made in December.

On 12 and 13 February 1992 my right hon. and learned Friend informed the new town development corporations of his decisions about successor arrangements for economic development and the disposal of the corporation's assets, including housing. Subsequently the Scottish Office industry department provided development corporations with detailed guidance on implementation of these decisions. Further guidance covering the financial arrangements relating to the disposal of housing, the transfer of planning and the disposal of environmental, civic and community assets is being prepared in light of comments from the new town development corporations and other interested parties, including Scottish Homes and local authorities. All of the guidance emphasises the importance of early and detailed consultation between the development corporations and Scottish Enterprise, local enterprise companies, Scottish Homes and local authorities. These discussions have begun and are at different stages in each town reflecting the different wind-up timetables.

Some progress in the disposal of assets and liabilities has been made in all of the new towns and officials from the Scottish Office industry department are in regular contact to monitor progress.

Cumbernauld and Kilsyth Schools

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which schools in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency will be inspected by Her Majesty's inspectorate for schools in the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: Her Majesty's inspectorate inspects each year a representative sample of schools designed to ensure balance in terms of factors such as location, size, performance, date of previous inspection. An appropriate proportion of schools in the hon. Member's constituency will be included in the sample. The list of schools to be inspected is not published in advance; schools and their education authorities are informed by letter when the inspection is about to commence.

English and Communication Skills

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the use of English and communication skills among those persons aged 12 to 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: A number of measures already in place are aimed at the improvement of the use of English and communication skills. The national guidelines "English Language 5-14" are designed to ensure that between these ages pupils learn to communicate effectively in written and spoken forms and that due attention is given to grammar and spelling.

We have also recently published the report "Effective Learning and Teaching in Scottish Secondary Schools: English" as part of a series which describes good practice in a range of secondary school subjects.

Improving standards of attainment, including attainment in English, will also be central to our consideration of the way forward in relation to the Howie committee's proposals for the development of upper secondary education.

Gaelic

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he makes of the total number of persons domiciled in Scotland who speak Gaelic as (a) their first language and (b) their sole language.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information requested is not available. The 1991 census revealed, however, that there were 69,979 people in Scotland who could speak, read or write Gaelic.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average age of persons domiciled in Scotland speaking Gaelic as a first language.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information requested in not available.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure by his Department in the promotion of the Gaelic language during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The total expenditure on the promotion of Gaelic in 1992-93 is estimated to be £11·9 million. This comprises support for Gaelic education through a scheme of specific grants to local authorities and otherwise; for the building of an extension to Sabhal Mor Ostaig, the Gaelic college on Skye (alongside contributions from Scottish Television and Grampian Television); for Gaelic broadcasting; and for organisations which exist to support the language and culture.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected expenditure by his Department in the promotion of the Gaelic language in each year of the future public expenditure programme.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The projected expenditure is as follows:

	£ million
1993-94	12·095
1994-95	11·936
1995-96	12·173

Prosecutions

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of cases referred to the Scottish Crown prosecution service in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) July 1991 to June 1992 resulted in (i) prosecution and (ii) conviction, in each offence category.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Information is not available in the form requested. Table 1 shows the total number of reports to the procurator fiscal for 1990-92, and the total number and percentage of these reports which resulted in court proceedings. Table 2 shows the number of persons proceeded against in 1990-91 by offence category and the number and percentage of these persons who subsequently had a charge proved against them.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on each (a) primary school pupil, (b) secondary school pupil and (c) average for all pupils, for the last financial year for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The information is given in the table. It does not include the cost of home to school transport, school meals, education authority central administration and loan charges.

Net current expenditure per pupil in 1990-91

Primary	1,508
Secondary	2,675
All schools	2,098

Note: These figures have been compiled from local authority financial returns. The "All schools" figure relates to nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

Business Rate

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many business rate appeals are currently outstanding in each Scottish region and in total.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Not all the valuation areas are coterminous with Scottish regions. The information in the form that it is recorded is set out in the table.

Hospitals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions his Department has had with the University of Edinburgh and Lothian health board with regard to the replacement of the dental hospital in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if it is still his policy to build a replacement for the Royal infirmary in Edinburgh; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Discussions between the University of Edinburgh and Lothian health board and the Scottish Office Home and Health Department about the proposed new Edinburgh dental hospital continue. My right hon. Friend remains fully committed to providing such capital investment as is necessary to establish the dental hospital. It will be for the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary NHS trust, if its application for trust status is approved, to take forward plans for a new dental hospital in consultation with prospective purchasing health boards.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is still his policy to build a new dental hospital in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Policy on the distribution of acute hospitals in Edinburgh is a matter primarily for Lothian health board, in consultation with the Scottish Office Home and Health Department and subject to the approval of my right hon. Friend. Consultations are continuing and proposals will be issued for public consultation in due course.

Civil Legal Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what change there has been in the cost of civil legal aid between 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will publish the figures on that matter supplied to him by the Scottish Legal Aid Board and its commentary on those figures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Gross expenditure on civil legal aid in 1991-92 was £16·58 million. Figures provided by the Scottish Legal Aid Board show that actual expenditure to the end of January 1993 was £20·54 million. The board estimates that expenditure for the full financial year 1992-93 will be £23·45 million—a projected increase of 41·4 per cent. over the 1991-92 outturn. In the view of the Scottish Legal Aid Board, the rise is caused by an increasing number of grants and by grants being claimed and paid more quickly.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 8 March 1993

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Market Testing

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will subject his legal advisers to market testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no plans to market test the work of the FCO legal advisers.

Hong Kong

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are Governor Patten's proposals for current economic reforms in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Governor of Hong Kong made it clear in his address to the Legislative Council on 7 October 1992 that he would maintain the policies that have generated economic success in Hong Kong, including low predictable taxes, Government spending which does not outpace economic growth and the encouragement of competition. In his Budget on 3 March, Hong Kong's Financial Secretary confirmed that Hong Kong's economy continues to perform strongly. He proposed tax cuts, increased expenditure on priority areas, and measures to assist Hong Kong's most disadvantaged citizens. He also forecast an increase of HKD6·8 billion in Hong Kong's projected reserves in 1996-97.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on applications to enter the United Kingdom made to the post in Islamabad by Mrs. Salim Bi (born 2-1-1934) and her son, Shah Jehan (born 16-1-1976) (Ref: Imm/67849); when DNA test results concerning these applicants were received at the post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the High Commission in Islamabad for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Israel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of nuclear warheads in Israel's possession; and what are the implications of this for his foreign policy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no direct evidence that Israel has developed a nuclear weapons programme. However, we are well aware of reports that Israel has such a programme and we shall continue to call on the Israeli Government to allay suspicions categorically by acceding to the non-proliferation treaty as a non-nuclear weapon state. We also call on Israel to work with her neighbours to create a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the middle east.

Employment Protection Regulations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not yet issued any circulars or other advice concerning the transfer of undertakings regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Rwanda

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Rwandan authorities concerning human rights abuses in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The EC and its member states have repeatedly expressed their concern at the present situation in Rwanda and have appealed to all parties concerned to be flexible so that a peaceful solution can be found to their difficulties. The most recent EC statement was issued on 15 February and a copy has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department are monitoring the human rights situation in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no diplomatic mission in Rwanda. Other United Kingdom missions in the region follow closely developments in that country. We also have regular consultations with EC partners and other western countries who have resident representations in Rwanda.

Malawi

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made for international observers to be present for the referendum in Malawi on a multi-party system.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In conjunction with other members of the international community we are prepared in principle to provide observers to the referendum process, subject to the Malawian Government and the Opposition pressure groups reaching a satisfactory agreement on the conduct of the referendum.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to provide assistance on request to the two main opposition political parties in Malawi for printing of leaflets and posters for the referendum on a multi-party system.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made it clear to both the Malawian Government and the political pressure groups that we shall not become involved in any way in the campaigning leading up to the referendum.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made by his Department to monitor the referendum in Malawi; and what assistance has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Malawi and the main opposition parties in connection with the referendum on a multi-party system.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my answer today on the arrangements for observers. We are ready to consider offering financial assistance through the United Nations to support the referendum process under the same conditions.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Malawi concerning the referendum on a multi-party system planned for 15 June 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The referendum in Malawi is scheduled to take place on 14 June. We have repeatedly made clear to the Malawian Government that the conditions under which it is held must be fair and in accordance with internationally accepted criteria if it is to have any credibility with the international community.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to carry out such a survey.

In common with civil servants generally, the conditioned working hours of most full-time staff in the Lord Chancellor's Department and its agencies are 41 gross per week in London and 42 gross per week elsewhere.

Subject to the requirement for all staff to fulfil their conditioned hours, managers have discretion to vary the office hours of individual staff. Court offices are open to the public from 10 am to 4 pm Monday to Friday. Chief clerks ensure that sufficient staff are available at all times when courts are open to the public.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has no plans to issue any circulars on general advice concerning either the regulations or the directive.

Stipendiary Magistrates

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to work towards the appointment of stipendiary magistrates in every town with a population exceeding 70,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to work towards the appointment of stipendiary magistrates in every town with a population exceeding 70,000. Stipendiary magistrate appointments are to commission areas and the Lord Chancellor will consider such appointments normally when he receives requests from those local areas and he considers that the workload warrants that course. The Lord Chancellor has full confidence in the ability of the lay magistracy to cope with the bulk of work. The purpose of stipendiary appointments is to support the lay magistracy.

Law of Domiciles

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Government plan to introduce legislation based on the conclusions of the report of the Law Commission on the law of domiciles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor hopes to make an announcement about this subject in the near future.

Committal Proceedings

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which magistrates are aware of, and use, their powers to hold full committal hearings in cases where there is genuine doubt as to whether the accused has a case to answer before a higher court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The provisions in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 in respect of committal proceedings place the onus on the accused's representative to request that the court consider a submission of no case to answer. For this reason it is not appropriate that I make any assessment of magistrates' awareness of the provisions of section 6 of the Act. The future of committal proceedings is one of many issues on which my Department has submitted views to the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received regarding the accuracy of the statistics given in the leaflet "Legal Aid—How It Works", with particular reference to the average payments to solicitors under the duty solicitor schemes in 1992-93; and how the figure given was arrived at.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No formal representations have been made. However, it has since come to my attention that there is an inconsistency in the way in which the estimate of the average payment to solicitors in 1992-93 under the duty solicitor schemes was calculated. Average payments to solicitors in the years 1988-89 to 1991-92 were derived by dividing gross expenditure on the schemes by the total number of people helped under the schemes. The estimate for 1992-93 was calculated by dividing estimated gross expenditure by the estimated number of bills that will be paid under the schemes. This resulted in an incorrect figure of £101 for 1992-93 because it is not unusual for claims to be aggregated, that is, a single claim may include a number of acts of assistance given to a number of people.

It is estimated that 885,000 people will receive assistance under the schemes in 1992-93 and that gross expenditure will amount to £72 million. Therefore, the average payment to solicitors in 1992-93 will be £81.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many copies of the leaflet "Legal Aid—How it Works" were published by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Three thousand copies of the leaflet "Legal Aid—How it Works" were published by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to whom the leaflet, "Legal Aid —How it works" produced by the Lord Chancellor's Department, was distributed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Individual copies of the booklet were sent to legal journalists and to peers and Members of Parliament. Since publication in December 1992 copies have been supplied on demand to the Legal Aid Board, the Law Society, individual solicitors, branches of NACAB and members of the public.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the legal aid bill is accounted for by (a) solicitors' fees and (b) barristers' fees for each of the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor The proportion of legal aid expenditure accounted for by solicitors' and barristers' fees for each of the last five years was as follows—

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Gross Expenditure—£ million	543	610	715	848	1,097
Solicitors—Per cent.	71	71	69	68	68
Barristers—Per cent.	17	19	18	18	17

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average payment by the legal aid fund to (a) barristers and (b) solicitors in 1991-92.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The average payment made to barristers and solicitors from the legal aid fund in 1991-92 was as follows:

	Barristers	Solicitors
Legal Aid Fund	£335·77	£236·29

For barristers this is an average of payments made in respect of civil legal aid and criminal legal aid in the magistrates' courts. For solicitors this figure is an average of payments made in respect of civil legal aid, criminal legal aid in the magistrates courts, assistance by way of representation, the green form scheme and the duty solicitor schemes. Payments in respect of criminal legal aid in the higher courts are not made from the legal aid fund administered by the Legal Aid Board. Average payments in those cases in 1991-92 were £677·64 for barristers and £741·68 for solicitors.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of the leaflet produced by the Lord Chancellor's Department entitled "Legal Aid—How it Works".

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of the leaflet "Legal Aid —How it Works" produced by the Lord Chancellor's Department was £3,557.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Street Collections

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be issuing guidelines to local authorities on street collections from 1 September.

Mr. Jack: The current legislation governing street collections—the Police, Factories etc (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1916 and the Charitable Collections (Transitional Provisions) Order 1974—will remain in force until replaced by the new provisions in part III of the Charities Act 1992.

The date for commencement of these provisions has not yet been finally settled, although we hope to make an announcement shortly. There will be full consultation on the new regulations before they are brought into force.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many places at secure training centres will be provided to meet needs arising in Nottinghamshire; where these places will be available; when they will be provided; and how much they will cost in capital and revenue terms;

(2) what consultations he intends to hold, and with whom, about his plans to establish secure training centres;

(3) how many places at secure training centres will be necessary to meet needs in England and Wales; where these centres will be located; when they will be open; and how much they will cost in capital and revenue terms.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 2 March, at columns 139-42, we are now preparing for the introduction of a new secure training order. In so doing, we are considering, inter alia, such matters as location, costs and numbers of places for the projected secure training centres. As part of this process, we will be seeking the views of representatives from a range of criminal justice agencies, voluntary agencies and interest groups.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Staff work the number of hours specified in their conditions of service, but there is flexibility on how that is achieved. Where there is a direct service to the public—for example, in passport offices or in the public inquiry office of the immigration and nationality department—public counters and telephone bureaux are manned for the advertised hours. If my hon. Friend has encountered a specific problem, I should be glad to have details.

Operation Container

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 773, about the future of Operation Container, in how many cases in Greater Manchester police officers were involved in the operation other than on rest day working; how many worked on their rest days at the latest date for which figures are available; what information was obtained by the prison service area manager for the Trans-Pennine area at his meeting on 5 February about the implications of police cell usage on police operations in Greater Manchester; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is being obtained from the Greater Manchester police and I will write to the right hon. Member as soon as possible. As was explained in my answer of 11 February, the implications for the Greater Manchester police of the prisoners in police cells problem was discussed with senior headquarters officers on 5 February. It was explained then that Operation Container had been run largely on the basis of rest day working.

Baby Food, Styal Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements currently exist for the supply of baby food to women with young children in Her Majesty's prison, Styal; and what changes have recently occurred in the arrangements.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Fresh raw materials are supplied by the main kitchen to the mother and baby unit at Her Majesty's prison Styal. Babies' meals are then prepared by the mothers in the unit kitchen. Pre-packaged baby food supplements are also available. Until 2 March, these supplements have been bought centrally wholesale. In order to be more sensitive to the individual needs and preferences of the children and offer a greater choice to mothers the unit, from 2 March local purchases of baby food supplements have been made. There is no extra cost to the food budget.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) arrested or (b) stopped and questioned under the terms of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts in 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The available information is contained in the Home Office statistical bulletin on the operation of the prevention of terrorism legislation—No. 5/93.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have had their period of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act extended pending the results of forensic tests.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 4 March 1993]: In considering each application for an extension of detention under the prevention of Terrorism Act, I have regard to the criteria set out by Lord Colville in paragraph 5.1.6. of his 1987 review of the Act—Cm. 246—which include the need for further forensic work. It is not possible to give statistics of the kind requested based on the specific relevant criteria that applied in each individual case.

HEALTH

Nurses

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by regional health authority area, the number of qualified nurses in employment in the national health service for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the tables. All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents. Figures exclude agency staff. For 1989 to 1991, England totals include staff working in the London ambulance services and family health services authorities. In 1991, the special health authorities total include qualified nurses working in the special hospitals service authority—Broadmoor, Rampton and Ashworth. Figures for 1982 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cancer Screening

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to make the national screening programme for breast and cervical cancer available to women aged over 65 years.

Mr. Sackville: Breast and cervical screening is already available to women aged 65 and over. In respect of breast screening, it is available every three years on request. For cervical screening, women over 64 are no longer invited for screening under the call-recall programme but may ask to have a cervical smear at any time. Women aged 65 or over who have not had two consecutive negative smears in the last 10 years should continue to be recalled for screening as part of the national programme.

Mobile Phones (Brain Cancer)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has currently commissioned as to whether non-ionising radiation in mobile telephones can cause brain cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Radiological Protection Board advises the Government on risks to human health from non-ionising electromagnetic radiation, including emissions from mobile radiotelephones. The board's advice is that the radio frequency energy emitted by hand-held radiotelephones does not constitute a cancer hazard on the basis of available research evidence. The Department of Trade and Industry, together with the Science and Engineering Research Council and a number of industrial participants are funding a research study of the physical interaction of fields from hand-held radiotelephones and the human head. The results from this and other studies will enable a better assessment of the extent to which emissions from these devices comply with recommended restrictions on human exposure.

Doctors

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and percentage of female, male and ethnic minority doctors with A+, A, B and C merit awards.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the ethnic origin of award holders is not held centrally. The breakdown requested by sex and level of award is as follows:

	Male	per cent.	Female	per cent.	All consultants	per cent.
A+	195	1·3	8	0·3	203	1·1
A	655	4·4	48	1·7	703	4·0
B	1,451	9·8	115	4·0	1,566	8·9

	5,485	37·2	573	19·7	6,058	34·3

Note: Percentages relate to total of female, male and all consultants respectively. Figures for England and Wales.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available details of the full-time equivalent numbers of (a) medical, (b) nursing, (c) professional and technical, (d) administration, (e) management and (f) other staff employed by health authorities and trusts in England on 30 September in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information is given in the table.

NHS staff by main staff group at 30 September—England

	Whole-time equivalent 1990	1991[1]
Medical and Dental	45,390	46,530
Nursing and Midwifery	395,360	392,200

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the actual time contribution of chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS trusts and the basis on which their emoluments are assessed.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall be considering these matters in due course.

Surcharges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce for health authority and trust chairmen and non-executive directors the same liability to surcharge as applies to local government councillors.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no plans to do so.

NHS Chairmen and Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of (i) chairmen and (ii) non-executive directors in England in 1991-92 who declined to receive emoluments in respect of membership of (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) hospital trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which she has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if she will make a statement on her policy on hours of staff working each work.

Mr. Sackville: We do not believe that such a survey is required and are not aware of any difficulties experienced by members of the public on Friday afternoons. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind perhaps he will let me have the details.

Liver Disease

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the death rates from (i) cancer of the liver, (ii) cirrhosis of the liver and (iii) other liver diseases for each year since 1972.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Death rates (per 100,000 population) from (i) malignant neoplasm of the liver, ICD 155; (ii) chronic liver disease and cirrhosis of the liver, ICD 571 and (iii) other diseases of the liver, ICDs 570, 572 and 573

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of patients on the in-patient waiting list by health authority and trust in England on 31 March 1990, 1991 and 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-patients and Day Cases" published twice a year—information on trusts was first published for September 1991—copies of which are available in the Library. Provisional waiting time figures published recently show that in the 12 months to 31 December 1992 the number of people waiting over a year for in-patient treatment fell by over 51,000 to the lowest figure ever recorded.

Waiting Times

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage achievement rate in each health authority and which health authorities had not supplied monitoring information to her Department for the period April to September 1992, in respect of (a) waiting times for initial assessment in accidents and emergencies, (b) waiting times in out-patient clinics, (c) cancellation of operations on the day of admission and (d) re-admission of patients within one month of a second cancelled operation, indicating the patients charter targets in each case.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities, as purchasers of services, are required to publish annual reports giving details of the performance against all relevant patients charter rights and the standards achieved by their providers. They should have produced their first reports by the end of June. A commentary on overall performance will be included in the chief executive's annual report for 1992-93.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets have been set for each district health authority for waiting times between general practitioner referral and initial consultant appointments.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 4 March at column 219.

Electrocution

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths by electrocution there were in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of these involved domestic users.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables.

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of all the submissions received to date in relation to the publication "Effect of Tobacco Advertising on Tobacco Consumption," a discussion document reviewing the evidence.

Dr. Mawhinney: Comments on the discussion document were not invited on the basis that they would be made public. It would not be appropriate to place copies of the submissions received in the Library without the specific consent of the organisations or individuals concerned.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Teletext Subtitling

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the provision of teletext subtitling for the deaf by independent television companies since 1 January; and if he will seek to introduce arrangements to transfer to his Department responsibility for monitoring such provision.

Mr. Brooke: Both hon. Members and members of the public have written to me about the provision of subtitling services for the deaf. I understand that the problems at the beginning of the year have now been resolved. The Independent Television Commission is responsible for monitoring these services and I see no need to change this arrangement, which was established by the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Key: My Department, which was formed in April 1992, has awarded a contract to Sema Group Ltd. for the supply of computer equipment and associated services. It is currently in the process of contracting out a range of central services, including mailroom services, minor maintenance, office cleaning, porterage, reprographics, security, central typing and secretarial cover. The Department has no in-house team to bid for the work and has decided to contract out these services so it can concentrate on its core policy tasks.

The royal parks division contracted out grounds maintenance work in February 1992. The successful contractors were:

Brophy Plc, Glendale Industries Limited, Serco Plc, Turfsoil Limited and Tyler Environmental Services Limited.

The then Secretary of State for the Environment, who was responsible for royal parks at the time, decided that the work should be contracted out for policy reasons.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of (a) the English tourist board and (b) the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. Key: The English tourist board and the British Tourist Authority have strategic roles to play in the promotion and development of tourism in this country. I have arranged for the chief executives to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many staff were (a) employed and (b) made redundant by (i) the British Tourist Authority and (ii) the English tourist board in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: The staff of the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board are direct employees of the two bodies and all decisions relating to their employment are taken by the members of the boards. Therefore, this question should be addressed to the chief executive of each organisation.

TV Licence Fee

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when regulations will be laid to bring into effect the television licence fee increases announced in December 1992 for 1 April.

Mr. Brooke: I announced on 9 December 1992, Official Report, column 683, that from 1 April 1993 the fee for a colour television licence would increase to £83 and the fee for a monochrome licence would rise to £27·50. On 5 March, I laid before the House the regulations necessary to bring these fees into force.

Television Governing Bodies

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the emoluments he has approved or the basis on which they are calculated for each member of the governing body of the BBC and the Independent Television Commission.

Mr. Brooke: Governors of the BBC and members of the ITC are remunerated as follows:

BBC
Chairman	57,360
Vice Chairman	14,715
National Governors	14,715
Governors	7,360
ITC
Chairman	57,360
Deputy Chairman	14,715
National Members	11,040
Members	7,360

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Key: The staff of the Department and its agency work conditioned hours of 41 per week, including lunch breaks. Some operations in the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the royal parks division are subject to seven days a week working and these are covered on a roster system. Friday afternoons are treated no differently from other days of the week.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what were the attendance figures for 1992 reported by the national museums and galleries in England for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with the figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1991.

Mr. Key [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1992, c. 133]: I am pleased to record that the 1992 admission figures for the natural history museum are higher than indicated in my earlier reply to the hon. Member. The estimated admission figure was 1,659,000 for 1992, which gives a change of 10 per cent. over the figures for 1991. This increase effects the estimated total figure for all the national museums and galleries, which should now be 22,813,985 with an overall percentage increase of 6·4 per cent. over 1991.

PRIME MINISTER

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how the Government co-ordinate the way Departments put the family perspective and the life cycle into social and economic policy.

The Prime Minister: The family is central to social and economic policy. The implications for the family are fully considered by each Department in developing and operating its policies. Where policies cross the boundaries of departmental responsibility, these matters are discussed either directly between Departments or through specific inter-departmental groups and committees.

Privatised Companies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will amend "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" so as to advise Ministers responsible for future privatisations that they should not subsequently accept paid positions on the boards of the privatised companies.

The Prime Minister: No. Such guidance is neither necessary nor appropriate. Former Ministers should make their own judgments about potential conflicts of interest, as other Members of Parliament do.

Lord Lieutenants and High Sheriffs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what are the qualifications for nomination as lord lieutenant or high sheriff.

The Prime Minister: The only formal qualification required of lord lieutenants and high sheriffs is that the latter must own land in the county in which they are to hold office, but by custom both lord lieutenants and high sheriffs are expected to be based in their counties.

Pit Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to ensure that a co-ordinated response is made to areas where collieries are under threat of closure.

The Prime Minister: Lord Walker has been appointed to co-ordinate the regeneration effort in areas under threat of colliery closures. In all areas arrangements are in place to pull together the efforts of all relevant bodies: these include Government Departments, English Estates, training and enterprise councils, British Coal Enterprise, regional development organisations and local authorities.

Full Employment

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 138, if he will define the full employment that he seeks to achieve.

The Prime Minister: The Government pursue policies designed to achieve high levels of employment, consistent with low inflation. Measures to make the labour market competitive, flexible and efficient are an essential part of this.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charters

31. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current situation with the implementation of the citizens charters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made good progress in implementing the charter—90 per cent. of the initial policy commitments set out in the original citizens charter White Paper have been met or are in hand.

Our principal task now is to ensure delivery of the standards and their regular improvement.

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what new citizens charters he plans to introduce.

Mr. Robert Jackson: New charters in 1993 will cover child support; the environment; further and higher education. Other charters—like the parents charter—will be revised to reflect new, higher standards.

39. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress made at the meeting on the citizens charter held in Downing street on 17 February.

Mr. Waldegrave: We discussed some key areas of interest to citizens—transport, health and social security. We also discussed some important themes—complaints systems, inspectorates and league table of performance.

New announcements included a new complaints adjudicator for the Inland Revenue, commitment to publishing league tables of performance in the national health service and commitment to including service standards in British Rail franchises.

40. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the principal sectors of public service which have not yet been covered by the charter programme.

Mr. Robert Jackson: All public services and regulated utilities are covered by the charter programme. They all aim to apply charter principles to the specific needs of their customers.

41. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to visit Scotland on departmental business to discuss progress there of the citizens charter programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am visiting Scotland later this week. I keep in close touch with the citizens charter programme there, and am pleased with the progress being made.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to monitor the proper implementation of the charters introduced so far; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter requires all public service organisations to report regularly and publicly on their performance in meeting published service standards. We monitor overall progress in improving the delivery of public services through ministerial seminars chaired by the Prime Minister, and through formal reports on progress such as the "Citizen's Charter First Report"—Cm 2101—published in November 1992.

Research Students (Awards)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the members of the research students awards committees within each research council during each of the last five years, indicating the institution where each member is based.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I will write to the hon. Member with the information he has requested, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement outlining the criteria chosen by research councils to assess the quality of higher education institutions' departments when deciding upon the allocation of research student awards.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The criteria used by the research councils to assess the quality of higher education institutions' departments are as follows:

Agricultural and Food Research Council

The council's postgraduate studentship scheme is project-based. Applications are individually assessed on the following criteria:

1. the strength of the application to provide the student with a sound research education and training;
2. the reputation and track-record of the supervisor, department and institution;
3. the relevance to AFRC's scientific programme and priorities.

The studentship panels also use personal knowledge, Universities Funding Council selectivity exercise ratings and the information provided on the application form to judge the quality of the department.

The AFRC does not operate a quota system.

Economic and Social Research Council

The criteria which the ESRC employs for the recognition of HEI departments for research student awards were published in 1991 in the council's "Postgraduate Training Guidelines" (paragraph A3). They are:

1. the adequacy of provision for formal training for students in research methods and related issues;
2. the adequacy of the arrangements for the supervision of students;
3. the presence of a good research environment so that the student is conducting research in an environment of other scholars and postgraduates actively researching in related areas;
4. an adequate throughput of students so that the student is unlikely to become isolated from his or her peers;
5. a satisfactory thesis submission rate for students which demonstrates that the majority complete their research within the expected time.

The ESRC does not allocate research training awards to individual departments. Student applications are submitted to an annual competition. The criteria are published in the council's studentship handbook.

Medical Research Council

Criteria used by the MRC to assess the quality of higher education institutions' departments when deciding upon the allocation of research student awards are:

1. the quality of the proposed projects and their suitability as phD Projects;
2. the scientific track-record for the department and proposed supervisors. MRC asks for details of current grant funding and publications relevant to the proposed projects;
3. the department's track-record for training ie. the number of students in the department and the submission/completion rates;
4. the opportunities for a good broad-based training.

Natural Environment Research Council

The quality of the department is only one of the elements taken into consideration in deciding on research student awards. The NERC uses the total number of research students, and the total value of research grants in the departments as indicators of a vibrant research environment. Account is also taken of the excellence of the science involved, the training element within the programme, the track-record of the potential supervisor, and cooperation with industry.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Academic departments applying for quotas of SERC studentships need to give information on departmental complement (all staff, including vacant posts); the size of the postgraduate school (full-time and part-time PhD and Masters students); and the size of the undergraduate school. Undergraduate degree results from the previous two years must be given. Sources of support for postgraduate students are summarised, as well as sources and scale of research grant/contract support. For each research studentship sought, a description of the research area must be provided, as well as details of the academic supervisor (number of students supervised, and number of relevant publications over the past two years), and any use required of SERC central or overseas facilities. Information is also sought on training programmes offered for research students.

Based on this information, quota allocations are made on the quality and timeliness of proposed areas of research, the academic track-record of departments (especially at postgraduate level), previous records of take-up of awards, and such indicators as submissions rates (departments with poor submission rates are sanctioned).

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was (a) the total number and (b) the value in pounds sterling of (i) advanced course studentships, (ii) research studentships and (iii) research grants granted to each academic institution in the United Kingdom during each of the last five years by each research council.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Much of the information requested on research grants and studentships can be found, in most cases, in the research councils' annual reports or handbooks for the past five years. Copies of these publications are in the Library of the House. I am also obtaining some additional material which I propose to forward to the hon. Gentleman and place in the Library of the House as soon as it is available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what plans he has to examine the process by which research councils select membership of research student awards committees;

(2) if he will make it his policy to publish guidelines to research councils to secure that members of research students awards committees who have a close connection with an academic institution or institutions make a declaration of interests and are prevented from taking direct decisions on the allocation of research studentships to such institutions.

Mr. Robert Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to intervene in the procedures adopted by the research councils either for selecting the members of their awards committees, or to select suitable recipients of their postgraduate awards. Where there is a potential conflict of interest affecting anyone involved in the selection process for awards, there are established procedures at all the research councils for preventing this from happening. Under agreed resource management arrangements, postgraduate studentship award allocations are matters entirely within the competence of the councils themselves.

Public Bodies (Chief Executives)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those public bodies headed by a chief executive on a freelance consultancy contract arrangement.

Mr. Waldegrave: With the exception of the BBC, I am not aware of any instances as described by the hon. Member. The terms and conditions of employment of a chief executive of a public body are matters for the body concerned under the general direction of the sponsor Department and subject to the consent of the Treasury.

Charter Marks

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the 1993 Charter Mark awards competition will be launched.

Mr. Robert Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister launched the 1993 Charter Mark scheme on 17 February at his seminar on the citizens charter. All public sector organisations providing a service directly to the public are eligible to apply. The closing date for the scheme is 30 June 1993. Up to 100 Charter Marks can be awarded this year. The response that we have had so far has been very encouraging and we are expecting a large number of applications.

Charters (Compensation)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 14, which four charters in addition to the British Rail passengers charter and the London Underground customers charter contain provisions for financial compensation.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The following charters also contain provision for financial compensation.

the Benefits Agency customers charter;
the Contributions Agency employers and contributors charters;
the Northern Ireland Railways passengers charter.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The conditioned hours of all staff in the main grades are 41 hours gross a week in the London pay area and 42 hours gross a week elsewhere. The majority of staff in the agencies for which I am responsible work under flexible hours schemes to which core time rules apply. A condition of the flexible hours schemes is that they may be withdrawn if the system is abused or if the work needs make it impractical. There is no evidence of abuse of the system or that customers of the Department are not effectively serviced on Friday afternoons, so I see no reason to carry out a survey.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Witzemann v. Hauptzollamt München-Mitte

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the judgment in the case of Witzemann v. Hauptzollamt München-Mitte by the European Court of Justice on 2 and 25 October and 6 December 1990, case C-343/89; what information he has as to the costs falling to the Community of the case; and if he will outline how a judgment against the accused would be enforced in such a case, in respect of financial penalties.

Sir John Cope: I have noted the outcome. There are no new United Kingdom policy implications. Where an action is brought under article 177 of the EC treaty for a preliminary ruling by the ECJ, the costs of the action are reserved to the national court. Any judgment in the national court will be enforced in accordance with the laws of that member state.

Auditing

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to bring forward proposals for imposing a duty on auditors of firms in the regulated sector to report to the regulators.

Mr. Nelson: I am pleased to announce that a joint Treasury and Department of Trade and Industry consultation document is being published today. This includes draft regulations imposing a statutory duty on auditors to report to the Bank of England any information which they believe to be relevant to their client bank's fulfilment of the authorisation criteria in the Banking Act, in line with the recommendation made by Sir Thomas Bingham in his report of the inquiry into BCCI.

The consultation document also includes draft instruments extending a similar duty to report to the relevant regulatory authority, for auditors of building societies, friendly societies, persons regulated under the Financial Services Act, and at the initiative of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, companies regulated under the Insurance Companies Act.

The instruments which would implement the statutory duty have been drafted in close consultation with the auditing profession, with bodies representing regulated firms, and with the regulators.

Comments are requested on the consultation document by 1 June. When the Government have had time to consider these, we will prepare draft instruments to lay before the House. These should come into force before the end of 1993.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the House Libraries.

WALES

Sheep Farmers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the net farm income in real terms of sheep farmers in severely disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The income figures in real terms—that is, deflated by the RPI 1991-92 = 100—are as follows:

Severely disadvantaged sheep farms

Year
1979-80	6,677
1980-81	11,524
1981-82	15,453
1982-83	10,233
1983-84	13,434
1984-85	14,537
1985-86	9,896
1986-87	13,414
1987-88	12,342
1988-89	19,104
1989-90	10,903
1990-91	11,373
1991-92	16,540

Inmos

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the highest number of employees at the Inmos plant in Newport; and what is (a) the present total and (b) the planned number in 1994 at Newport Wafer Fab, under the programme of Government assistance.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is commercially confidential.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the European Community to date in the current year concerning prompt payment of the final instalments of the sheep annual premium.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Commission took the decision on the final rate of premium last month. Publication of the rate in the Official Journal is expected shortly. We hope to be able to make the payments in early April.

Preseli Environmentally Sensitive Area

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farms could be included in the Preseli environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. David Hunt: About 2,300.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review annually payments made under the Preseli environmentally sensitive area; and if he will index link them.

Mr. David Hunt: Payment rates are currently reviewed every two years and there are no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria his Department used for designating all of the Preseli, Pembrokeshire district an environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. David Hunt: The environmentally sensitive area scheme was introduced to help conserve, through the maintenance or adoption of particular agricultural practices, areas of the countryside where the landscape, wildlife or historic interest is of national importance. Final decisions on the precise boundary of the Preseli ESA will be taken in the light of the forthcoming consultation exercise.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what organisation will set the conditions covering the environmentally sensitive area of Preseli; how its members will be appointed; and from what organisations they will be drawn.

Mr. David Hunt: The proposed management prescriptions for the Preseli ESA, which will form part of the consultation document that is to be issued shortly, have been drawn up by my Department in consultation with the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Countryside Council for Wales and other farming and environmental bodies.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the overall budget for the Preseli environmentally sensitive area for 1993-94 and his estimate for 1994-95; and what will be the total acreage covered.

Mr. David Hunt: The overall budget for the proposed Preseli ESA will be dependent upon the rates of payment to farmers which will be decided in the light of the forthcoming consultation exercise. It is anticipated that the Preseli ESA will cover approximately 115,000 hectares.

Cereal Growers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many commercial cereal growers in Wales have completed yield data forms in each of the years from 1986; and how many of those grow winter wheat.

Mr. David Hunt: Holdings cannot be classified on the basis of whether they are commercial cereal producers. A close approximation to this group is the farm typology group "Specialist Cereal Holdings". The table gives the number of holdings in this group responding to the cereal production survey, and of those, how many grow wheat.

Number of specialist cereal holdings[1] in Wales responding to the April cereal production survey[2] each year from 1987 to 1992

Harvest year	April survey year	Number of specialist cereal holdings	Of which grow wheat[3]
1986	1987	4	0
1987	1988	19	7
1988	1989	19	7
1989	1990	8	3
1990	1991	12	7
1991	1992	13	6

[1] The classification of holdings into farm types is based upon a system of estimating the dominant activity on each holding using standard gross margins (SGMs). Conceptually the SGM is the difference between the value of the output of each activity and the variable costs of the necessary inputs to the activity. Specialist cereal holdings are therefore characterised by cereals production being the dominant activity.

[2] There are normally three cereal production surveys in the course of a year. The first is around August-September towards the end of the harvest period which provides a first estimate of cereal production. The second survey is conducted during November which produces another provisional estimate of total production. The third and final survey is in April and the results of this survey are used as the final cereal production estimates. The table has therefore been produced using only the holdings responsible to the April survey.

[3] No distinction is made between winter and spring sown varieties of wheat in the cereal production survey.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his best estimate of the number of commercial cereal growers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: There were 250 specialist cereal growers in Wales according to the June 1992 agricultural census.

Agricultural Grants and Subsidies

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums were paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme available to farmers in 1992; how many agreements were entered into for each grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows:

	Divisional Offices
	Caernarfon £000s	Carmarthen £000s	Llandrindod Wells £000s
(a) Subsidies
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances	12,162	7,043	19,022
Sheep Annual Premium Scheme	32,090	19,784	42,364
Suckler Cow Premium Scheme	3,552	2,540	6,246
Oilseed Support Scheme 1992	60	53	132
Farm Woodland Scheme	11	10	16
(b) Grant Schemes
Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme	1,284	2,733	1,892
Agriculture Improvement Scheme	375	832	460
Agriculture and Horticulture Development Scheme	371	318	362
Farm Diversification Grant Scheme	69	192	116
Farm Diversification Marketing and Feasibility Grant	6	4	7
Environmentally Sensitive Areas	388	547	607
Five year Set-Aside	37	217	144
One year Set-Aside	0	3	8
The number of agreements entered into in 1992 are as follows:
Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme	63	46	126
Farm Diversification Grant Scheme	1	4	1
Farm Diversification Marketing and Feasibility Grants	1	5	5
Environmentally Sensitive Areas	93	15	9

Livestock Identification Scheme

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will include the livestock identification scheme in the Government's review of the scope for deregulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The introduction of animal identification systems is a consequence of EC requirements.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the livestock identification scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Farm Support Schemes

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what Government financial aid schemes are currently available to assist farm diversification and farm development and to support farm incomes in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: All the current agricultural support schemes, implemented under the common agricultural policy, contribute to a greater or lesser extent to the incomes of farm businesses. The most important to farmers in Wales in terms of overall expenditure include the sheep annual premium scheme, hill livestock compensatory allowances, suckler cow premium scheme, beef special premium scheme, farm and conservation grant scheme and the environmentally sensitive area scheme. The farm and conservation grant scheme is the only one of these schemes containing specific measures aimed at developing or improving the farm structure. Grants for farm diversification were available under this scheme, but were withdrawn on 18 January 1993.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, columns 340-41, what interviews he had with persons with a view to appointing them as chairman of the Welsh Development Agency; how many persons expressed an interest in the post prior to its being advertised; how many persons he approached for the post; and how many meetings with potential appointees took place.

Mr. David Hunt: Applications for and expressions of interest in the post of chairman are confidential. I will be making an announcement on the appointment in due course.

Higher Education, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Higher Education Funding Council concerning the future of (a) academic teaching and research accommodation requirements of the Cardiff Business School, (b) the student residential accommodation requirements for the University of Wales College of Cardiff and (c) the proposed third campus proposal at Cardiff Bay.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Special Schools (Psychiatry Services)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has with the south Glamorgan health authority concerning the cessation of provision of child and adolescent psychiatry services to special schools.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Employment Protection Regulations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the Acquired Rights directive.

Mr. David Hunt: A copy of my Department's letter of 9 November 1992 to health authorities in Wales has already been placed in the Library of the House; no other circulars or advice have been issued.

Community Facilities

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of approvals for new schemes involving capital grants to village halls, voluntary youth services and community centres which will be given in 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1993-94 the resources available for this programme will be fully utilised in meeting commitments arising from previous years. No new schemes have been approved, therefore.

Disadvantaged Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what has been the rate of return on capital on cattle and sheep farms in severely disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979;

(2) what has been the rate of return on capital on livestock farms in disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979;

(3) what has been the rate of return on capital on specialist sheep farms in severely disadvantaged areas in Wales in each year since 1979;

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The available information is as follows:

Hill and Upland (SDA) Cattle and Sheep Farms

	Return on net worth Per cent.	Return on tenant's capital Per cent.
1986-87	−0·06	2·1
1987-88	2·00	4·9
1988-89	2·83	9·2
1989-90	−0·08	4·4
1990-91	−0·70	1·1
1991-92	0·70	4·8

Upland (DA) Livestock Farms

	Return on net worth Per cent.	Return on tenant's capital Per cent.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leyland DAF

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations have been made into the transfer pricing policies of Leyland DAF.

Mr. Sainsbury: No investigations have been carried out by the DTI into the transfer pricing policies of Leyland DAF.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the 1991 accounts of Leyland DAF were laid at Companies house.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 5 March 1993]: I understand that the company accounts for Leyland DAF Ltd. for the calendar year 1991 have not been filed at Companies house. They were due by 31 October 1992 and a letter advising the company of this fact was issued six weeks before that date. The annual accounts were not received by then and as is normal in such cases Companies house initiated default procedures. A letter was issued on 16 November 1992 and in the absence of any response a further letter was issued on 8 January 1993. Notice of the appointment of an administrative receiver was received at Companies house on 5 February. As responsibility for the company's affairs now lies with the administrator, further action against the directors would be inappropriate.

Foreign-domiciled Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the number of foreign-domiciled companies operating in Great Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: Comprehensive figures are not available on the total number of foreign owned companies which have invested in Great Britain. However, figures on manufacturing business published by the Central Statistical Office show 2,419 foreign-owned businesses in the United Kingdom in 1990.

Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list his Department's published inspectors' reports which are critical of auditors for their failure to make a proper going concern evaluation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. Copies of published inspectors' reports are available in the Library for inspection.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what analysis his Department makes of his inspectors' reports; and to whom it is made available.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Reports of inspectors are considered carefully and information is disclosed, through the provisions of sections 451A and 449 of the Companies Act 1985, to prosecuting or regulatory bodies as appropriate. Relevant policy or legislative points are noted and considered within my Department.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 261, if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of the annual plutonium production figures.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Retailers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to prevent companies withdrawing supplies to retailers who offer their products at bargain prices to consumers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Investigation of anti-competitive behaviour such as refusal to supply or withdrawing supplies is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading under the competition legislation. Where a refusal to supply is connected to resale price maintenance the Resale Prices Act 1976 has effect. Any evidence of such behaviour should be drawn to the Director General's attention.

Insurance Companies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to make it compulsory for insurance companies to belong to an arbitration scheme.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. I believe the present voluntary schemes offer a desirable degree of flexibility which could be lost if membership were made compulsory.

Correspondence

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Minister for Energy intends to reply to the letter dated 8 December 1992 from the hon. Member for Sherwood.

Mr. Eggar: I replied to the hon. Member on 24 February.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made of the effect on London unemployment of the designation of assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: The main grant schemes available in the assisted areas, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants, are both demand-led and depend on businesses bringing forward suitable, eligible applications. Forecasting the possible impact of assisted area status on unemployment levels of individual areas is therefore not possible.

Coal Industry

Mrs. Golding: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been paid in wages for not working to the work force involved in the 10 pits which are subject to the consultation process since the pits have ceased coaling.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

Electricity

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his views have been sought by the European Commission on the proposed electricity interconnector between Scotland and Northern Ireland; and what his response has been.

Mr. Eggar: The President's views have not been sought by the European Commission on the proposed electricity interconnector between Scotland and Northern Ireland. Electricity matters in Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Eggar: My Department places a high priority on the service it offers to the public. Staff work a five-day week and local managers are required to make suitable arrangements to ensure that the public are properly served. The attendance requirements in each office apply on Fridays as on any other day and no special provision whatsoever is made for it to be treated any differently.

Bureaucracy

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he is making in cutting departmental and other bureaucracy for small and medium-sized businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All the regulatory Departments have begun a review of the regulations for which they are responsible. In parallel, seven task forces of business men, organised on a sectoral basis, are being set up to advise Ministers on priorities for repeal and simplification with special reference to the needs of small and medium-sized businesses. The names of the chairman and members of the task forces will be announced shortly.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many oil spills have come from platforms operating in the United Kingdom sector in the last five years; and what proportion this number represents of the total number of spills.

Mr. Eggar: Numbers of oil spills from offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf are published annually in the "Brown Book"[1]. Total reported spills from all sources are also published annually by the Advisory Committee on Pollution of the Sea in its survey of oil pollution around the coasts of the United Kingdom. The figures for 1987-91 are:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
(a) Total reported spills from all sources	500	559	764	791	705
(b) Spills from offshore installations	254	259	291	345	234
(c) Line (b) as a percentage of line (a)	50·8	46·3	38·1	43·6	33·2

In 1991 the 234 spills from offshore installations totalled 192 tonnes of oil. Within the 471 spills from other sources reported by ACOPS, the 34 largest totalled 1,864·4 tonnes and there were 275 for which the amount spilt was not known or not recorded.

[1] Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom: A Report to Parliament by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his best estimate of the amount of oil discharged in oil-based drilling mud into the environment from offshore drilling rigs in the United Kingdom sector in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The discharge of oil-based drilling mud into the environment from offshore drilling rigs in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea is not permitted.

Discharge of oil-contaminated cuttings produced when using oil-based drilling mud may be permitted under an exemption, granted by the Secretary of State, from section 3 of the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971.

The Government publish annually in the "Brown Book", "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom: A Report to Parliament by the Minister for Energy", the quantities of oil discharged with cuttings. For the five years 1987-91 these were:

	Tonnes oil
1987	12,400
1988	18,500
1989	13,400
1990	12,310
1991	11,225

Gas Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage further competition in the gas industry.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has referred the markets on gas supply, gas transportation and storage to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

We shall consider what steps should be taken to encourage further competition in the light of its report.

EC Steel Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conclusions have been reached in discussions between EC Ministers about the future of the EC steel industry; what recommendations he will be making to the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: EC Ministers have agreed a package of measures based on a voluntary programme of capacity reductions. The main elements are: additional ECSC financial support for the social costs of closures; internal market measures, including strict application of state aid rules, speedy consideration, within EC competition rules, of inter-company co-operation agreements, and non-mandatory guidance on production and deliveries within the Community; and external measures, including limited restrictions on certain steel imports from central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

Since United Kingdom industry has already undergone substantial restructuring and rationalisation, I would expect future capacity reductions predominantly in other EC countries, particularly Spain, Italy and Germany.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the British Constructional Steelwork Association concerning the alleged subsidisation of Italian constructional steelwork imported into the United Kingdom for the second Severn bridge and other projects.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

I wrote to the British Constructional Steelwork Association on 26 November. A copy of my letter has been sent to the hon. Member.

Euroway Estate, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which edition of the Employment Gazette contained information on the grant and project for Spring Ram Ltd. on Euroway estate, Bradford.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Employment Gazette has not contained any information on the current Spring Ram project at Euroway estate, Bradford.

Miners' Redundancies

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many miners have taken voluntary redundancy since 13 October 1992, both in total and on a pit-by-pit basis.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Hicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those coal mines and the number of coal miners and other staff made redundant in each year since 1977.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 March 1993]: This is a matter for British Coal.

Pension Funds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received in relation to the guidelines for disqualification from future positions as directors of private companies, including any directors in their past or present responsibilities found not to have paid over personal pension plan contributions made by deduction from wages and salaries.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: While such representations have been received in relation to specific cases, none has been received in general terms.

National Welsh Bus Company

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 739, on what date he expects that his insolvency service disqualification unit will complete its consideration of the administrative receivers' reports into the conduct of the directors of National Welsh Bus Company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The insolvency service has asked the administrative receivers of the National Welsh Bus Company to clarify and amplify matters contained in their report on the conduct of the directors of the company. Until that information is received the Secretary of State is unable to say when a decision will be taken.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 739, what representations he has received concerning the failure of the directors of the National Welsh Bus Company during 1991 to pass on to the pension company, personal pension plan contributions deducted from the bus company's employees' wages and salaries.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Secretary of State has received representations from a beneficiary of the National Welsh Bus Company pension scheme concerning a failure to pay over pension contributions deducted from employees' wages.

Shipbuilding

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy on implementation of the EC decision on the level of shipbuilding intervention funding.

Mr. Heseltine: Following the decision of the European Commission, notified to member states on 18 Janaury 1993, I have decided to maintain the maximum level of support for large merchant ships at 9 per cent. for 1993. I have similarly decided that maximum support for small ships will be maintained at 4·5 per cent. These levels, which are the maximum permitted by the European Commission, are inclusive of shipbuilder's relief at 2 per cent.

Monopolies and Mergers

Mr. Booth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to make a further reference of a public sector body to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As part of its regular programme of efficiency studies of publicly owned bodies, the Commission has been asked to look into the service provided by the British Waterways Board. The formal reference was made today. It asks the MMC to look at whether, in carrying out its functions under the relevant legislation, the BWB could improve efficiency, reduce costs and improve the quality of service provided. The terms of reference will be laid in the House of Commons Library.

Pension Funds

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the percentage level of the employer's contribution to the pension funds of (a) British Telecom, (b) British Gas and (c) the electricity boards in the year prior to privatisation.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 5 March 1993]: Percentage levels of the employer's contribution in these companies in the year prior to the privatisation of each were:

British Telecommunications Staff Superannuation Scheme: 15·5 per cent. (FY 1983-1984).
British Gas Corporation Pension Scheme (Industrial): 6 per cent. (FY 1986-1987).
British Gas Staff Pension Scheme: 23·4 per cent. (FY 1986-1987).
Electricity Supply Pension Scheme: 37 per cent. (FY 1989-1990).

Energy Technology Support Unit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of research contracts administered by his Department's energy technology support unit in (a) 1980 to 1989 and (b) 1990 to 1993 have been contracted to researchers employed by ETSU; and if he will list the annual value to the ETSU for each year since 1980 of research contracts supported by external resources which have been undertaken in-house.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 March 1993]: As manager of research programmes, ETSU is precluded from contracting research work under those programmes to its own employees.

Before 1989, the Department of Energy was ETSU's sole customer. Since 1989, ETSU has offered its programme management, technology transfer, and strategic studies capabilities to United Kingdom and overseas Government Departments and to the Commission of the European Communities. Income from these new sources was £78,000 in 1989-90, £511,000 in 1990-91, and £1·062 million in 1991-92.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met EC Commissioner Millan; what plans he has to meet Commissioner Millan to discuss the United Kingdom's allocation under the European regional development fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend has had no formal meetings with Commissioner Millan.

I last met Commissioner Millan on 14 December 1992. I have no definite plans for our next meeting.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pest Control

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) which Department of the House has responsibility for pest control in the precincts of the Palace of Westminster;

(2) what arrangements are currently in place for the prevention of mice infestation in the House; which company currently holds the contract; for how long that company has held the contract; and when it was last put out to tender.

Mr. Ray Powell: These are primarily matters for the Serjeant at Arms and I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Written Answers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council what action he proposes to take in respect of the practice used by Ministers of submitting written answers, pursuant to earlier questions already answered.

Mr. Newton: This issue is addressed in the Third Report of the Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1990-91, paragraphs 128-130. I am considering the Committee's recommendations and will respond shortly.

Oral Answers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the names of hon. Members who have in this Parliament had a question to the Secretary of State for Employment for oral Answer listed on the Order Paper among the top 12 more than three times.

Mr. Newton: None.

SCOTLAND

Prisoners' Ombudsman

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish a prisoners' ombudsman.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Consideration is at present being given to the comments received in response to publication in September 1992 of the Scottish prison service working group report "Right and Just" which made recommendations for reform of the procedures under which prisoners in Scotland are able to make requests and complaints and to air grievances. An announcement on the shape of new procedures will be made when that consideration is complete.

Hospital Staff

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of nurses, doctors, administrative staff, senior managers and domestic staff employed in each hospital, (a) at the nearest available date and (b) three years ago.

Mr. Stewart: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Limited statistics for NHS employed staff are, however, shown by hospital in the 1991-92 edition of the "Scottish Health Service Costs", a copy of which is available in the Library. Comparable data for earlier years are not available in this published series.

Police Interview Notes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many instances in each of the past three years criminal convictions have been referred back to the Court of Appeal following re-examination of the original police interview notes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 March 1993]: None.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests have been made to the police in each of the past three years for the disclosure of original interview notes in cases where criminal charges have been brought; in how many instances these requests have been denied; and for what reasons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 March 1993]: This information is not held in a readily retrievable form.

Health Service (Employment Protection)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish all correspondence between the Scottish health service and (a) Tayside health board and (b) the Dundee hospital trust relating to (i) the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations and (ii) the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

Mr. Stewart: Only two letters giving a legal view on the TUPE regulations 1981 have been issued from the central legal office of the NHS Scotland to Tayside health board. The advice given to the board was in general terms and did not involve the Dundee hospital trust.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department made towards the report, "Environmental Auditing—an Introduction and Practical Guide", published by the British Library.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year (a) at year-by-year prices and (b) at current prices the total amount of moneys made available to the travel-to-work areas included in the assisted areas map since it was last reviewed in 1984.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available. My Department does not make moneys available with reference to travel-to-work areas.

Canada Geese Eggs

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences he has issued in each of the last five years for the taking or destroying of Canada goose eggs; and how many eggs were reported as having been dealt with under those licences.

Mr. Maclean: Information on licences issued to take or destroy Canada goose eggs in each of the years 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991 is contained in the United Kingdom's annual derogation reports to the European Commission, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

During 1992, 27 licences to take or destroy eggs were issued. Returns for the number of eggs dealt with are still awaited from some licence holders.

Child Protection, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the standard spending assessment component for services in Lambeth associated with child protection; and how that component compares with the standard spending assessments for the other Inner London boroughs expressed in the form which would be applicable to a standard population size.

Mr. Robin Squire: Child protection is one of many aspects of social services for children covered by the children's element of the standard spending assessment for personal social services. The amount of this element expressed in pounds per child under 18 for all London authorities is given in the table.

PM10 Particulates

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at how many sites in the United Kingdom he plans to monitor for PM10 particulates; and how many local authorities monitor for PM10.

Mr. Maclean: The Department currently monitors PM10 particulates at eight sites in the United Kingdom, with a further four sites planned by the end of 1993. One local authority monitors PM10.

Thames Water Extraction

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the impact of water extraction from the River Thames on salination levels in the upper reaches of the river.

Mr. Maclean: None: this is a matter for the National Rivers Authority to monitor.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in the Ordnance Survey since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None of the projects in Ordnance Survey's market-testing programme since November 1991, which involves exposing in-house functions to competition, has yet reached the stage where a contract or service level agreement has been awarded. Functions and services which are currently being market tested are computer operations, printing and graphic reproduction, elements of office services, site security and catering.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from Ordnance Survey since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Baldry: Since November 1992, Ordnance Survey has contracted out the following functions without market testing an in-house bid.

(1) Part of the Internal Audit programme, particularly computer audit. The successful contractor was Ernst and Young. No in-house bid was sought since the work contracted out supplemented the continuing in-house programme and the intention was to assess the quality of contracted out audits prior to full market testing.

(2) Bulk enveloping and despatch of invoices and publicity material. The successful contractor was the local Sheltered Workshop (SIT). The work was contracted out to meet peak demands and to make better use of directly employed staff.

Ordnance Survey has contracted out a proportion of its large scale map digitising programme for a number of years and this has been ongoing since November 1991. The reason for contracting out is that the digitising programme has a finite life, it will be completed by 1995, and it was not economic to invest in recruitment and training of extra staff and the associated expensive equipment for such a short period. The contractors involved are

BKS Surveys
Consult Gardline Surveys
Geografix
Glen Computing
Graphical Data Capture
Ground Modelling
Grove Consultants
JTC Computer Systems
Laserscan
Mason Land Surveys
QC Data
Summerside Associates
Survey International
Survey and Development Services
Taywood Data Graphics

In addition, a large part of the in-house task associated with warehousing materials and equipment has ceased as a result of the introduction of call-off contracts.

Ordnance Survey (Market Testing)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the firms of consultants used by Ordnance Survey as part of the market-testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The firms of consultants used by Ordnance Survey for work relating to the market-testing programme since November 1991 are P. Bacon Consultancy, Grosvenor Consultancy Services Ltd. and Coopers and Lybrand. The total cost of consultancy advice is estimated to be of the order of £40,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in Ordnance Survey are assigned to the market-testing programme; how much the programme has cost Ordnance Survey since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: One person controls Ordnance Survey's market-testing programme, in conjunction with other duties. A number of line managers are involved in individual market testing projects as part of their normal duties. The exact amount of time spent on these duties is not recorded and the cost of the programme could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons underlie the ineligibility of owners of residential mobile homes for disabled facilities grant aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, a property is eligible for disabled facilities grant only if it is a dwelling and the owner has an interest in the land on which it is located. Mobile home owners have difficulty in meeting these legal requirements. We are considering whether ways can be found of extending minor works assistance to mobile home owners for small repairs and adaptations.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were his reasons for (a) accepting report 665 of the Local Government Boundary Commission and (b) not giving detailed reasons for his decision when he announced it on 23 February.

Mr. Robin Squire: The recommendations from the Local Government Boundary Commission were accepted because it was considered to be in the interests of effective and convenient local government to have the existing airport in one local government area. We carefully considered the commission's recommendations and all representations on them. We reached our conclusion on a balance of judgment and, as has been the consistent practice in such cases, we do not propose to set out our reasoning in greater detail.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to include an element based on the percentage of people with a long-term sickness or disability in SSA calculations in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The need to incorporate in SSAs for 1994-95 information from the 1991 census provides an opportunity to take a more wide-ranging look at their composition. My right hon. and learned Friend has said that he will consider any representations for changes which are made to him.

Wetlands

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what impact the proposed new environmental protection agency will have on determining environmental policy towards wetlands.

Mr. Maclean: The proposed new Environment Agency will bring together all of the functions of the National Rivers Authority, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the waste regulation functions of local authorities to form an integrated body. It will have no responsibility for determining environmental policy towards wetlands, but may provide information on matters within its responsibilities. The Government are committed to the wise use of wetlands as part of their obligations under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much English Nature spent on management agreements that involved the protection and management of wetland areas in the last financial year.

Mr. Maclean: English Nature spent £5,735,359 on management agreements in 1991-92. A breakdown of that expenditure for all 1,584 agreements by habitat type is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However £49,404 was spent on new agreements involving wetland or partial wetland sites concluded in 1992-93 where the annual payment exceeded £2,000 or where a lump sum payment in excess of £10,000 was made.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all important wetland sites designated under the Ramsar convention to date.

Mr. Maclean: I was pleased to announce the designation of Roydon Common, Gibraltar Point and the Nene Washes as wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention, and the extension of the existing Ouse Washes Ramsar site, on 5 March 1993. The United Kingdom has now listed 62 Ramsar sites, including one site in a dependent territory, the Turks and Caicos Islands. Details of the sites are as follows.

United Kingdom sites listed as wetlands of international importance under the RAMSAR convention

Employment Protection Regulations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Robin Squire: No such circular has been issued to local authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State intends to make a statement on this matter shortly.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to enact for England and Wales provisions in respect of the authority for water companies or others to cause a disconnection of a domestic consumer's water supply along the lines of those in force in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 March 1993]: No. It is right that bills should be paid, but equally that companies should deal sympathetically with customers who are having difficulty meeting their bills. Significant safeguards exist to protect domestic customers of water companies in England and Wales who cannot pay, rather than will not pay, from the prospect of disconnection. In Scotland water supply is at present a local authority service.

Radiation Leak, Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring has been carried out of the areas affected by the radioactive contamination resulting from the recent leak at Sellafield with regard to possible dangers to health.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 2 March 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

This Department and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, as joint authorising Departments for the disposal of radioactive waste from licensed nuclear sites, place a statutory obligation on operators to carry out monitoring of discharges and environmental radioactivity as a condition of authorisations. When British Nuclear Fuel Ltd's monitoring at Sellafield indicated the recent enhanced discharges of radioactivity, the company carried out high-volume air sampling and extra sampling of milk and grass in the areas affected.

This Department samples milk in the vicinity of the Sellafield site as part of our routine surveillance activity near all licensed nuclear sites. Following these incidents we have also analysed grass samples and our dry cloth deposition collectors located around the site which provide data on airborne activity.

On the basis of the results of this sampling, our scientific assessment is that the radiological impact from these discharges to the most exposed members of the public is no more than 10 microSieverts. By contrast the dose to members of the public from normal background radioactivity is 2,200 microSieverts a year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what implications, in terms of time and content, her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inquiry into the recent radiation leak at Sellafield will have for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution consultation into the proposed radioactive waste discharge authorisations from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield site; and if he will make it his policy that no decision will be made on the draft authorisations until the results of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inquiry into the leak are known.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution currently does not expect the investigations into the recent incidents at Sellafield to affect the timetable for assessing the results of the consultation exercise on the proposed new authorisations at Sellafield. HMIP and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food still currently expect to submit their report on the consultation process in early April 1993.

Any decisions on the draft authorisations will take account of lessons arising from the investigations.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Howard: The staff in my Department and its agencies are conditioned to work 41 hours per week in London and 42 hours per week outside London. Both include five hours per week for lunch. In addition, if local management agree, staff can join the flexible working hours scheme. Staff who join the scheme must start work between 7.30 am and 10.00 am and must leave between 4.00pm and 6.30pm. The scheme is shortly to be amended so that staff will have the flexibility to leave between 4.00pm and 8.30pm.

The hours worked by staff on any particular day is for local management to decide. This they will do taking into account the requirement, where necessary, to cater for the needs of the public. I see no need to undertake a survey.

TRANSPORT

British Rail National Timetable

4. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about a British Rail national timetable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have received a number of letters about future arrangements for a national rail timetable and have given a clear assurance that a national timetable will continue to be published.

Channel Tunnel

7. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his timetable for the establishment of freight terminals for channel tunnel traffic in the west midlands.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail. I understand that it expects the Birmingham Euroterminal, serving the whole of the midlands, to be ready when the channel tunnel opens.

Cambridge (Southern Relief Road)

12. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of Cambridgeshire county council's plans for a Cambridge southern relief road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This road would form part of the local road network which is the responsibility of the county council. My Department has had continuing discussions with the county council on its proposed Cambridge strategy, including the relief road.

Young Drivers (Casualties)

13. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to introduce a package to reduce casualties among new and young drivers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are considering a number of possible measures to improve the safety of newly qualified drivers and hope to consult on proposals shortly.

Cleethorpes-Newark Line

14. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to include the Cleethorpes-Newark line in his east coast franchising proposals.

Mr. Freeman: When my right hon. Friend announced on 2 February the first services to be prepared for franchising British Rail had already announced its decision to withdraw its direct inter-city service from London to Cleethorpes in May. The franchise announced for the inter-city east coast main line does not therefore include the line from Newark to Cleethorpes.

Civil Aviation Authority

15. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the powers of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Shipping Accidents

16. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken at the International Maritime Organisation to improve the compensation arrangements appertaining to shipping accidents.

Mr. MacGregor: The United Kingdom took a leading role in the adoption at the IMO last year of protocols ensuring higher limits of liability in the event of an oil spill. We are also working at the IMO to develop a convention to ensure high levels of compensation in the event of a chemical spill.

Waterloo-Exeter Line

17. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects new trains to be in service on the Waterloo-Exeter route.

Mr. Freeman: The first new train for the Waterloo-Exeter line was delivered to British Rail on 23 January. British Rail expects it to enter service later this month. The remaining trains should be in service by July.

A550 Extension

18. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the cost of the proposed A550 extension.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The combined estimated cost of the two stages of the planned A550 improvement between Deeside park and the M53 is £49·2 million.

Breathalyser Tests

19. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many breathalyser tests were carried out on motorists in England and Wales over the Christmas and new year period; how many of these were positive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 59,069 tests were carried out, of which 4,248, or 7·2 per cent., were positive. The proportion of positive tests was slightly lower than for the previous Christmas. There has been a continuing downward trend in drink-drive accidents; the number of fatalities has more than halved in the last decade, to around 700 in 1991. We are determined to get this number even lower.

Railways (Scotland)

20. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the Board of ScotRail to discuss railway matters in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no plans to meet the board of ScotRail. At my regular meetings with the chairman of the British Railways Board we discuss a wide range of railway matters including those involving Scotland. I plan to visit Scotland later this month when I hope to meet the ScotRail management team.

Road Accidents

21. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent progress in the aim to reduce the numbers of road accidents by one third between the years 1985 and 2000.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aim is to reduce road accident casualties by one third by the year 2000, compared with the annual average for 1981-85. The provisional figures for the 12 months ending in September 1992 show that fatalities are down by 21 per cent., serious injuries by 33 per cent. and all casualties by 3 per cent. on the target baseline.

Bypasses

22. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses are planned to be started in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Nineteen of the 41 new national road programme starts announced by my right hon. Friend on 4 February are bypasses and most of the others will remove traffic from local communities. In addition, local authorities plan to start another 24 bypasses on their roads.

West Coast Main Line

23. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment plans for the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport gave to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) earlier today.

Motorway Repairs (Land Rental Contracts)

24. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect that the introduction of lane rental contracts for contractors undertaking motorway repairs has had on the speed of repairs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We estimate that lane rental contracts are completed some 30 per cent. faster than conventional contracts.

Rail Privatisation

25. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the impact of rail privatisation on the rail links to the north and the west of the Scottish highlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I met the hon. Members for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy), for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), and for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston), together with councillors and officials of the Highland regional council on 10 February to discuss the implications of passenger rail franchising for the highland lines.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 2 February, we intend to franchise ScotRail passenger services as a whole. The east coast main line InterCity services are also being prepared for franchising, and that includes services to Inverness. Fort William will continue to be served by the west coast main line InterCity services when they come to be franchised.

Subsidy will be made available to support franchised ScotRail services as at present and InterCity services if necessary. Service levels, which will be based on the timetable being operated by British Rail immediately prior to franchising, will be written into legally binding contracts between the franchising director and the franchised passenger train operators.

Road Programme

26. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the economic effects of his road programme in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The road programme aims as one of its objectives to assist economic growth by reducing transport costs. The programme of construction meets the needs of industry and other road users through the provision of a modern strategic road network. The benefit which roads generate for the economy is assessed by the use of cost-benefit techniques of economic appraisal.

In his statement to the House on 4 February, the Secretary of State pointed out that the 41 schemes due to start next financial year will bring substantial economic, safety and environmental benefits to road users and the country as a whole. The benefits of these new schemes in terms of accidents avoided and time savings to road users has been assessed at £2·5 billion.

Concessionary Bus Passes

27. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to take to promote the availability of concessionary bus passes for pensioners.

Mr. Freeman: The promotion of concessionary bus passes for pensioners is a matter for local authorities.

Public Transport (Women's Safety)

28. Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve women's safety on public transport systems.

Mr. Norris: My Department has a long-standing commitment to improve passenger safety on public transport.

The remit of my Department's standing panel on assaults on bus staff has been extended to include the monitoring of data on assaults on bus passengers and possible remedial measures. The panel has recommended that bus operators install radios and video cameras in their vehicles to protect both employees and passengers.

We have also co-sponsored the passenger guidance leaflet published by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust, "Travel Safely by Public Transport". The leaflet contains practical safety advice for women using all forms of public transport.

Concessionary Rail Travel

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 869, how many concessionary rail passes were issued to British Rail staff, their dependants and ex-British Rail staff in each of the last five years; and what is the number of British Rail staff dependants who receive concessionary rail travel.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of staff, including dependants, entitled to concessionary travel facilities, as at 9 January, were given to the hon. Member in my answer of 29 January, at column 869. Passes are issued to all those entitled on an annual basis and comparable figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail Employees

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are employed by British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The figure reported to my Department on 11 February was 131,651.

Red Route, West Wickham

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic surveys were conducted in West Wickham high street before the formulation of the proposals to designate this stretch of the A232 as a red route.

Mr. Norris: None. As we made clear in our consultation document in January last year, the basis for the composition of the red route network was the existing primary route network, which consists of the best routes for traffic entering and leaving London and making longer distance journeys within it. The A232 West Wickham high street is a primary route.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the likely increase in traffic growth through West Wickham high street following its designation as part of the A232 red route.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the London borough of Bromley to consider in preparing the red route local plan. If it foresees any increase in traffic, the traffic director would expect the local plan to include offsetting benefits in terms of reduced congestion, improved road safety, or environmental improvements on nearby roads.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the Traffic Director to pay an official visit to West Wickham high street before finalising his decision to designate this stretch of the A232 as a red route.

Mr. Norris: The A232 West Wickham high street was designated a red route by the Secretary of State on 11 June 1992.

I understand that the traffic director and his assistant director south-east visited West Wickham high street prior to attending a meeting of the London borough of Bromley's technical services committee on 20 January. The assistant director has also visited West Wickham high street on several previous occasions to inspect traffic conditions during the morning peak, lunchtime and early evening periods.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to a possible diversion of the proposed A232 red route from West Wickham high street in order to meet the objections raised by local residents.

Mr. Norris: We carefully considered the London borough of Bromley's alternative proposal that the red route should by-pass West Wickham high street. We concluded, however, that no change should be made to our original proposal.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received with regard to the proposed red route through West Wickham high street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have received 517 representations and in addition four petitions containing a total of 341 names.

I am satisfied that the high street forms part of an existing strategic route through south London which will benefit from the introduction of red route measures.

Road Building and Management

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent on road building and management in real terms (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1991-92 prices, £1,035 million was spent in 1979-80 and £1,889 million in 1991-92 on new construction and capital and current maintenance of national roads in England.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the ratio of road to public transport expenditure by his Department (a) nationally and (b) in London.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Comprehensive details of the Government's expenditure on transport for the three-year period 1993-94 to 1995-96 are contained in the Department of Transport report 1993, Cm 2206. In this period, planned spending on roads amounts to £8,181 million and on public transport £6,760 million, a ratio of 1.21 to 1. Expenditure on transport in London is not identified separately and it would be difficult to produce reliable and meaningful figures. However, it is clear that a much higher proportion of transport expenditure in London is on public transport than is the case nationally.

Channel Tunnel (East Coast Link)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects passenger services via the channel tunnel to operate along the east coast main line; whether designs for power-cars and rolling stock for such services have been finalised; and when he expects orders for this rolling stock to be placed.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail expects to start operating international daytime services on the east coast main line towards the end of 1995. The dedicated trainsets for these services were ordered in December 1991.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a map showing the rail route, together with speed restrictions, to be followed from the east coast main line to Kensington Olympia for onward service to the channel tunnel; if he will outline all track and signalling works necessary for this route to be followed, stating in each case when such works are to be, or were started, and when they will be completed.

Mr. Freeman: These are operational matters for British Rail. The Department does not hold the information requested.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects freight services via the channel tunnel to operate along the east coast main line; whether locomotives for such services have been ordered; and when they are expected to begin service.

Mr. Freeman: The dedicated class 92 locomotives are on order and are due to be delivered from the autumn of 1994. The railways should, however, be in a position to run international freight trains from the time the tunnel opens by using other locomotives to provide traction through the tunnel.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the tender list for sections 102 to 112 of the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: No, this is a matter for London Underground Ltd. I understand that it is prepared to release such information in appropriate cases, but only after the award of contracts.

East Coast Line (Electrification)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the sources of funding for the east coast line electrification.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail investment is funded by a mixture of Government grants and loans and its own internal resources. It is for BR to decide how these funds are allocated to particular projects. In addition, the east coast line electrification project received grant aid from the European regional development fund.

Travelcards

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the future of travelcards in London; and what steps he is taking to ensure the continued availability of such cards after bus deregulation and rail privatisation.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about this. The Government are discussing with London public transport operators what developments in joint ticketing arrangements, such as travelcard, will best meet the future needs of passengers and operators. In the light of travelcard's popularity, private sector bus and rail operators will be keen for commercial reasons to offer such a facility.

British Rail Pension Fund

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the restrictions applying to the purposes to which British Rail pensions fund assets may be applied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is entirely a matter for the trustees of the British Rail pension schemes, acting in accordance with the powers within the various trust deeds and scheme rules.

Helicopters, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the findings of the study into sites for a permanent helicopter base in London.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 5 March 1993]: The Secretary of State hopes to receive the report of the London heliport study working group in the summer and to publish the report as soon as possible thereafter.

NORTHERN IRELAND

National Anthem

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in which newspapers and magazines the Community Relations Commission advertised its research post on practice relating to the playing of the national anthem.

Mr. Hanley: The Northern Ireland Community Relations Council placed advertisements in the Belfast Telegraph and Fortnight magazine for an independent consultant(s) to carry out research on flags and emblems.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what financial basis property currently vested in the Department of Health and Social Services will be transferred to HSS trusts.

Mr. Hanley: When an HSS trust is set up, the assets it needs for its functions are transferred to it and it takes legal ownership of them. Land and buildings held for operational use are valued by the Valuation and Lands Office at open market value for existing use. This valuation, less the value of any liabilities transferred to the trust, constitute the trust's originating capital debt.

Social Security

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available for the Asylum road, Derry, Lisnagelvin, Limavady and Strabane social security offices to indicate the numbers in receipt of income support, the respective numbers receiving each of the income support premiums and the numbers receiving unemployment benefit without income support.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Wylie to Mr. John Hume, dated 3 March 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the numbers in receipt of Income Support, the respective numbers receiving each of the Income Support premiums and the numbers receiving Unemployment Benefit without Income Support at Asylum Road, Lisnagelvin, Limavady and Strabane has been passed to me for reply.

The most recent information available is attached.

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library

Income support payments—premiums and unemployment benefit in Asylum Road, Lisnagelvin, Limavady and Strabane

	Name of office
	Asylum Road	Lisnagelvin	Limavady	Strabane
Number in receipt of Income Support	12,092	5,884	3,667	6,593
Number in receipt of pensioner premium	892	562	378	816
Number in receipt of enhanced pensioner premium	229	176	100	216
Number in receipt of higher pensioner premium	677	509	364	674
Number in receipt of disability premium	1,037	464	303	596
Number in receipt of lone parent premium	2,673	935	450	749
Number in receipt of family premium	1,274	701	602	889
Number in receipt of Unemployment Benefit without Income Support	494	292	315	177

Note: There are another three premiums i.e. disabled child premium, severe disability premium and the carer premium. Unfortunately, no statistical data is held on the number of customers in receipt of these premiums.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the processing of disability living allowance applications indicating average processing times per component, progress on the backlog of applications and any special measures taken.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Wylie to Mr. John Hume, dated 3 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Social Security Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am replying, therefore, to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland concerning Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

As you know, we conducted a highly successful publicity campaign to launch the new disability benefits in Northern Ireland. In addition, we wrote to some 55,000 existing Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance recipients to invite them, where appropriate, to claim extra money under DLA. Take up campaigns were also run by other organisations to encourage claims to Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance before they were replaced. All of these activities attracted a much larger number of applications in the early stages than was expected. Although we had expected an increase in applications the response far exceeded our forecasts.

The surge of applications meant that we were fully stretched to cope with the volume of work. When I wrote to you in July 1992, I explained that appropriate measures had been taken to tackle the situation, including the recruitment of additional staff and working extensive overtime. Significant inroads have been made into the number of new DLA claims on hand. During the period from February 1992 to February 1993, 28,000 new claims were received and of these 20,000 have been cleared. In addition, almost all of the 8,000 claims received from existing beneficiaries have been cleared. Some 3,300 applications for review have been received of which 1,500 have been cleared.

You asked about the average processing times per component. A claim to DLA is a claim for the benefit as a whole and not for a specific component or level of component of the benefit. The primary target set for the clearance of DLA claims is 60 per cent. of claims to be cleared in 30 days. We met the target in November and December 1992 but the average performance since April 1992 to date works out at 25 per cent. cleared in 30 days. While we are still some way, therefore, from meeting the target on a full year basis, the situation is improving and action is being taken to further reduce the backlog and thereby significantly improve the clearance times.

The phased introduction of computerisation from October 1992 has speeded up the payment process and will lead to much greater efficiency when the conversion from the clerical to the computer system is completed at the end of March. There will always be, some case of course, where further enquiries have to be made or medical examinations arranged. While these have been reduced to manageable proportions, there has been a recent rise of some 50 per cent. in new claims with around 800 claims being received each week. An additional 40 staff were recruited in January this year to deal with the work on hand and a dedicated telephone section has been set up to help deal with customers' enquiries.

I very much regret that, despite our best efforts, the service to many of our disabled customers has fallen far short of what they should receive. Although the intake of new claims has risen substantially, I am monitoring the situation closely and I expect that, as a result of the measures being taken, all backlogs will be cleared by April.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to compare application rates for each component of disability living allowance with those for attendance allowance and mobility allowance, award ratios by rate and review/appeal ratios.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A Wylie to Mr. John Hume, dated 3 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Social Security Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am replying, therefore, to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland concerning application rates for Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance.

Firstly, I should explain that a claim for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is a claim for benefit as a whole and not for a specific component or level of component. In addition, in comparing Attendance Allowance prior to April 1992 and DLA, it should be noted that Attendance Allowance was then also available to people aged under 65 years of age.

Bearing this in mind, in 1991 there were 18,600 claims for Attendance Allowance and 7,800 claims for Mobility Allowance. From February 1992 to February 1993 there were 36,000 claims for DLA and between April 1992 and January 1993 there were 15,400 claims for Attendance Allowance which is now only available to people aged 65 or over.

In terms of benefit awarded, the success rate for Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance in 1991 was 53 per cent. and 60 per cent. respectively. The success rate to date for new claims to DLA is 79 per cent. and for review applications 65 per cent.

As regards reviews and appeals the details are as follows:

	Numbers
1991
Attendance Allowance	3,116
Mobility Allowance	4,036
1992-93
DLA	3,500

I hope this is helpful.

EDUCATION

Parents Charter

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations he has had with representatives of parents concerning the parents charter.

Mr. Forth: Surveys commissioned by the Government have shown that most parents would welcome more information about schools. The parents charter explained parents' current rights, and promised improved access to information about the quality of information and the standards achieved in schools. The first set of comparative school performance tables were published last November and have been widely welcomed by parents and others.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) to which of the teachers' professional associations the consultation paper on a common funding formula for grant-maintained schools has been sent;

(2) to which of the teachers' professional associations he intends to send the rest of the series of consultation documents promised in the letter sent out on 18 December 1992 accompanying the consultation document on the common funding formula for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: The consultation paper which issued on 18 December, on a common funding formula for self-governing state—grant-maintained—schools, was addressed to local education authorities and self-governing schools. The teachers' professional associations were all sent the relevant press release. Copies of the paper were sent to any association on request. We are happy to add the name of any body or individual to the circulation list for further papers in the CFF series and to receive comments from them.

Teachers

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers retired at the statutory age of 60 for women or 65 years for men in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: The teachers' superannuation scheme provides for retirement benefits to be paid to both men and women once they reach age 60. The table shows the number of women aged 60 and men aged 65 who retired during the financial years 1989-90 to date.

Year to March	Women	Men
1990	1,346	513
1991	1,348	477
1992	1,188	443
[1]1993	1,236	393

[1] Provisional.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many new teachers entered the profession in each year since 1989-90;

(2) how many new teachers are expected to enter the profession in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the number of new entrants to full-time teaching in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England and Wales during 1989-90 and 1990-91. Information for later years is not yet available.

Year to March	Number
[1]1991	16,900

[1] Provisional.

The number of new teachers who enter the profession in future years will depend on the recruitment decisions of employers and governors of schools with delegated budgets.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Education how many teachers aged over 50 years in maintained schools left the teaching profession (a) with enhanced compensation for redundancy and (b) with basic compensation for redundancy in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: A complete set of data is not held centrally, but our records indicate that the number of teachers over age 50 who retired prematurely from maintained nursery, primary and secondary and special schools and received enhanced benefits was as follows:

Year to March	Total
1990	1,365
1991	1,562
1992	1,549
[1]1993	1,900

[1] Provisional.

Data relating to the number of teachers who left the profession with only basic compensation for redundancy are not collected centrally.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many teachers were employed in maintained schools in each year since 1988-89;

(2) how many teachers are expected to be employed in maintained schools in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the number of teachers employed in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England each January, including LEA-maintained and self-governing state schools.

	Full-time equivalent teachers
1989	397,410
1990	398,542
1991	394,945
1992	394,874

The number of teachers to be employed in LEA maintained and self-governing state schools in 1993-94 will depend on decisions taken by employers and by the governors of schools with delegated budgets.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers in maintained schools left the teaching profession with compensation for redundancy before reaching the age of 50 years in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers are expected to retire in 1992-93 having attained the age of 60 for women and 65 years for men.

Mr. Forth: In 1992-93, 400 men aged 65 and 1,300 women aged 60 are expected to retire from teaching.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Boswell: Staff in the Department work a total of 41 hours each week in London and 42 hours in Darlington at times designed to enable the office to fulfil its service to the public and to its Ministers. There is no significant difference in hours of attendance between Fridays and other weekdays.

Staff in the Teachers' Pensions Agency are conditioned to 42 hours. The agency has made public in the charterline the hours in which it is open for business. These are 8.30 am to 5 pm on Mondays to Thursdays, and 8.30 am to 4.30 pm on Fridays.

My right hon. Friend is proud of the record of officers in the Department, many of whom voluntarily work long hours to carry out his policies.

Hours of attendance in non-departmental public bodies are a matter for the individual body.

Student Maintenance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what support will be given from public funds towards students' maintenance in the academic year 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend's plans for maintenance provision through mandatory awards and loans for students domiciled in England and Wales are set out in the departmental report (Cm 2210) published last month, a copy of which is in the Library. The rates of awards and loans for 1993-94 will be included in regulations to be laid before the House in due course. Support is also available through discretionary awards made by local education authorities and through the access funds.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research has been undertaken to investigate the extent of student financial hardship which has occurred during the current academic year.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has commissioned a survey of full-time undergraduate students' income and expenditure during the academic year 1992-93 including the 1992 summer vacation. The findings should be available later in 1993.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the value of the real level of the student grant for students living away from home and not studying in inner London for the year 1967-68, at 1993 prices, together with the current maximum basic grant.

Mr. Boswell: The basic mandatory grant for students living away from the parental home and studying outside London in the academic year 1992-93 is £2,265. Students in those circumstances will be able to take out loans of up to £715, making a total of £2,980. In 1967-68 the value of the corresponding mandatory grant was £2,964 at 1992-93 prices.

Schools (Ministerial Visits)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which schools in Staffordshire he has visited since becoming Minister; and on what dates.

Mr. Patten: I have not yet had the opportunity of visiting schools in Staffordshire among the 31 that I have been to since becoming Secretary of State; however, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth), visited the Maple Hayes Hall independent special school on 13 November 1992.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, with dates, all the visits he has made as Minister to (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools, identifying whether the school is local education authority maintained, voluntary aided or grant maintained.

Mr. Patten: The information requested is in the table:

Access Funds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what level of access funds will be made available for the academic year 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend's expenditure plans, as set out in the departmental report (Cm 2210) published last month, include access funds provision for institutions in England of £23·8 million in 1993-94. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the oral statement of 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-43, by the Home Secretary on juvenile offending, which Department or Departments will be responsible for funding the new statutory duty on local education authorities to educate pupils who are not attending school.

Mr. Forth: The new duty will replace existing powers exercisable by local education authorities under section 56 of the Education Act 1944 and section 3 of the Education Act 1981. The Government do not expect this to lead to a significant increase in the costs of local education authorities.

Nursery Schools, London

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which five London boroughs currently have the highest percentage of children under five years registered as attending local authority funded nursery schools.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992, the latest date for which information is available, nine of the 33 boroughs in Greater London had no maintained nursery schools. Of the 24 authorities which did, the five with the highest percentages of under-fives attending maintained nursery schools were: Hammersmith and Fulham, 16 per cent.; Newham, 12 per cent.; Tower Hamlets, 11 per cent.; Greenwich, 10 per cent.; and Kensington and Chelsea, 9 per cent.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what percentage of children aged under five years attended local authority funded nursery schools in London in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1990;

(2) what percentage of children aged under five years in London attend local authority funded nursery schools.

Mr. Forth: In January 1980, 1985, 1990 and 1992—the latest date for which information is available—approximately 5 per cent. of the local population aged three and four attended maintained nursery schools in Greater London. The equivalent figure for January 1975 was approximately 4 per cent.

School Population

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average size of each school population for which each education authority in England is responsible.

Mr. Forth: The average sizes of LEA-maintained primary and secondary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1992 are shown in the table.

Pupils (Religious Allegiance)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the results for each local education authority of the religious allegiance statistics for pupils in maintained schools collected under his Department's circular 16/89, including the religious allegiance figures for pupils aged five to 11 years at the beginning of the school year 1990-91 and the percentage of such pupils in each local education authority of each religious affiliation according to the said circular and those for whom no information is available; and if he will give the corresponding information for England as a whole.

Mr. Forth: The information supplied by many local education authorities and self-governing state schools in 1990-91 was incomplete and of poor quality. I do not intend to publish the results, but I will write separately to my hon. Friend on this matter.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list for each local education authority the number of determinations granted to schools by the standing advisory council on religious education under section 12 of the Education Reform Act 1988, the total number of county and controlled schools, and the percentage of such schools which have been granted exemption from daily Christian worship; and if he will give summary figures for England as a whole;

(2) what percentage of schools have been granted exemption from daily Christian worship; and if he will list them.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table lists for each local authority where a determination has been granted, and for England as a whole, the number of determinations granted, the number of county schools, and the number of determinations as a percentage of county schools.

It is not possible to give the percentage of county schools with determinations since more than one determination may apply to a single school. Controlled schools cannot be granted determinations because they are not subject to the requirement that worship should be wholly or mainly of a broadly Christian character. Controlled schools are not therefore included in the information. Information on which schools have been granted determinations is not held centrally.

Primary Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education was invited to consider the discussion paper "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools" published by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education submitted its report to him on its consideration of the discussion paper "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools"; and whether he will publish the report;

(3) what recommendations were made to him by the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education arising from its consideration of the discussion paper "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools".

Mr. Forth: The then Secretary of State wrote to the chairman of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education in February 1992 to seek the council's advice on the implications for the initial training of primary teachers of the report on curriculum organisation and classroom practice in primary schools. CATE submitted interim advice to my right hon. Friend in July 1992, emphasising the need for further work. Following the two recent reports on primary education from the National Curriculum Council and from Ofsted, my right hon. Friend has now requested further advice from CATE with a view to issuing in April, for consultation, proposals for the reform of training for primary teachers.

Syllabuses

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which local education authorities have adopted new agreed syllabuses since 29 September 1988; whether in each case the syllabus is newly prepared or an adopted syllabus of another local education authority; and if in the latter case he will list the name of that syllabus and the date of preparation.

Mr. Forth: We understand that the local education authorities listed in the table have adopted new agreed syllabuses since 29 September 1988. Where an authority has adopted the agreed syllabus of another local education authority, the name of the authority and the date of the syllabus is included in brackets.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the names of agreed syllabuses about which his Department has received complaints under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 since its passing; and what actions his Department has taken following these complaints and the subsequent action of the local education authority concerned.

Mr. Forth: The Department has received complaints about the agreed syllabuses of Coventry, Ealing and Newham local education authorities. The first of these complaints is still under consideration. Following the other complaints, the Department wrote to the authorities setting out the Secretary of State's concern that their syllabuses were not detailed enough to meet the statutory requirements. The Department also wrote to chief education officers in England on 18 March 1991 with advice about the nature of agreed syllabuses. Newham LEA has subsequently adopted a statutory appendix to its syllabus. Ealing LEA has constituted an agreed syllabus conference to review its syllabus.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 to prohibit the exclusion from school of children with special educational needs while (a) the process of assessment or (b) an appeal by parents against their child's statement is ongoing.

Mr. Forth: No. While we look to schools to use exclusion sparingly and as a last resort, particularly where pupils with special educational needs are concerned, there will be instances where it is the most appropriate response to serious misbehaviour.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Ben Hamilton

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 316, whether, prior to the discontinuance of the proceedings against Mr. Hamilton, forensic reports had been received on all materials sent for examination in connection with the proceedings.

The Attorney-General: At the time the decision to discontinue the criminal proceedings against Mr. Hamilton was made, there were certain outstanding lines of inquiry being pursued by the police which included the results of forensic examinations. However, these lines of inquiry could not be assessed as likely to produce the required corroboration for the perjury charge and were unlikely to have been completed within a time scale which would have justified an application for a further remand.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the staff requirement for the warhead for the United Kingdom Trident system was formally endorsed by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: August 1984.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the additional capabilities which would be available to the United Kingdom Trident system if the mark IV bus purchased from the United States of America was replaced with mark V bus from the same source.

Mr. Aitken: No such assessment has been made.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Trident missile service units are used in conjunction with the explosives handling jetty at Coulport.

Mr. Aitken: They will be.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the purchase of the mark V bus for the United Kingdom Trident system from the United States of America.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Defence Electronics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the press were prohibited from attending the conference on exporting defence electronics held by his Department's Defence Sales Export Organisation on 24 February.

Mr. Aitken: The conference was a private one providing members of the Electronics Equipment Association and Defence Export Services Organisation with the opportunity to exchange views in confidence on a wide range of issues. Requests from the media to attend the conference were therefore declined.

Navy Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of (a) surface ships currently used by the Royal Navy and (b) serving officers of Admiral rank.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy currently has 98 surface ships of minesweeper size and above, excluding RFA vessels, and 42 serving officers at admiral rank, including those at rear and vice admiral, excluding those who are currently on terminal leave or undergoing pre-retirement vocational training.

Helicopters

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the defence budget will be spent on armed helicopters in (a) 1993-94 and (b) each of the next five years.

Mr. Aitken: This information is derived from my Department's long-term costing. As explained by my right hon. Friend in his answer of 13 May last year, Official Report, column 155, it is not our practice to provide such details.

Submarines

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many submarines are deployed by the Royal Navy at present: and if he will list the different types.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy's submarine fleet currently consists of three Polaris, one Valiant, five Swiftsure, seven Trafalgar, three Oberon and three Upholder class submarines.

Personnel Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of (a) officers and (b) other service personnel in (i) the British Army, (ii) the Royal Navy and (iii) the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures at 1 February 1993 are:

	Officers	Other ranks	Total
Royal Navy	9,907	50,196	60,103
Army	16,354	120,608	136,962
Royal Air Force	14,524	67,264	81,788
TOTAL	40,785	238,068	278,853

Deployments

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average interval in months a United Kingdom soldier in the British Army can expect between (a) deployments and (b) deployments in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested.

Sailing Clubs

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what orders have been given for yachts for sailing clubs in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force; if he will list in each case the type of yacht, its cost, where the order has been placed and when the yacht will be in service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many sailing clubs operate in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force; what were the annual running costs for each over the last three years and the estimates for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All sailing clubs in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force are private clubs run for the benefit of their members. In the Army there are 62 such clubs in the United Kingdom and abroad ranging from windsurfing through dinghy to offshore sailing. A similar situation applies in the Royal Navy and the RAF, but information on the numbers of clubs is not readily available. Clubs purchase their yachts using their own non-public funds. It would not be appropriate for me to provide information on these private transactions or on the running costs and estimates of these clubs.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Aitken: With the exception of the Meteorological Office, which provides a 24-hour service seven days a week, and the service careers/recruiting offices which have set opening hours and are manned to provide advice and assistance to the public during these hours, the Ministry of Defence provides little else in the way of a direct service to the general public.

Conditioned hours are 41 gross per week in the London pay area, and 42 gross per week elsewhere. Arrival and departure times of staff may be staggered in accordance with departmental regulations. The overriding principle, however, remains that flexibility should be achieved without adverse effect on the overall efficiency of the Department in general, and the establishment in particular.

Naval Colleges (Vehicles)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy as regards buying trucks and cars of British manufacture for the use of naval colleges; what new vehicles have been bought by each naval college in the last three years; and if he will give the cost and country of origin in each case.

Mr. Aitken: Trucks and cars for the naval colleges are purchased as part of the defence wide procurement of vehicles by my Department's procurement executive. In accordance with Government policy best value for money is sought through competition, which under European Community rules must be open to companies of all EC member nations.

The new vehicles issued to each of the naval colleges in the last three years are listed in the table:

Britannia Royal Naval College—Dartmouth
3 Rover Montego 2·0 DLX
2 Rover Metro City 1·0 L
1 Ford Escort Estate 1·8 D Popular
1 Renault Traffic 1100 D Crewbus
2 Leyland DAF 200 Minibus
1 Land Rover Defender 90
1 Land Rover Defender 110
1 Plaxton 29 Seat Coach
1 Leyland DAF 200 Dropside Truck
2 Leyland DAF 4 Tonne Truck

Royal Naval College—Greenwich
1 Rover 825 D
4 Rover Montego 2·0 DLX

Royal Naval Engineering College—Manadon
1 Rover Montego 2·0 DLX
1 Leyland DAF 200 Dropside Truck

All the above vehicles originated in the United Kingdom, with the exception of the Renault Traffic, which originated in France.

The cost of the vehicles is commercially confidential.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the defence implications of the Chilean Government's stockpile of chemical weapons;

(2) what assessment he has made of the defence implications of Egyptian research focusing on pathogenic micro-organisms and dangerous disease-bearing agents;

(3) what assessment he has made of the defence implications of the Iranian sarin and mustard gas producing capability;

(4) what assessment he has made of the defence implications of the development of biological weapons including anthrax, cholera, bubonic plague and smallpox by North Korea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Increased proliferation of chemical and biological weapons has both international and regional security implications. We continue to keep the situation under review and the United Kingdom is determined to play a full part, through existing international fora, in controlling the proliferation of such weapons.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the the level of Libyan stocks of sarin, mustard gas and phosgene.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are aware that Libya has had the capability to produce mustard and nerve agents since the late 1908s.

RAF Hereford

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for the closure of RAF Hereford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) on 6 November 1992, Official Report, cols. 536-37.

Warrior Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Warrior vehicles are deployed with (a) the British forces in Bosnia Herzegovina and (b) the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers are (a) 68 and (b) 283.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Warrior vehicles deployed with the British Army of the Rhine are in full working order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to disclose information of an operational nature.

United Nations Military Planning

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 497, what plans have been made to provide British military personnel to strengthen the military component of the United Nations secretariat; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many military personnel are currently attached to the United Nations secretariat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 47 military personnel from all nations attached to the United Nations secretariat. The United Kingdom provides one major and one lieutenant commander on secondment to the field operations division of the United Nations secretariat. These officers deal with finance and logistics respectively. We would consider favourably any request by the United Nations to provide further military personnel for service in the secretariat.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 497, what is the current status of the discussions relating to strengthening the military component of the United Nations secretariat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military adviser's office of the United Nations secretariat has already been reinforced to deal with specific subjects such as earmarking and training. More general strengthening and restructuring of the secretariat's military component is under consideration as part of the follow-up to the Secretary-General's report, "An Agenda for Peace", and the United Kingdom mission to the United Nations is playing an active role in these discussions.

Long-term Costings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is now prepared to change his policy regarding the release of information on the long-term costings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 13 May 1992, Official Report, column 155.

Departmental Accommodation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the sale of MOD accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Surplus married quarters which are suitable for individual sale are offered for sale to service personnel at a discount. Any which are not suitable for individual sale would normally be offered for sale in bulk on the open market to the highest bidder. In line with the recommendations of the Ministry of Defence's housing task force, all bulk sales of surplus married quarters are now offered in the first instance to housing associations at a discount in return for nomination rights on a proportion of the properties for a period of five years; the size of the discount and the number of nominations are determined on a case-by-case basis. Surplus civilian houses are sold on the open market, but any which are occupied are first offered for sale to the sitting tenant at a discount. If they do not wish to purchase, the property is sold on the open market as an investment sale and the occupant is given a protected tenancy.

RAF Hereford

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the new Meridian telephone system at RAF Hereford will be installed;

(2) how much it will cost to install the new Meridian telephone system at RAF Hereford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Installation costs, including minor works services, will amount to some £5,000. Work is under way with a view to the system becoming operational on 1 April.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) housing associations and (b) local authorities relating to the housing located at RAF Hereford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information has been provided to relevant local authorities on the reasons for the closure of RAF Hereford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Letters were sent to the Hereford and Worcester county council and to the South Hereford district council on 5 November 1992 explaining the background to the ground training rationalisation study and its recommendations. The local defence land agent has since met both councils to confirm that the closure will proceed and to discuss the future of the site.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates have been made of the costs involved in removing the Meridian telephone system that is due to be installed at RAF Hereford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. It is not expected that removal costs would exceed installation costs.

Spare Parts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 497, which part of the annual supply estimates contains information on expenditure on spare parts.

Mr. Aitken: Proposed expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on spare parts is included within the aggregate figures of expenditure given in the supply estimates, the most recent being 1992-93 summer supplementary estimates and new estimates, pages 25-32.

Correspondence

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive a reply to his letter dated 10 February addressed to the Minister of State concerning the holding of a fatal accident inquiry into the death of Fusilier Anthony McAnally.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member very shortly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Know-how Projects

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the total amount spent by the Government to date on know-how projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Expenditure under the fund is as follows:

1989-90	2,117
1990-91	13,668
1991-92	49,364

Total spending for 1992-93 will not be available until later this year.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants in each standard planning region have been seconded to work on know-how projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Nine civil servants from south-east region, four from north-west region and one from east midlands region have been seconded to work on know-how projects.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many know-how projects have been supported to date; if he will list these with the names of the agencies or companies responsible for undertaking them; and in each case what proportion of the total cost was met by Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund has supported more than 650 projects to date. A list of our activities by country, cost, purpose and project status is available from the libraries of the House. To break this down further to include details on each agency or company participating in the projects and what proportion of the total cost was met by the Government would involve disproportionate staff costs.

Crown Agents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish the Coopers and Lybrand report on the Crown Agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans to publish Coopers and Lybrand management consultants' report, as it will contain commercially sensitive information on Crown Agents' business activities. However, a full statement will be made to the House about the future status of the Crown Agents following the completion of the review.

Chandrapur Project

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if appraisal procedures on social, environmental and economic costs and benefits of the Chandrapur project in India have now been completed; and whether the United Kingdom Government's developmental as well as commercial criteria have now been met.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration has not yet completed its appraisal of the Chandrapur project in India.

Africa

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the reasons for the United Kingdom's refusal to provide funding for the International Fund for Agricultural Development's special programme for Africa for poverty alleviation through environmental rehabilitation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We consider that IFAD's work in Africa, as for other poor regions, should now be financed from its regular resources.

Mongolia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what development assistance is given to Mongolia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1992 we established a bilateral aid programme for Mongolia and pledged £2.7 million over three years from 1992-93. Of this sum £2 million is allocated for balance of payments assistance in the form of critical imports—industrial lubricants, and £0.7 million for technical co-operation—principally English language teaching and policy consultancy to support the World bank lending programme.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department gives to Mongolia for English language tuition.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the bilateral aid programme an English language project is under discussion with the Government of Mongolia which is planned to focus on (i) intensive business English courses for officials in key economic Ministries and financial institutions and (ii) teacher training in business English. The project is expected to begin in mid-1993.

Under the cultural exchange programme we are funding, with the British Council, the final stage of an English syllabus and teaching materials project for secondary schools. This project, which began in 1990, will produce a first-year textbook, and includes training for Mongolian textbook writers.

Kenya

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British aid to Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to make a significant contribution to Kenya's development. Our aid programme amounted to £29 million in 1991-92. We also provided over £9 million humanitarian assistance in 1992, including our share of EC activities. However, in common with other donors, we have withheld consideration of new balance of payments assistance pending economic and political reforms. There has been progress on the political front. We now await the outcome of a recent review of economic progress by the International Monetary Fund.

Zaire

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of British aid to Zaire for each year since 1989; and if he will list the purposes for which aid was used.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Gross British bilateral aid, for each financial year from 1989, was as follows:

1989-90	513,000
1990-91	432,000
1991-92	397,000

The aid has been mainly for training Zairean teachers of English and help for Oxfam activities.

Forest Preservation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British contributions to the tropical forestry action plan for each year since 1989; and what assessment he has made of its effectiveness in protecting tropical and other forestry resources.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Bilateral aid expenditure under agreed tropical forestry action plans by financial year since 1989 was:

1989-90	1,688,454
1990-91	2,586,218
1991-92	4,767,103

We also contributed £121,493 in 1990-91, and £92,473 in 1991-92, towards the costs of personnel working in the tropical forest action programme co-ordinating unit and in the Food and Agriculture Organisation investment centre on TFAP-related work.

We assess the effectiveness of our contributions to the TFAP through regular monitoring and review of our projects. We believe they are effective in helping recipient countries manage their forests sustainably.

We also assess the progress of the TFAP generally through attendance at international meetings such as the tropical forestry advisers' group. We have worked hard in recent years to improve the TFAP's overall performance.

Uganda

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British aid to Uganda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are maintaining a substantial programme of development assistance for Uganda. In 1991-92 gross British bilateral aid amounted to £26 million.

Angola

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commowealth Affairs what was the level of British aid to Angola for each year since 1989; and if Her Majesty's Government will provide assistance to the Angolan Government in the current year to entrench democracy in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The level of United Kingdom gross bilateral aid to Angola for each financial year since 1989 was as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	0.731
1990-91	1.530
1991-92	1.278

In 1992-93, in addition to our regular programme, we provided landrovers and paid for two election observers at a cost of £273,000, as part of the international effort towards the election process. We also provided accommodation and training for the new unified army at a cost of £3 million from non-ODA votes.

The widespread hostilities which followed the elections has made it difficult to make plans for future aid to the country. We will however consider appropriate assistance when the security situation improves.

EMPLOYMENT

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from her Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has always used contracting out as the most effective way of providing certain services, for example, where there is no suitable in-house provision available. In such cases, there is normally no scope for an in-house bid. Details of such contracts are not kept centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

To date, the Department has not completed a market test without an in-house bid, nor are any anticipated.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) male full-time workers, (b) male part-time workers, (c) female full-time workers, (d) female part-time workers, (e) self-employed males and (f) self-employed females had a second job as (i) an employee or (ii) self-employed in each year since 1980 in each region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information could be provided from the labour force survey only at a disproportionate cost. Some data may be obtained via the quantime link in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) male full-time workers, (b) male part-time workers, (c) female full-time workers, (d) female part-time workers, (e) self-employed males and (f) self-employed females had a second job as (i) an employee or (ii) self-employed in each year since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information from the labour force survey is given in the following table for 1984-1992. Comparable information is not available for earlier years.

Source: Labour Force Survey (not seasonally adjusted) spring each year.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women had a second job working from home in each year since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information from the spring, March to May, 1992 labour force survey shows that there were 139,000 men and 121,000 women, not seasonally adjusted, who were working from home in a second job. No comparable information is available for earlier years.

Employment Protection Regulations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by her Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has advised the Standing Committee considering the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, House of Commons, Official Report, Standing Committee F, 21 January 1993, beginning at column 504, on aspects of the Transfer of Undertakings Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is considering what further guidance might be helpful.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Claimants, Lewisham

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in the London borough of Lewisham were refused benefits because they either carried out more than 24 hours voluntary work each week or studied for more than 21 hours per week in each year since 1987.

Mr. Burt: There is no legislation limiting the amount of hours an unemployed person may spend working in the voluntary sector. An unemployed person who undertakes unpaid voluntary work in this country may continue to receive benefit provided they satisfy the conditions of entitlement. These are that a person must be available for, and actively seeking, work.

An unemployed person who studies part-time for up to 21 hours a week may be treated as available for work in order to receive income support. An unemployed person who undertakes part-time study for more than 21 hours a week may also continue to receive benefit if they can demonstrate that they are available for work and so satisfy the availability condition. All unemployed people who study part time must continue to actively seek work.

Lodgers

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the speed with which housing benefit is paid to lodgers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Full statutory responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with local authorities. Regulations prescribe that all claims should be processed within 14 days of receipt of the necessary information, or as soon as possible thereafter. Many authorities achieve this target in full. Nationally, in 1991-92, 70 per cent. of claims from private tenants were processed within 14 days. Where, through no fault of the applicant, a claim cannot be settled within 14 days, interim payments should be made. Guidance issued to local authorities by the Department reflects these provisions.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give his best estimate of the amount of housing benefit paid to lodgers which is not then paid to their landlords;

(2) what review he is undertaking of the arrangement whereby a lodger who has given authority for his housing benefit to be paid to his landlord may revoke that authority without the landlord being informed.

Mr. Burt: The Department does not collect information about the levels of debts owed to landlords. Representations received from landlords and their organisations indicate that the number of housing benefit recipients who persistently default on rent payments is relatively small.

Regulations already give local authorities wide-ranging powers to pay housing benefit direct to landlords where they consider that tenants may otherwise default. Benefit must normally be paid direct automatically without any requirement to seek the tenant's consent where there are arrears equal to eight times the weekly rent or more and may be paid direct earlier where an authority considers it would be in the tenant's best interests to do so.

Where a person who has requested direct payment subsequently withdraws his consent, the local authority should consider the individual circumstances of the case. The authority may continue to make direct payments if it considers it is in the tenant's interests, for example to prevent rent arrears accruing. If it is decided to stop direct payments the local authority is required to notify the landlord of the date from which payments will cease. We have no current plans to conduct a review of these arrangements.

Winter

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce additional aid in winter for all households in receipt of means-tested benefits.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to change the current regulations.

Availability for Work

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's practice on the number of hours per day and the number of days in any one week that a person needs to be available for work in order to claim benefit.

Mr. Burt: Decisions on whether a person is available for work are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Generally, in order to be entitled to income support, which is a weekly benefit, a person should be available for at least 24 hours per week.

Unemployment benefit is a daily benefit and, therefore, a person should be available for work on each day claimed.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Burt: No. Fridays are treated no differently from any other working day. Full-time administrative staff in the Department work 37 hours a week outside London, 36 hours a week in London, in keeping with civil service-wide rules. Working patterns can vary, but consideration is always given to customers' views on the level of service provided.

Unregistered Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 46, in what circumstances he would deem it appropriate for registration authorities to be advised of the fact that income support and residential allowance were being paid towards the costs of care in an unregistered home.

Mr. Burt: There are no circumstances in which registration officers would require such information.

Youth Training

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to review the mandatory link between income support benefit eligibility and willingness to take a youth training place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Subject to the normal rules, income support is payable to those who are not required to be available for work. We also provide the safety net of income support for those seeking work or training who are at risk of hardship. We have no plans to change this policy although we continue to monitor closely the delivery of benefit.

Social Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the administrative costs of the social fund in cash terms for 1992-93 and as a proportion of the social fund budget.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not yet available. The latest estimated administrative costs of the social fund as a percentage of social fund expenditure are for 1991-92. Details are provided in the Social Security departmental report: the Government's expenditure plans 1993-94 to 1995-96, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's target response time for the Benefits Agency to respond to requests for medical evidence to unsuccessful applicants for disability living allowance; what data he has on actual average response times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Part-time Study

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants are currently studying on part-time courses under the 21-hour rule.

Mr. Burt: This information is not available. The 21-hour rule enables unemployed claimants in receipt of income support to follow part-time education courses while continuing their search for work. The Department's annual statistical enquiry contains no record of the numbers who take advantage of this rule.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly payment of invalidity benefit at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: On 30 March 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the average weekly payment of invalidity benefit was £67.40.

Note: Information from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

Housing Benefit (Students)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider reintroducing eligibility to housing benefit for students who have to pay for accommodation over the long summer vacation, particularly for mature students who may own their own homes.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so. In general it is the educational maintenance system which is designed to provide support for full-time students; mature students are likely to be entitled to additional allowances such as the older students allowance and dependency allowances. Housing benefit, which helps with rent, is available to vulnerable group students throughout their course, including the summer vacations. Income support which can provide help with mortgage interest payments, is available to lone parents and disabled students throughout their course and to student couples with dependent children during the summer vaction. In addition non-student partners can claim income support and housing benefit on behalf of the couple if they satisfy the normal qualifying conditions.

Portuguese Scheme

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to deal with an application for sickness benefit by residents in the United Kingdom who have paid contributions into the Portuguese scheme; what difficulties have been encountered in receiving information from the Portuguese authorities on request for confirmation of payments into these schemes; and how long the Portuguese authorities take to reply to such requests.

Mr. Scott: The administration of sickness benefit, including liaison with a country overseas in which a person has paid contributions, is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 5 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what is the average time taken to deal with an application for sickness benefit by residents in the United Kingdom who have paid contributions into the Portuguese scheme; what difficulties have been encountered in receiving information from the Portuguese authorities on request for confirmation of payments into these schemes; and how long the Portuguese authorities take to reply to such requests.

I should first of all explain that the European Community regulations on social security enable contributions paid in two or more Member States to be added together to assist in the satisfaction of the contribution conditions for Sickness Benefit. Generally, however, only one country actually pays the benefit and this is the country in which the person was lastly insured.

Where a person is residing in the UK, any claim to Sickness Benefit will normally be made to the District Office of the Benefits Agency in the area in which that person is living. If the contribution conditions are not satisfied on the UK National Insurance record alone, but the claimant has recently returned from abroad, the Agency's Overseas Branch will become involved.

The customer will be asked to provide details of employment and contributions abroad, and Overseas Branch will liaise, as necessary, with the foreign authority concerned. The actual procedures vary according to whether the person, before falling sick, had contributed to the UK scheme since their return to this country or whether they had been lastly insured abroad.

Where the person was most recently insured in the UK, Overseas Branch will ask the foreign authority to provide a record of contributions to their scheme to see whether they can assist towards satisfaction of the UK contribution conditions for Sickness Benefit. In such cases it is impossible to say precisely how long it will take for any individual foreign authority to respond. This varies considerably from country to country and even from office to office within a particular country. It should be borne in mind that legal requirements and administrative practices often differ from our own. For example, records may not be held centrally, particularly if a person has been subject to legislation which provides for affiliation to an occupational scheme. In such instances retrieval of remote contribution records can take longer than centrally held information.

Conversely, where a person was most recently insured in another European Community country, Overseas Branch does not need to obtain the foreign contribution record. They are responsible for obtaining all relevant information about the period abroad from the customer, all claim documents from the District Office and information about contributions paid to the UK scheme. The claim is then transferred to the other Member State concerned. It is for them to decide entitlement to Sickness Benefit under their scheme, taking into account any UK contributions as necessary. The foreign authority will notify the customer of their decision, and consider redress if the person is dissatisfied.

With regard to the Portuguese authorities, we have not experienced any particular problems in our dealings with them. In keeping with many other foreign authorities response times for requests for their contribution records vary considerably from case to case. Because of such variations, it would be unrealistic, and indeed unfair, to attempt to give an average figure. Similarly, I am unable to comment on the time it takes for them to process a claim for which they are responsible for determining.

I am sorry that I am unable to be more precise in my reply. However, every effort is made to clear cases involving foreign authorities as quickly as possible, and procedures are kept under constant review and improvements introduced wherever possible.

Local Office, Northfield

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 694, what is the policy of the Northfield benefits agency office on paying benefit temporarily by girocheques on a weekly basis pending the replacement of a lost benefit book; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr Lynne Jones, dated 5 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his Answer 10 February, Official Report, column 694, asking what is the policy of the Northfield Benefits Agency office on paying benefit temporarily by girocheque on a weekly basis pending the replacement of a lost benefit book; and if he will make a statement.

As stated in my letter of 9 February, when a customer reports that an order book has been lost, he is asked about the circumstances surrounding the loss. The interview to obtain this information is carried out by trained officers, experienced in dealing with this type of situation. The officer must be satisfied that reasonable efforts have been taken to recover the order book.

The decision to replace or refuse replacement is made by an officer acting on behalf of the Secretary of State. If that officer has reason to doubt the validity of the reported loss, a replacement may not be made pending further investigation.

In the case of Northfield Benefits Agency office, there have been 474 reported lost Income Support order books in the period 2 March 1992 to 24 February 1993, of which 393 have been replaced. Of these 393, a proportion will have received payment by weekly girocheque pending the outcome of investigations.

I hope you find this reply helpful. Copies of this letter will be placed in the library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Surplus Food

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the amount of EC surplus foods distributed in the Greater London area in each of the last five years.

Mr Curry: The following amounts of butter and beef have been distributed in the Greater London area under the EC surplus food scheme.

Year	Butter (tonnes)	Beef (tonnes)
1988-89	93	96
1989-90	131	154·5
1990-91	235	162
1991-92	483	118
1992-93	228	130

Hillsdown Holdings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what services have been provided to Ministers or their officials by Hillsdown Holdings or any of its related companies in the last five years.

Mr. Curry: The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is the sponsoring Department for the food and drink industry. It is therefore necessary for Ministers and officials to have contacts with a very wide range of companies in that sector, including Hillsdown Holdings.

Poultry Inspections

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received as to the independence from poultry-producing companies of on-line inspectors of poultry meat; (2) what proposals he has for the meat inspection service as it relates to poultry products; (3) which poultry producers are represented on the working committee charged with responsibility for developing new arrangements for the inspection of poultry meat; (4) what further consideration is being given by his Department to on-line inspection by employees of poultry producers under a spotter system; (5) on what occasions in the last year he has discussed with the chairman of Hillsdown Holdings the question of poultry meat inspection manning levels; and where the meetings took place; (6) what discussions he has had with representatives of the poultry trade as to a modified regime for the inspection of poultry on poultry plants; (7) what representations he has received from poultry producers in favour of changes in the arrangements for the inspection of poultry; and if he will list the companies involved; (8) what proposals he has as to responsibility for training on-line inspectors of poultry products.

Mr Soames: The Government are currently preparing to implement EC Council directive 92/116/EEC amending and updating directive 71/118/EEC on poultry meat hygiene. This directive was agreed in December 1992 and is due for implementation in member states by 1 January 1994.

The new directive takes into account developments in this area over the last 20 years, including a series of studies carried out on behalf of the European Commission in the 1980s, into alternative methods of poultry meat inspection. These studies demonstrated that information on the health status of the flock from which birds were taken can aid inspection at the slaughterhouse and that company employees could carry out inspection with the same effectiveness as official inspectors, given adequate training. Under the new directive, member states are authorised to permit individual companies to utilise their own staff to carry out on-line inspection at the slaughterhouse, under supervision and control by the official veterinary surgeon with responsibility for the slaughterhouse.

The new directive also makes extensive provisions for poultry meat inspectors to assist the official veterinary surgeon in the day-to-day supervision of poultry processing, and it is likely that these staff will increasingly take on a supervisory role.

The Government support the principle that companies may be eligible to carry out poultry meat inspection under the supervision of enforcement bodies. This is consistent with the principle embodied in the Food Safety Act 1990 that the food industry has the main responsibility for ensuring the protection of its customers. The directive lays down detailed requirements for the monitoring and supervision of the inspection function, and requires that detailed guidance on training shall be laid down by the Commission.

The Government have invited representative organisations, including the British Poultry Meat Federation, British Retail Consortium, and meat inspector, training, veterinary and local authority interests to join a working group set up to discuss the detailed requirements, including training, which will apply under the new system. The poultry industry representation on this group has yet to be agreed.

Since the Department first consulted interested parties on the Commission's proposals in 1990. it has received eight representations on the independence from poultry producing companies of the poultry inspection system, from a range of individuals and organisations. Representations from poultry companies on the Commission's proposals were received through trade associations including the British Poultry Meat Federation. In addition the Scottish Office and Northern Ireland Office have received separate representations from individual companies. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food discussed the EC poultry meat market, with industry representatives, including, Hillsdown Holdings, Northern Foods, Bernard Matthews, Cherry Valley and Favour Parker Ltd. on a number of occasions in 1992. He has also visited Sun Valley and Lloyd Maunder for discussions.

The Department will issue for public consultation in due course its detailed proposals on guidance and legislation to implement the new Directive. Guidance was issued to local authorities on 3 November on the use of trained plant staff to assist in poultry meat inspection, as a measure to ease the transition to the new arrangements.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Curry: It is the responsibility of local managers to set hours of work for their staff which take account, among other things, of the needs of the public they serve.

Livestock Identification Scheme

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will include the livestock identification scheme in the Government's deregulation initiative.

Mr. Soames: All the Department's activities are conditioned by the need to minimise the regulatory burden on those affected. In the case of animal identification this is of course subject to the need for measures to protect public and animal health and to safeguard taxpayers' money.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the livestock identification scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Representatives of the livestock industry and enforcement bodies are being fully consulted on the implementation of new Community rules on animal identification and registration. Helpful and constructive contributions have been received from the farming unions, breeding organisations, auctioneers, local authorities and others.

Grants and Subsidies

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums were paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme available to farmers in 1992; how many agreements were entered into for each grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Curry: A restructured regional organisation for the Ministry came into effect on 1 April 1992, when the existing five regional offices and 19 divisional offices were replaced by nine regional service centres. Information in the form required for 1992 cannot therefore be provided.

However, the number of plans approved under the farm and conservation grant scheme in England is shown in the table.

Some data on agreements under other schemes and sums paid out in England should become available shortly. I will pass on this information shortly. Aggregate summaries of grants and subsidy expenditure are included in the Ministry's February 1993 departmental report (Cm 2203), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the budget for 1993-94 and the estimate for 1994-95, the number of acres covered and the number of farms that could be included in (a) the Somerset Levels environmentally sensitive area and (b) the Broads environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Curry: The budget for the ESA scheme is £30·2 million in 1993-94 rising to £42·6 million in 1994-95. The scheme is managed as a whole and we do not allocate individual budgets to ESAs. The total area of the Somerset levels and moors ESA is 27,717 hectares, 68,488 acres, and the total area of the Broads ESA is 35,820 hectares, 88,510 acres. It is not possible to determine accurately the number of farmers in each area because the ESA boundaries do not coincide with parish boundaries in respect of which such data might be obtained from the agricultural census.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those environmentally sensitive areas where payments are being made to manage water levels; and if he will list the total payments made under such schemes to date.

Mr. Curry: A requirement to manage water levels is included in all ESAs where field wetness is critical to the ecological interest of river valley grassland. In the Somerset levels and moors, Broads, North Kent marshes, Suffolk river valley and Avon valley ESAs there is a specific payment to encourage farmers to raise water levels in order to enhance the habitat for birds. This is the first year in which such conditions are being met in the Somerset levels and moors and Broads ESAs. It involves maintaining the water table at field level to create surface pools between 1 January and 30 April. Full payment will not be made until we are satisfied that the conditions can be maintained on the affected land.

Agriculture Support

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount spent in each of the last 10 years in direct support to British agriculture in cash and real terms; what is his estimate of future costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The table provides figures on public expenditure under the CAP and on national grants and subsidies for the last 10 years, expressed as actual expenditure and in real terms. Figures for future years on a broadly comparable basis are provided in tables 8 and 23 of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food/ Intervention Board departmental report 1993, which has been lodged in the House of Commons Library. Both this publication and "Agriculture in the UK" provide background details concerning trends in expenditure.

Public expenditure under the CAP and on national grants and subsidies

Floods and Drainage

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responsibilities the proposed new Environmental Protection Agency will have in relation to flood and drainage.

Mr. Curry: It is envisaged that the proposed new Environment Agency will assume the responsibilities for flood defence and land drainage that the National Rivers Authority currently has.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what has been the total amount of expenditure on flood defence and drainage in each of the last three financial years to date; and what estimates there are for such expenditure in the 1993-94 budget;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of flood defence and drainage expenditure in the last financial year on a county basis.

Mr. Curry: MAFF expenditure on grant aid in support of capital works on flood defence, including sea defence, and arterial drainage, excluding coast protection works against erosion, is as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	25·5
1991-92	36·4
[1]1992-93	41·6

[1]Estimated.

On the same basis, provision for 1993-94 is £46·2 million.

A breakdown of expenditure on a county basis is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has as to whether feeding pigs with material containing the infectious agent for BSE can result in a spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body) on 17 February, Official Report, column 223.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 9 March 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Procedure

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration has been given to the setting up of a royal commission to investigate the operation of the courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No consideration has been given to the setting up of a royal commission to investigate the operation of the courts.

The operation of the criminal courts comes within the remit of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice which was established in 1991 to examine the effectiveness of the criminal justice system in England and Wales. The royal commission's report is expected in June.

Legal Aid

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the amount of legal aid paid in each year since 1982, adjusted for inflation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Net expenditure on legal aid in each year since 1982 at 1992-93 cash prices, was as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	374
1983-84	394
1984-85	433
1985-86	479
1986-87	527
1987-88	597
1988-89	609
1989-90	679
1990-91	760
1991-92	945

Latest forecasts indicate net expenditure for the current financial year will amount to £1,122 million.

Child Residence Orders

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many shared residence orders have been granted since the Children Act 1989 was implemented; and how many sole residence orders have been granted to (a) mothers and (b) fathers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Plutonium Nitrate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the scope of the interim measures following the MV Braer incident to include the shipment of plutonium nitrate in United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. Norris: The extension of these measures to this transport is not necessary. Plutonium nitrate solution is transported in packages designed to withstand the effects of severe maritime accidents.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he makes of the risk to the environment from the result of a shipping/transport accident involving plutonium and breach of container;

(2) what measures have been taken to protect the environment in the event of a transport accident involving plutonium;

(3) what assessments have been made of the arrangements for preventing a casualty such as the Braer, or mitigating the effects of such a casualty, with a ship carrying plutonium nitrate.

Mr. Norris: A safety assessment of the combined road and sea transport operation for plutonium nitrate was carried out in 1978 by the nuclear installations inspectorate. The report of this assessment was placed in the House of Commons Library on 5 March 1980. It concluded that the probability of an accident severe enough to breach the container was no more than one in a million per year and the chances of an individual death from such a cause was no more than one in 100 million per year. A further assessment in 1984 confirmed these findings.

With oil tankers, the protection of the cargo lies in the ship, whereas with movements of radioactive material the protection lies in the strength of the packages which have been subject to extensive tests.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what surveys have been conducted as to the readiness of coastal protection services to cope with a shipping accident involving plutonium.

Mr. Norris: National, local and industrial contingency plans exist to deal with accidents involving the transportation of radioactive materials at sea. These plans are reviewed and exercised.

Crew Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list what type of training is available for ship owners who apply to the European Community crew training scheme; if it conforms to the International Maritime Organisation's criteria; how much funding is currently available; how ship owners can apply for these funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The European Commissioner for Transport has put forward proposals for improving maritime safety and these include minimum standards of training for crews employed in ships registered within the Community and a suggestion that Community funds might be used to assist nautical training institutions and EC shipowners who provide on-board training but these are still in a tentative form. These will be discussed in future meetings of the Council of Ministers.

Speed Cameras

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the effect of the west London experiment with speed cameras in terms of savings in casualties and casualty costs.

Mr. Norris: Use of the cameras began on 15 October 1992; initial monitoring by the Transport Research Laboratory indicates that mean speeds have been reduced by more than 10 per cent. and that casualties also show a very encouraging downward trend. Monitoring will continue and it should be possible to give more information when statistically significant data are available.

Road Improvements, Westminster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 143, if he will list the location, cost and duration of the local road improvement schemes funded by his Department in the City of Westminster since 1979.

Mr. Norris: Between the years 1979 and 1986, road improvement schemes in the city of Westminster were the responsibility of the Greater London council or Westminster city council. The information on schemes during this period is not readily available and can only be provided at disproportionate cost. Since 1986 local roads have been the sole responsibility of Westminster city council. The following amounts of expenditure have been accepted for transport supplementary grant for the relevant financial years:—

	£ million
1986-87	1·016
1987-88	0·766
1988-89	1·070
1989-90	1·800
1990-91	1·384
1991-92	2·742
1992-93	5·852

One major scheme, costing more than £1 million in total, is included in these figures. This is the A404 Harrow Road/Ladbroke Grove widening scheme being carried out jointly by Westminster council and the Royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea. The following amounts of expenditure have been accepted for this scheme in Westminster for the relevant financial years:—

	£ million
1986-87	0·700
1987-88	0·434
1988-89	0·650
1989-90	1·300
1990-91	0·922
1991-92	0·855
1992-93	1·015

The start of this scheme has been delayed. Grant has been paid in anticipation of an earlier start date. The likely duration of the scheme is six years.

Other expenditure accepted for TSG support was for various minor works, under £1 million in total cost. These are paid as a block grant and are not scheme specific. Details of such schemes are not readily available.

Ferries (Sewage)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 67, if he will require all ferries operating out of United Kingdom ports to comply with United Kingdom regulations on the installation and operation of ships' sewage systems.

Mr. Norris: Agreement at the International Maritime Organisation will enable provision to be made for international requirements for sewage systems on passenger vessels. The United Kingdom will introduce the appropriate merchant shipping legislation to give these requirements full effect.

M1-M62 Link Road

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the likely increase in traffic flow between junctions 38 and 39 of the M1 motorway resulting from the construction of an M1/M62 link road; and what estimate has been made of the cost of widening the M1 to four lanes between these junctions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Construction of a new M1/M62 link road would affect traffic flows on the M1 and M62 motorways, the extent depending upon the route chosen. These effects are being taken into account as part of the assessment following public consultation last year.

The route options for this link road could affect traffic on the M1, between junctions 38 and 39, from between an increase of about 8,000 to a decrease of about 31,000 vehicles per day, using a theoretical opening year of 2000. Widening to dual-four lanes for the whole length between these junctions, which traffic would in any case justify if the link road was not built, would cost about £30 million.

Networker Trains (Kent)

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 816, what is the current position with regard to the ordering of the proposed Networker express trains for the long-distance Kent coast service.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I have asked British Rail to tell us by Easter what rolling stock it proposes to lease using the £150 million leasing facility announced at the time of the autumn statement. Stock for Kent coast services is one of the options.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of investment his Department has planned for signalling and telecommunications equipment on the west coast main line railway link from London to Glasgow for the six years from 1994.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to determine its investment priorities within available resources. I understand that it intends to commence work soon on renewing infrastructure on the west coast main line. The precise timing, and cost, will be decided in the spring, when British Rail has completed its next corporate plan.

Channel Tunnel (East Coast Link)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration is being given to the establishment of a direct through route from the east coast main line to the channel tunnel link railway; and if the north London line St. Pancras terminal is being considered as an option.

Mr. Freeman: Direct through services along the east coast main line to Paris and Brussels should begin at the end of 1995. These services are not dependent on the proposed new railway line between the channel tunnel and London, on which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Helicopters, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking over the proposal from Thames Heliport plc for a mobile helicopter pad on the Thames.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 5 March 1993]: The Department has urged the promoters of the scheme to consult as widely and as thoroughly as possible with interested parties. The promoters have said they will inform the Department about the outcome of their consultations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since November 1991, the following new services have been contracted out without market testing an in-house bid:

Establishment	Successful contractor	Reason for excluding in-house bid
Management of The Wolds prison	Group 4 Remand Services Ltd.	Contracting out provided opportunity to gain experience of such contracts, and provided comparator for catering services in establishments managed by Prison Service
Management of Blakenhurst prison	UK Detention Services Ltd.
Catering services at following prison establishments
Downview	Pall Mall Services Ltd.	Contracting out provided opportunity to gain experience in operation of such prisons and contracts, and provided a comparator for establishments managed by Prison Service
Belmarsh	Pall Mall Services Ltd.
Bullingdon	ARA Catering Services Ltd.
Holme House	Sutcliffe Catering Ltd.
Woodhill	ARA Catering Services Ltd.
Highdown	Sutcliffe Catering Services Ltd.
Lancaster Farms	Sutcliffe Catering Services Ltd.
Court Service, East Midlands and Humberside	Group 4 Court Services Ltd.	Aim was to relieve police and prison staff of these duties by providing an unitary integrated service

Police-Population Ratio

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of police to population in England and Wales; and what is the comparable data he has for France, Germany, the Netherlands and Italy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 2 February to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney), at column 128. Comparable information for the European countries mentioned is not available.

Sentencing

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend section 29 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 so that the courts may again take fully into account the whole criminal record of a convicted person when sentencing that person.

Mr. Jack: The sentencing provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 were implemented on 1 October 1992. We are closely monitoring their effects, including the effects of section 29. In due course, we shall consider whether any amendments to the Act are necessary in the light of practical experience of its operation.

Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for rape there were in England in 1992; and how many resulted in sentences of (a) under 12 months, (b) one to five years, (c) over five to 10 years and (d) over 10 years.

Mr. Jack: 1992 data will not be available until autumn 1993. Information for 1991 is given in the table.

Number of males convicted of the offence of rape and sentenced to immediate custody by sentence length 1991
England

Offence description	Convictions	Sentenced to immediate custody	Length of sentence: Under one year	One year and up to but less than five years	Five years	Over five years up to and including 10 years	Over 10 years	Life

Unlawful Killing

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which 10 London boroughs or local authority districts have the highest rates of unlawful killings in England and Wales expressed in terms of killings per 100,000 population.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Sex Offences

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to minimise the chances that those convicted for sexual offences against children will re-offend.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 provides for sex offenders to be given custodial sentences where their conduct shows that such a sentence is necessary to protect the public from serious harm. Sex offenders can also be given longer sentences than is justified by the seriousness of the offence and extended supervision, if this is necessary for the protection of the public. Programmes to tackle the offending behaviour of those convicted of sexual offences against children are run by both the prison and probation services and are being expanded. The Government are also reviewing, and plan to extend, the arrangements for prison establishments to notify local authorities of the release of prisoners who have been convicted of offences against children.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted for sexual offences against children in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992; and what percentage of those convicted had previously committed similar offences.

Mr. Jack To derive information on the number of offenders who had previously committed similar offences would involve disproportionate cost. Information on the number of persons convicted of sexual offences against children in England and Wales for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 is given in the table. Figures for 1992 will not be available until the autumn. It is only possible from the information held centrally to identify sex offenders where the victim is known to be aged under 16 years.

Number of persons convicted of child sex offences 1989-91
England and Wales

Offence	1989	1990	1991
Buggery with a boy under the age of 16 or with a woman or an animal	183	189	168

Person responsible for girl aged under 16 causing or encouraging her prostitution, etc	1	2	2
Abduction of unmarried girl aged under 16 years	13	8	8
Gross indecency with children	219	276	219

Young Offenders

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances corporal punishment will be available in the new juvenile offenders institutions.

Mr. Jack: We do not believe that corporal punishment is an acceptable way of dealing with offenders. It was abolished under the 1948 Criminal Justice Act and the Government have no plans to reintroduce it. Corporal punishment, therefore, has no place in our planning for the new secure training centres.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 625, what plans there are to increase the amounts committed to schemes aimed at diverting young people from crimes, including car crime; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Jack: The main Government programmes in the Greater Manchester area described in the reply I gave to the right hon. Member on 10 February, at column 625, will each receive funding in 1993-94. It is planned to increase total funding for the probation supervision grants scheme —PSGS—from £6·8 million this year to £10·4 million, £12 million and £13 million respectively over the next three financial years, but there are no plans to provide additional resources for the other additional resources for the other programmes. The PSGS helps voluntary organisations in partnership with probation services to provide support to defendants, those on community sentence and those released from prison with the aim of reducing reoffending.

Immigration

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entry clearance applications were received in respect of India and Pakistan for each year since 1986 (a) for second wives where the first wife is resident in the United Kingdom, (b) first wife where the second wife is resident in the United Kingdom, (c) second wives where the first wife is resident in the country of origin, (d) the first wife where the second wife is resident in the country of origin and (e) both wives together.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Sentencing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals to establish a sentencing council to establish a framework for sentencing policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans to establish a sentencing council.

London Prisons

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced prisoners, (b) remand prisoners and (c) fine defaulters were received into each London prison each week in January 1992, March 1992, June 1992, September 1992, January 1993 and March 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the table. Data for September 1992 to March 1993 are not yet available.

Police Stations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those constituencies which do not have a police station within their boundaries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Show Jumping

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements his Department makes to issue licences for show jumping events; if such licences stipulate the height and type of jump or any other obstacles; and what inspection or enforcement his Department carries out of show jumping events;

(2) what arrangements are made for his Department's officials to inspect the condition of show jumping horses or the suitability of the type and height of jumps at major show jumping events; what guidance his Department gives to official bodies representing show jumping on the welfare implications of show jumping courses to horses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. However, I understand that anyone wishing to run an event under the rules of the British Show Jumping Association must apply to the association for authority to do so, and must run the event according to those rules. The welfare of show jumping horses, like that of all domestic and captive animals, is covered by the Protection of Animals Act 1911, under which it is an offence to cause unnecessary suffering to any animal.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racial Hatred

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of incitement to racial hatred have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions each year since the Race Relations Act 1976 came into force; how many of these cases resulted in a prosecution; how many of these prosecutions were successful; and, of the successful prosecutions, how many resulted in a custodial sentence.

The Attorney-General: No records are kept of the numbers of cases referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions categorised by reference to specific criminal offences.

Details of prosecutions for incitement to racial hatred since 1986, each of which may involve more than one defendant, are kept and are as follows:

Year	Prosecutions	Results	Sentence
1986	5	4 convictions	1 × 1 year's imprisonment 1 × 2 months' imprisonment 1 × £400 fine and costs 1 × conditional discharge for 12 months

1987	0
1988	1	1 conviction	£100 fine
1989	1	1 conviction	9 months' imprisonment suspended for 2 years
1990	1	Bound over
1991	4	3 convictions	1 × 8 months' imprisonment (6 suspended and 2 to be served) 1 × bound over in £100 1 × conditional discharge for 2 years
		1 defendant died after committal
1992	1	discontinued
1993	2	1 conviction	6 months' imprisonment
		1 acquittal

SCOTLAND

Student Accommodation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students that have attended each of the separate higher educational institutes in Scotland have stayed in (a) their own home, (b) the parental home, (c) institutional accommodation and (d) private sector accommodation in each year since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: This information is not held centrally.

Dog Registration

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recommendations were made to him on the dog registration scheme by the Scottish working group on dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 March 1993]: The remit of the Scottish working group on dogs did not include dog registration. No recommendations were therefore made.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deal with the increase in juvenile crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 March 1993]: Under the Lord Advocate's direction of 1987 most juvenile offenders up to age 16 are referred to the reporter to the children's panel to consider compulsory measures of care. In 1990 24,700 referrals were made to reporters. Children's panels have available to them the full range of disposals from home supervision and foster care to residential care and secure accommodation to enable them to deal effectively with juvenile offending.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Goodlad: Since November 1991, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has added the collection of premiums for the diplomatic service worldwide all-risks insurance scheme to the contract with Bowring, Marsh, McLennan, the company which operates the scheme. There was no in-house bid. Renegotiation of the contract led to a saving of £10,000 and one post.

The Overseas Development Administration has not contracted out any function without organising an in-house bid since November 1991.

Bosnia

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our EC partners believe that the Bosnian peace process, under the auspices of the international conference for the former Yugoslavia, represents the best chance for a settlement and an end to prolonged conflict and suffering. Negotiations are at a crucial stage. We are also devoting considerable resources to the provision of humanitarian relief to those caught up in the war.

Mr. J. G. Glass

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the sworn affidavit made on 24 May 1990 by Her Majesty's consul in Baghdad relating to the death of Mr. J. G. Glass was sent to the coroner's court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Baghdad sent the then consul's sworn affidavit to the appropriate coroner's office who passed it to the head coroner before the inquest on 28 August 1990.

So far as we are aware, the Iraqi authorities have charged no one with any crime in connection with the death of Mr. Glass.

Prerogative Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1987 the Government have bound the United Kingdom under international law by virtue of Ministers' prerogative powers; and on which of these occasions prior approval was sought from Parliament.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Ministers do not have prerogative powers. All treaties entered into by the United Kingdom are concluded by Her Majesty's Government exercising the royal prerogative on behalf of the Crown. Ratification of treaties only exceptionally requires prior parliamentary approval, but all treaties which are subject to ratification are brought to Parliament's attention by being laid before both Houses for a minimum of 21 days. If primary or secondary legislation is required in order to ensure compliance with obligations arising under a treaty, the Government will not ratify a treaty until such legislation has been implemented. The information sought regarding which treaties required prior approval or legislation is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Zaire

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government made to the Government of Zaire concerning human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are gravely concerned about the widespread abuses of human rights in Zaire, caused notably by the lack of control of the security forces. We intend to support a resolution at the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights deploring the continued serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Zaire.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tools for Self Reliance

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Tools for Self Reliance campaign; and what action he is taking to assist the replenishment and supply of tools to developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a number of representations as a result of the Tools for Self Reliance campaign. The supply of appropriate technology, including hand tools, forms part of many of our aid projects, both those we support directly and those managed by non-governmental organisations. These include rural development projects, promotion of small enterprises and agricultural rehabilitation following natural or manmade disasters.

South Africa

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about their continued detention of black South African political prisoners in contravention of the Pretoria minute, signed in 1990, and the Further Idemnity Bill, gazetted in 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made it clear to the South African Government, and to all other concerned parties that the question of political prisoners and any other remaining disagreements should be resolved as soon as possible and should not be allowed to adversely affect progress on constitutional negotiations.

HEALTH

Oral Contraceptives

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answers of 5 February, to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo), Official Report, columns 376-77, and 11 February, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), Official Report, columns 757-59, which brands of oral contraceptives are currently available on prescription; and if she will list (a) the hormone dosages and (b) the cost of a month's supply for Eugynon 50, Minilyn, Minovlar, Minovlar ED, Norimin and Ovulen 50.

Dr. Mawhinney: The brands of oral contraceptives available on prescription are as follows:

Combined Oral Contraceptives
- Binovum
- Brevinor
- Cilest
- Conova 30
- Eugynon 30
- Femodene
- Femodene ED
- Loestrin 20
- Loestrin 30
- Logynon
- Logynon ED
- Marvelon
- Mercilon
- Microgynon 30
- Minulet
- Neocon 1·35
- Norimin
- Norinyl-1
- Ortho-Novin 1/50
- Ovran
- Ovran 30
- Ovranette
- Ovysmen
- Synphase
- Tiadene
- Tri-minulet
- Triordiol
- Trinovum
- Trinovum ED

Emergency Contraception
- Schering PC4

Progesterone-only Contraceptives
- Femulen
- Micronor
- Microval
- Neogest
- Norgeston
- Noriday

Eugynon 50, Minilyn, Minovlar, Minovlar ED and Ovulen 50 have been discontinued. The hormone dosages and price of Norimin are as follows:

Active constituents	Price (one month's supply)
Norethisterone 1mg. Ethinyloestadiol 35 micrograms	65p

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out into the side effects of cheaper varieties of the oral contraceptive pill; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Before any medicinal product may be marketed in the United Kingdom it is subject to stringent testing for safety, quality, and efficacy to enable a product licence to be granted by the licensing authority. Thereafter the safety of all licensed medicinal products is carefully monitored. Neither the licensing authority nor its advisory committee, the Committee on Safety of Medicines has the remit to take into consideration the cost of a medicine.

General Practitioners

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has establishing the cost-effectiveness of those general practitioner services for which practitioners receive an item of service payment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Within the general practitioner remuneration system, item of service fees are paid in a wide variety of circumstances, some to promote specific health policies—for example, for certain immunisations—and others to reflect variations in workload—for example, for providing treatment in the case of an accident involving a patient not on the practice list. There is no single way of measuring cost effectiveness in all such cases.

NHS Employees (Freedom of Speech)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the final guidelines on freedom of speech for NHS employees will be published.

Dr. Mawhinney: We expect the final guidance to be issued shortly.

Elderly People, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate for the number of adults aged over 65, over 75 and over 85 years in the city of Newcastle upon Tyne (a) in 1982 and (b) in each year since 1986.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. The figures for 1991 are not fully comparable with those for earlier years. The provisional 1991 estimates have been based upon early 1991 census results, and are considerably more reliable than the current estimates for earlier years. The final estimates for 1991 will be issued in June 1993, after which the estimates for 1982-1990 will be revised to provide a consistent time series using data for both the 1981 and the 1991 censuses.

Consultants

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients saw a consultant (a) on their first visit and (b) generally in out-patients in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Medical Practices Committee

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost of the Medical Practices Committee for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table.

Year	Budget (£)
1988-89	294,000
1989-90	—
1990-91	340,000
1991-92	408,000
1992-93	358,000

Note: The budget for 1989-90 cannot be identified separately.

Specialist Training

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Chief Medical Officer's working group to re-evaluate the United Kingdom approach to specialist training will report.

Dr. Mawhinney: The working group was established to review arrangements for specialist training in the United Kingdom, in the light of the EC medical directives. The group's work is now nearing completion and its report will be published shortly.

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give (a) the number of in-patients treated, (b) the number of out-patients treated, (c) the number of day cases treated and (d) the number of emergency cases treated by health authority and trust in England and Wales in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information for health authorities on in-patients and day cases for 1989-90 and 1990-91 is published in "Ordinary Admissions, Day Cases Admissions and Regular Day and Night Admissions, England, Financial Year 1990-91". Information about out-patients and accident and emergency attenders is included in "Out-Patients and Ward Attenders, England, Financial Year 1989-90", "Out-Patients and Ward Attenders, England and Regions, Financial Year 1990-91" and "Out-Patients and Ward Attenders, Districts, Financial Year 1990-91". These documents are available in the Library. Information for 1991-92 will be published shortly in these series of publications and copies will be placed in the Library. The 1991-92 editions will include information for the first wave of national health service trusts, established on 1 April 1991.

Fire Safety

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which national health service premises in England at 31 December 1992 failed to hold a valid fire certificate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. Health authorities and national health service trusts are required to apply to their local fire authority for fire certificates for those premises which require them under fire precautions legislation, and to agree with the fire authority a programme for rectifying any deficiencies.

Service Arrangements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the basis of the service arrangements between provider and purchaser authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive has recently issued two pieces of guidance on contracting to purchasers and providers—EL(92)79,

"Review of contracting-guidance for the 1993-94 contracting cycle" and EL(93)10—"Managing activity and change through contracting." Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether purchaser health authorities can limit the hospitals to which general practitioners can send patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Extra Referrals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a list of health authorities in England which on 31 January had placed limitations on extra-contractual referrals.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. However, it has always been recognised that purchasers may need to manage the timing of the commitment of funds for some extra-contractual referrals, in the same way as they do for contracted services.

NHS Chairmen and Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the chairmen of each national health service trust and health authority in England, showing their professional qualifications and employment.

Dr. Mawhinney: For details on chairmen of national health service trusts, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 February 1993, to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), at column 153.

A list of all chairmen of health authorities in England is shown in the table.

Information on the professional qualifications and employment of NHS trust and health authority chairmen is not held centrally.

Political Donations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to require all national health service tenderers to declare political contributions and health authorities to record such declarations in their minutes.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Rehabilitation Facilities

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to extend day and residential rehabilitation facilities staffed by skilled personnel including physiotherapists and occupational therapists for the care of elderly patients discharged into the community.

Mr. Yeo: A wide range of rehabilitation facilities exists within the national health service and local social services authorities. Decisions about rehabilitation services are for the professional judgment of those concerned with the individual case.

European Population Conference

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will make up the United Kingdom's delegation to the European population conference to be held in Geneva in March.

Mr. Sackville: The delegation will be led by the director of statistics from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, and also have officials from the Home Office and Overseas Development Administration, and an academic expert who is a member of the British Society for Population Studies.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the country statement for the United Kingdom for the European population conference will be made available for hon. Members before the conference.

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the United Kingdom country statement are now available in the Library.

Stillbirth

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the impact of the new definition of stillbirth will be on statistics of perinatal mortality.

Mr. Sackville: The Government were pleased to be able to support Rosie Barnes's private Member's Bill which resulted in the extension of the definition of stillbirth to include losses at 24 to 27 weeks' gestation. The loss of a baby in these circumstances is a tragedy for the family involved and it is clearly right that there should be proper and formal recognition. Extending the definition from 28 weeks to 24 weeks has made that possible.

In terms of published statistics on stillbirth it is estimated that the inclusion of these losses will mean, at present rates, approximately 800 more registered stillbirths in England and Wales annually.

It is important not only that the effect of the new definition should be reflected in the routine statistics but that trends can continue to be the subject of monitoring and analysis in spite of the change. For this reason, future Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publications over the next few years will contain data on trends with and without stillbirths in the 24 to 27-week period as from 1 October 1992, the operative date of the new definition.

That latest published figure for the rate of perinatal mortality—stillbirths and deaths in the first week of life—in England and Wales in 1991 was eight per 1,000 live and stillbirths. This is the lowest ever recorded. Published data will continue to include both single-year figures on the old and new basis and averages over the most recent three-year period for which we have comparative data. Single-year figures, especially for regional and other sub-national analyses, can be volatile now that the rates are so low. Therefore, the combined three-year average provides a more reliable indication of underlying trends at these levels as well as nationally.

The national health service continues to give a high priority to the further reduction of stillbirths, including full participation in the nationwide confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy.

NHS Trusts (Fund-raising)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent of the use of private fund-raising companies by NHS trusts; what guidelines he has issued on good practice and on the allocation of money so raised; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No assessment has been made and no guidelines have been issued. These matters are well within the competence of individual trust boards.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a table showing the number of hospital beds available by specialty in each region in each year since 1979-80 and currently.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 25 February at column 676.

School Medical Services

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those local health authorities which have ceased to carry out annual dental check-ups on school children.

Dr. Mawhinney: The current guidance to local health authorities suggests that they should arrange for the screening of teeth of children in state-funded schools at least three times in each child's school life. The Department has no information which suggests that health authorities are not doing so.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many school nurses were employed in the state education sector in 1992, 1985 and 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The latest information available, which reflects the 20 per cent. increase in general practitioners since 1979 and their increased involvement in child health care, is shown in the table.

NHS school nurses[1] in post at 30 September each year, England

	Whole-time equivalents[2]
[3]1979	3,810
1985	3,110
1991	3,050

[1] Figures include school health visitors. Statistics on the number of nurses in particular areas of work are prone to errors in employing authorities' coding procedures. The above figures should therefore be treated with caution.
[2] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.
[3] Figures for 1979 have been adjusted for the reduction in nurses working hours during 1980-81 (from 40 to 37·5 hours per week).

Children in Hospital

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to centralise information on child patients in hospitals as a step towards ensuring that no child will be treated on an adult ward.

Mr. Sackville: In the guide, "Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital"—HMSO 1991—we cited the evidence to show that children are best treated in children's departments and recommended that health authorities and other purchasers should specify this requirement in their contracts for hospital services for children. We expect district health authorities to monitor compliance with their contracts and, in connection with implementation of the recent Audit Commission report "Children First: A Study of Hospital Services", both regional health authorities and the Department will also undertake selective monitoring. We consider that implementation of our policy can be achieved by these means without the introduction of routine arrangements for the central collection of records on where children are accommodated in hospital. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Salford and Manchester Authorities

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations have been received in favour of the proposed consortia of Salford and Manchester health authorities; and how many against the proposal.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the three months since the proposed consortium was announced, seven letters have been received, all of which were opposed to plans to form a consortium.

Children's Care

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what special guidelines are issued to local authorities which have care and responsibility for children with physical or mental disabilities in order to ensure protection from abuse and early detection of abuse.

Mr. Yeo: There are no special child protection guidelines of this kind. "Working Together under the Children Act 1989", the Government's guidance on inter-agency co-operation in the protection of children from abuse, applies to all children including children with physical or mental disabilities. "Working Together" emphasises that children with disabilities have the same rights as other children, and that every effort should be made to provide appropriate assistance during an investigative interview so that they can express themselves fully and understand what is happening and what decisions have to be made.

NHS Transport, Leeds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs of the transport contract to carry national health service staff from Leeds station to the NHS executive offices at Quarry Hill, Leeds.

Mr. Sackville: Nil. The cost of the transport contract to carry Department of Health staff is £636 per week.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Valuation Office agency carried out a valuation of all property assets in all trusts prior to NHS trust status being granted.

Mr. Sackville: The Valuation Office agency carried out a valuation of all property assets—land and buildings—transferred to trusts in the first and second waves, as at 1 April 1991 and 1 April 1992 respectively. Similar arrangements are in place for the third wave trusts to be established as at 1 April 1993.

Prior to trust status being granted, the results from the periodic capital valuations of all property within the national health service estate would have been available locally to the trusts and health authorities concerned. The periodic valuations were carried out, as at 31 December 1989 and 1 April 1992, by the Valuation Office agency, which also provided indices to update the valuations in the intervening years.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 303, if, in valuing the assets of a hospital, other than land and buildings, before acquiring NHS trust status, her Department required a common method for each hospital for determining the value of the assets; and what arrangements were made for an external audit to take place before the assets were vested in the NHS trust.

Mr. Sackville: The Department issues instructions which establish how all categories of assets that transfer to a trust should be valued. These instructions are based on existing departmental guidance and standard accounting practice. The valuation of all assets transferring is subjected to external audit.

NHS Management

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to monitor the performance of national health service administrators/management; and what use is being made of outside management consultants to set performance indicators for this group.

Dr. Mawhinney: Performance measures for individual managers of any discipline can only be set by the national health service trust board or authority through the normal management process. A national individual performance review scheme has existed since 1986 for general and senior managers throughout the NHS. Arrangements for performance review of other staff is a matter for individual employing authorities. Under the health service reforms, NHS trusts have the freedom to develop their own performance review systems and a number have done so using design advice from external management consultants.

Children's Hospices

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to allowing children's hospices to become eligible for hospice funding in the coming financial year; and whether she will seek to include children's hospices in the list of eligible organisations in future guidance on hospice funding to be issued to regional health authorities.

Mr. Yeo: The central funds allocated for voluntary hospices to health authorities will be delegated from 1994-95 in order that they may contract for services for both adults and children with life-threatening illness. Meanwhile the recently issued guidance—executive letter EL(93)14—copies of which are available in the Library, on central funding in 1993-94 does not include any age restriction on the use to which the funds may be put.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each month from January to June 1992 (a) the number of actual emergency calls responded to by the London ambulance service and (b) the number and percentage responded to within (i) 14, (ii) 20, (iii) 25, (iv) 30, (v) 40, and (vi) 50 or more minutes together with respective totals; and if she will publish consolidated totals in respect of the national Orcon standards for each month.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table.

Percentage of calls responded to within 25 minutes	95	92	92	95	94	90

(Information supplied by the LAS)

A breakdown of call response times above 25 minutes could be obtained only at disproportionate cost to the London ambulance service.

Elderly People (Care)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what legislation exists to regulate independent companies which are providing continuing care for the elderly; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Statutory control of homes providing long-term care for anyone who needs it is provided under the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984 and its associated regulations.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November 1992, to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), Official Report, column 809, if the extra funding to local authorities as part of the arrangements for replacing the independent living fund will be ring-fenced for purposes currently covered by the independent living fund.

Mr. Yeo: No. The extra funding is included in the special transitional grant which is itself ring-fenced solely for use on community care.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November 1992 to the hon. Member from Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), Official Report, column 809, if the extra funding to local authorities as part of the arrangements to replace the independent living fund will be used for cash grants for those in need of help to remain in their own homes.

Mr. Yeo: No. Local authorities have no powers to make cash payments.

Organ Donors

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the objectives are of her organ donor campaign; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There are many patients whose lives could be saved or enhanced by an organ transplant. The Government aim to encourage more people to consider organ donation. We have, therefore, commissioned a television campaign to provoke discussion on donation in the hope that more people will carry the donor card, and more importantly, let their families know of their wishes.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 11 May 1992, Official Report, column 31, what is her estimate for what proportion of prescriptions, for which a prescription charge is paid, the cost of the item to the NHS will be less than the prescription charge under the prescription charge levels for 1993-94 announced on 16 March.

Dr. Mawhinney: The flat-rate prescription charge is an amount which successive Governments have thought it reasonable for those who can afford to do so to contribute towards the cost of national health service pharmaceutical services. It is not, and never has been, directly related either to the particular item prescribed or to the actual cost to the NHS of dispensing it. About 80 per cent. of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors are free of charge. For 1993-94 it is estimated that some 35 per cent. of chargeable items will cost the NHS less than the new charge of £4·25 announced on Tuesday 2 March.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish an explanation of note (1) to section A of his departmental press notice P/93/51 of 4 February on plutonium production and stockpile figures, on why exact figures for the plutonium content of fuel discharged and dispatched cannot be given.

Mr. Eggar: It is not practicable to make direct measurements of the plutonium content of fuel rods at the power station. Accordingly, the figures in question are estimates, calculated using reactor physics computer codes, based on the characteristics of the fresh fuel and the output of the reactor since the fuel was loaded. The error margin specified reflects the accuracy of this estimating process.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to propose legislation under which shareholders would be able to seek compensation from the recognised supervisory bodies for recommending passive auditing standards.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to examine the sale of the agenda papers by the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The powers that might be available would depend upon the nature of the complaint.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice and measures he has taken to ensure that the terms of the proposed fuel cycle contract between Nuclear Electric and British Nuclear Fuels plc will not operate against the public interest.

Mr. Eggar: Both BNFL and Nuclear Electric are wholly owned by the Government. Nonetheless, it is the Government's policy that each company should act in a commercial manner, since this best serves the taxpayer's interest as shareholder. This need to act commercially will be reflected in the terms of any contract negotiated between the two companies.

Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to Arthur Andersen and Kleinwort Benson with the total cost of the contracts for each contractor for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

	Consultancy Contracts awarded
Arthur Andersen
Period
3 March 1992 to 4 March 1993	None
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	None
Kleinwort Benson
Period
3 March 1992 to 4 March 1993	[1]1
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	None

[1](Post Office: Financial Advisers).

The value of the single contract awarded is commercially confidential.

The figures do not include contracts issued by executive agencies that have delegated authority to engage consultants.

ALTENER Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to increase the number and widen the range of industrial pilot schemes under the EC ALTENER programme.

Mr. Eggar: I chaired the Council of Energy Ministers on 30 November 1992 which discussed a proposal for a decision concerning the promotion of renewable energy sources in the Community—ALTENER programme. The UK presidency secured politcal agreement to this programme which will support a series of actions to promote the greater exploitation of renewable energy resources within the Community. The ALTENER programme is a "software" programme and makes no financial provision for the creation of industrial plant.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Eggar: Detailed information on the conduct and award of individual contracts is not held centrally by my Department and collection of this information would incur disproportionate costs.

European Regional Assistance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the involvement of (a) employers' organisations, (b) trade unions and (c) local authorities in the implementation of European regional assistance programmes.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have no such plans at present. Any such arrangements will be subject to revised Council regulations which I expect to be adopted in the summer.

Coal Industry

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the state of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: We intend to set out the conclusions of the Government's coal review in a White Paper to be published shortly.

Departmental Library

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will obtain a copy of the document of which he has been given notice by the hon. Member for Cardiff, West for his departmental library.

Mr. Eggar: Yes.

Gas-fired Power Generation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce a decision for granting Electricity Act 1989 consent for the proposed PowerGen Connah's Quay gas-fired power station; what consultations he has had on a time-delayed consent; what assessment he has made of the impact of such a consent on the proposed Hamilton Brothers gas-processing plant at Point of Ayr and the development of the gas fields off the north Wales coast and in Liverpool bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is reviewing the use of his consent powers under section 36 of the Electricty Act 1989 as part of the coal review and has made it clear that he proposes to defer decisions on outstanding applications for new power stations until after that review is completed. The Government are proposing to publish their White Paper shortly.

My right hon. Friend recognises the importance which local representatives and equipment suppliers attach to all the proposed Liverpool bay developments. I can assure the hon. Member that all relevant factors are being carefully considered.

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the Ernst and Young report into the relocation of the petroleum engineering directorate to Aberdeen.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have today published in full the report by Ernst and Young on the arguments for and against relocating the professional geologists and engineers of the DTI's oil and gas division—formerly the petroleum engineering directorate—to Aberdeen. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

While the report showed there was no clear case for moving all the DTI's petroleum engineering directorate —PED—to Aberdeen, it did raise some wider issues. Ernst and Young's comprehensive analysis led the Government to examine the case for improving the service the DTI offers those companies who choose to locate in Aberdeen. We can improve the service to those companies by providing multi-disciplinary teams in Aberdeen. I am pleased to announce that during the coming year the DTI will open an office in Aberdeen to provide key DTI services to that part of the oil and gas industry based there.

Initially, the office will consist of 60 people and provide services which until now have only been available from DTI headquarters. In particular the new office will take the nationwide lead in the issue of field development consents and in considering abandonment programmes. It will also process development applications—annex Bs—from companies based in Aberdeen.

The office will be expanded to 80 staff over the next two years if, as expected, additional companies move essential functions to Aberdeen. All this will create a climate which should help the successful development of the oil supply and service companies located there.

The setting up of the new office is an acknowledgement of the importance of Aberdeen as an established centre for both the United Kingdom and international oil and gas industry and of Aberdeen's potential for future growth.

Industrial Innovation

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on responsibility for encouraging industrial innovation and technology transfer.

Mr. Heseltine: In the context of the policies emerging from the forthcoming White Paper on science and technology, the Government will review the scope for transferring responsibility for a range of schemes for encouraging industrial innovation and technology transfer in Scotland and Wales from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Scottish and Welsh Offices respectively. The object of the review will be to bring about transfer of responsibility wherever practicable.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which consultees agreed to the indicative conditions to be imposed on operators in blocks 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19, 104/21, 103/1, 103/2 and 103/3.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 March 1993]: All our consultees, such as other Government Departments and interested bodies, were given an opportunity to comment on the draft conditions to be attached to individual blocks. Consultees' comments have now been incorporated into relevant draft conditions.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the northern extremity of blocks 104/16, 104/17 and 104/18 and (a) Burry inlet (grid ref. SS500970) and (b) Penclawdd.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The shortest distance between the northern extremity of blocks 104/16, 104/17, and 104/18 and grid ref. SS500970 is approximately 12 nautical miles. The shortest distance between the northern extremity of blocks 104/16, 104/17 and 104/18 and Penclawdd is approximately 13 nautical miles.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the southern extremity of block 103/1 and 103/2 and (a) the Smalls and (b) Grassholm Island.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The shortest distance between the southern extremity of blocks 103/1 and 103/2 and the smalls is approximately eight nautical miles. The shortest distance between the southern extremity of blocks 103/1 and 103/2 and Grassholm Island is approximately 10 nautical miles.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date his Department asked the Joint Nature Conservation Committee for its advice on blocks 103/1, 103/2, 103/3, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19, 104/21, 106/24, 106/27, 106/28, 103/19, 103/20, 103/24, 103/25, 103/39 and 103/30; and by what date it required a response.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Comments on the first three of these blocks were requested from the JNCC on 14 April 1992. No date was set for the JNCC to respond by, as a meeting was arranged to discuss its concerns. It responded on 1 June 1992. The remainder of the blocks were notified to JNCC on 5 and 18 May 1992. The JNCC responded on 20 June 1992. At all times we kept the JNCC fully informed of our timetable for announcements.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the northern extremity of blocks 104/16, 104/17, 104/18 and 104/19 and (a) the nearest point to each block on the Welsh coastline and (b) the north coast of Lundy Island.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The shortest distance between the northern extremities of blocks 104/16, 104/17, 104/18 and 104/19 and the nearest points on the Welsh coast are approximately six, eight, six and two nautical miles respectively. The shortest distance between the southern extremity of blocks 104/16, 104/17, 104/18 and 104/19 and the north coast of Lundy Island is approximately six nautical miles.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between (a) the southern extremity and (b) the eastern extremity of block 104/21 and Lundy Island.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The shortest distance between the south-eastern extremity of block 104/21 and the coast of Lundy Island is aproximately six nautical miles.

Deregulation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the current members of his advisory panel on deregulation, together with the organisations from which they are seconded.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The current members of the advisory panel on deregulation are:

Sir Nigel Mobbs—Slough Estates plc
Martin Robeson—J. Sainsbury plc
Richard Ellis—TSB Bank Ltd.
John Hoare—J. B. Hoare and Co.
Alan Hudson—Business consultant
Stephen Moss—Grosvenor Securities Ltd.
Dan Wright—Fleming Thermodynamics Ltd.
Tim Brookes—In Shops plc
Lewis Goodman—Norwest Consultants

Members are appointed in an individual capacity and not as representatives of organisations.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of his advisory panel on deregulation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The advisory panel on deregulation provides valuable advice to Ministers, both in my Department and in others, and to the deregulation unit which reports to me, on Government requirements and regulations which may be burdensome to businesses both large and small. The panel is able to offer a business perspective on the management and prioritisation of work on deregulation. Members of the panel provide business views on deregulation issues, whether these arise from the implementation of domestic policies or from EC requirements or from the enforcement of regulations by local authorities and others.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Dogs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many dogs, other than guide dogs, are authorised to be present during the working day in the Palace and its associated buildings.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what steps are being taken to require keepers of dogs authorised to be present in the Palace and its outbuildings, other than guide dogs, to ensure that mess is not left on pavements, roads or grass around the Palace.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Administration Committee is not responsible for the control of dogs on pavements, roads or grass around the Palace of Westminster.

Waste Paper

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chairman of the Works Committee what arrangements are made for the recycling of waste paper from offices of hon. Members and staff of the House.

Mr. Ray Powell: Waste paper is collected free of charge and recycled off site by a contractor. Collections of waste paper are made daily Monday to Saturday.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the south Derbyshire VAT office (a) the number of new registrations, (b) the number of cancelled registrations and (c) the total number registered at year end, for the last three years for which data are available.

Sir John Cope: The local VAT office that covers South Derbyshire also covers Derby and parts of Leicestershire and Staffordshire. The number of VAT registrations in the last three years is as follows:

Year	New Registrations	Cancelled Registrations	Total Registered
1990	2,370	1,652	18,022
1991	1,869	2,475	17,542
1992	1,805	2,168	17,190

Textile Industry

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to reduce the paperwork experienced by the textile industry resulting from the EC Intrastat classification.

Mr. Lamont: The completion of the single market has led to the removal of most border formalities on trade with the European Community. This has considerably reduced the burdens on businesses.

Under the new Intrastat system, three-quarters of United Kingdom businesses will have to provide only two statistics on their total trade on a quarterly basis. Larger traders will also benefit from the replacement of the previous documentation with a simpler statistical return which will have to be only provided monthly. The previous system required separate paperwork for each and every shipment of goods in the form of the single administrative document. This means that 10 million export forms will be eliminated each year, with net annual savings to United Kingdom exporters estimated to be £135 million.

The United Kingdom is required to use the EC combined nomenclature classification under Council regulation 3330/91. These classification codes are similar to those previously reported on the single administrative document except that they comprise only eight instead of nine digits.

The Prime Minister has recently announced a scrutiny review of European legislation to help ensure that unnecessary burdens are not placed on business when transposing Community legislation into national law. Furthermore, the Government will continue to press for policies which will further liberalise the European Community market, including breaking down any bureaucratic barriers.

Global Investment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters relating to global investment in the environment and progress made in meeting the financial commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development were discussed at the meeting hosted by him of G7 Finance Ministers on 27 February.

Mr. Nelson: None. The meeting focused primarily on the economic situation in G7 countries. However, the commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development are being actively pursued in a number of fora.

Corporation Tax Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the numbers and grades of staff employed to investigate and pursue corporate tax fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Approximately 400 Inland Revenue staff units are engaged in the investigation of possible or actual corporate tax fraud. This work is carried out by all grades of inspector of taxes up to and including the rank of principal inspector.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax has been recovered in cases of corporate tax fraud in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; how many cases were involved each year, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: It is impossible to distinguish fraud cases, but the approximate amounts of tax recovered in cases of possible or actual fraudulent or negligent conduct by companies, and the numbers of cases, in the years 1989-90, 1991-92 were as follows:

	Cases	Tax £ million
1989-90	3,248	122
1990-91	3,410	128
1991-92	3,913	162

Public Bodies (Members' Remuneration)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the amounts, and the basis in each case, of remuneration from public funds of (a) local government councillors, (b) school chairmen and governors, (c) chairmen and directors of health authorities and trusts, (d) members of police authorities, (e) chairmen and members of British Rail and British Coal, (f) members of social security and employment boards, (g) magistrates and (h) the Health Advisory Service.

Mr. Portillo: Information in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate costs. Details of the remuneration paid to members of public boards and nationalised industries is in "Public Bodies 1992" published by HMSO, which is available from the Library. Local government councillors are expected to receive allowances and expenses determined under the Local Government (Members' Allowance) Regulations of around £52 million in 1992-93. School chairmen and governors receive no remuneration, but travel and subsistence allowances may be paid at the discretion of local education authorities. Lay magistrates are entitled to travel and subsistence expenses plus a financial loss allowance, while stipendiary magistrates receive an annual salary of £52,500. The cost of magistrates' salaries and allowances, including national insurance contributions, is expected to be £4·5 million in 1992-93.

LAUTRO

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to improve the effectiveness of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation in securing compensation for customers of insurance companies who have been sold insurance policies by salesmen who have stolen the premiums.

Mr. Nelson: The effectiveness of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation is primarily a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Viggers: To aks the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the conduct of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation in securing compensation for customers of the Royal Life insurance company affected by the activities of the company's former employee, Mr. Kissane.

Mr. Nelson: I regulary receive representations on a wide range of matters relevant to the Financial Services Act. The conduct of individual cases is a matter for the regulatory bodies.

Travellers Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often Customs and Excise posts are supplied with copies of the travellers charter; which posts currently hold stocks of the charter available for travellers; and what is the level of such stocks held by each post.

Sir John Cope: The travellers charter was launched in January 1992. It is in two versions: poster notices, which are displayed in Customs examination areas for travellers at ports and airports, and leaflets. Twelve thousand copies of the poster and 160,000 copies of the leaflet were printed.

The leaflet can be obtained from Customs at ports and airports, from the 21 regional collections and from Customs headquarters.

Customs offices reorder copies of the leaflet when stocks fall low. It is not possible to assess easily what is the level of stocks held by each post, but centrally 46,000 leaflets remain stock.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officials will begin wearing name badges as detailed in the travellers charter; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The travellers charter was launched in January 1992 and Customs staff have worn name badges with effect from around that date. Exceptions are made where the particular nature of the officer's duty might render the wearing of a name badge unsafe.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the firms of consultants used by Customs and Excise as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise have used a number of consultants to assist in preparing the market testing programme, to support in-house bids, to advise market test managers and prepare specifications. The cost of this consultancy since November 1991 has been £245,000. The following consultants have been used.

Barony Consulting
BIS Capita
Coopers and Lybrand
Ernst and Young
Erskine Consultancy
PA Consultancy
PE Consultancy
Pool Associates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in Customs and Excise since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise have completed four market tests since November 1991. The tests covered typing services in the Leeds and east midland areas, Southend headquarters and the Department's stores branch. In all cases, the in-house bid was successful.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from the Customs and Excise since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise have completed four market tests since November 1991. An in-house bid was put forward in each case, and all four contracts have been awarded in-house.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff in the Customs and Excise are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost Customs and Excise since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise have a team of six staff dedicated to market testing and have also used a number of outside consultants. The total expenditure on completed and ongoing market tests on these staff costs and consultancy fees since November 1991 has been £360,000. Headquarters staff and staff in areas which are being market tested are also engaged in this work, in addition to their normal duties.

Bank Notes

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further representations have been received about the size of print and colours of the new series of £5, £10 and £20 bank notes; what replies have been sent; what action he has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: The design and issue of Bank of England banknotes is the responsibility of the Bank. I am advised that about 800 letters have been received, commenting on various aspects of the design of the new series "E" notes. Replies have explained the Bank's objectives in designing and printing banknotes, which are to achieve an appropriate blend of security features, distinguishing characteristics and cost effectiveness.

The Bank announced on 15 February that, in response to public comment, changes are being made to the denomination numerals on the £5, £10 and £20 notes. The revised £5 note was issued on 1 March and the revised £10 and £20 notes are expected to be issued later this year.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total revenue from stamp duty upon the purchase of houses in each of the last 24 months for which figures are available; and what was the average stamp duty liability per transaction in each of those months.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information relates to all transactions of land and property, other than shares, liable to stamp duty and is given in the table. The figures include new leases. Part of the duty on such leases depends on the length of the lease and is not affected by changes in the stamp duty threshold. New leases therefore accounted for a much higher proportion of all transactions liable to stamp duty over the period 20 December 1991 to 19 August 1992 when the threshold was temporarily raised to £250,000. This affects the figures on average stamp duty per transaction.

Notes:
1. Monthly figures for the financial year 1992-93 are provisional.
2. On average, receipts and the count of transactions in a given month relate to transactions occurring in the previous month because of time lags.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the information he has concerning the impact upon capital investment by manufacturing industry of the changes in capital allowances which were announced in his autumn statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The aim of the enhanced capital allowances is to encourage businesses to bring forward investment in equipment and buildings. They formed part of a package intended to restore business confidence, which has been widely welcomed by industry. Whilst it is too early to see the effects on investment, recent surveys suggest that the package has contributed to the improvement in business confidence.

Training

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement detailing the current arrangements which operate in terms of tax rebates when individuals contribute towards training costs to enable them to improve their skills and qualifications; and if he will make it his policy to introduce measures to allow such costs in the future to be fully allowable for tax assessment purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: Individuals training towards national vocational qualifications or Scottish vocational qualifications at levels one to four are entitled to tax relief on the cost of their training. Tax relief is also available for costs incurred by employees on full-time, job-related training courses lasting at least four weeks during which the employer gives paid time off. Self-employed people will generally be able to claim a deduction as a business expense for costs on refreshing business skills or knowledge. I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion for wider tax reliefs for training.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry of the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which his policies can more effectively encourage individuals to improve their qualifications or skills.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets regularly the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss a variety of matters. He also meets representatives from the Engineering Employers Federation from time to time, but has no plans to do so in the immediate future, nor to meet representatives from the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance.

Profit-related Schemes

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish (a) the list of firms participating in registered profit-related schemes and (b) the number of employees in each firm.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 March 1993]: As information provided to the Inland Revenue about particular employers' profit-related pay schemes is confidential, I regret I cannot publish the details requested.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the number of people who would have an income tax liability in 1993-94 whose sole income was invalidity benefit if invalidity benefit were liable to tax in 1993-94; and what would be their average annual payment;

(2) how many recipients of invalidity benefit would be liable to tax if the benefit was taxed in 1993-94; and what would be their average annual tax payment;

(3) how much would be raised in 1993-94 by taxing invalidity benefit.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Approximate estaimates are that the yield, at 1993-94 levels, from making invalidity benefit taxable would be about £450 million, assuming statutory indexation of income tax allowances and bands.

The estimated number of recipients who would have an income tax liability and the average increase in tax is shown in the table:

	Number of taxpayers with invalidity benefit liable to tax	Average increase in tax with invalidity benefit liable to tax
All recipients of invalidity benefit	[1]750,000	£600
Invalidity benefit recipients with no other income	80,000	£150

[1]Of which some 250,000 already have an income tax liability.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Theatre-in-Education

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations he has received regarding the funding of Theatre-in-Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have received three letters on this subject, one of which involved Greenwich Young People's Theatre in the hon. Member's constituency. I understand that, in 1993-94, the London arts board will be spending more money on Theatre for Young People, which includes Theatre-in-Education, than the £236,000 it spent this year.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to view the Theatre-in-Education work of the Greenwich young people's theatre.

Mr. Brooke: I am considering the recent invitation I have received from the chairman of the Greenwich Young People's Theatre to see its work.

Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about ministerial responsibility for the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils.

Mr. Brooke: The Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils are currently constituted as sub-committees of the Arts Council of Great Britain, though, in practice, both have enjoyed a degree of autonomy. In consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and in the context of the Government's commitment to re-examine the role of the Arts Council of Great Britain, we have concluded that the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils should be separately constituted. With the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, ministerial responsibility for them will be transferred to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. In future, the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils will become directly accountable to them.

I believe that this change will enable the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils to respond more effectively to the needs of the arts in Scotland and Wales. Arrangements will be made to ensure that the national arts councils take a collective view on matters of common interest, such as touring.

To ensure an orderly transfer of functions I propose that the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils should become autonomous with effect from 1 April 1994.

WALES

Pupils (Faith Allegiance)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown by local education authority of the faith allegiance of pupils in maintained schools; and what percentage of pupils are not educated in the maintained sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information on the faith allegiance of pupils in maintained schools is not available centrally. The percentage of pupils who are not educated in the maintained school sector as at January 1992 is shown in the following table.

	Percent
Clwyd	3·4
Dyfed	1·6
Gwent	2·5
Gwynedd	3·2
Mid Glamorgan	0·8
Powys	3·3
South Glamorgan	4·8
West Glamorgan	1·3
Wales	2·5

Farming Forms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that all forms made available to the farming community in Wales are processed through the Welsh Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Forms for all agricultural schemes within my area of responsibility are issued by my Department or, occasionally, in the interests of economy and speed, jointly with other Agriculture Departments. The validation of completed forms is carried out by the Welsh Office. Some statistical surveys conducted by the Welsh Office may be processed by an agency in the interests of efficiency or in order to protect the confidentiality of farmers' data.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that all forms used in connection with applications for agricultural subsidy and grant aid are published bilingually in the Welsh language as well as through the medium of English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is my policy to make all such forms available in Welsh as well as English whenever it is reasonably practicable to do so.

School Music

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what initiatives he will take to enable schools to offer specialist instrumental or vocal music training;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning the impact of the new educational funding methods on school music;

(3) what is his policy concerning school music;

(4) what is his policy concerning music making by (a) school orchestras and (b) school choirs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We attach great value to the music support services, both for their intrinsic worth and because of their potential to contribute to the delivery of music within the national curriculum and we are anxious to see them continue.

Under the present local management of schools arrangements, local education authorities may hold back and deploy substantial resources centrally in respect of schools which they maintain. We firmly believe that local authorities should delegate more money to schools. To this end, we have required them to delegate a minimum of 85 per cent. of their potential schools budget to schools by April 1993. This will ensure that schools control more of their budgets.

We have not, however, prescribed which services should be delegated and which should be retained centrally. These are primarily matters for individual authorities to consider in consultation with schools within their areas.

There is nothing under the LMS arrangements to prevent LEAs from continuing to provide services such as peripatetic music teaching, where the funding related to these services has been delegated to schools. It is open to LEAs to develop service agreements with their schools which will regulate the relationship between service providers and schools. Thus once budgets are delegated, schools would be invited to buy back the services they received previously funded directly by their LEA. It will, however, be for the schools themselves to decide whether or not the service is required and whether it is of good quality and provides value for money. Whether they wish to participate in an arrangement will, therefore, determine if that service is to be provided by the LEA.

All maintained schools are obliged to meet the national curriculum requirements in terms of music teaching. It is for schools themselves to determine whether they wish to offer, over and above the requirements of the national curriculum, specialist instrumental or vocal music training and whether to run school orchestras and choirs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to obtain more specialist teachers capable of developing specific playing and singing skills in high schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am not aware of any difficulty in meeting the demand for qualified music teachers for secondary schools. All newly qualified teachers should have the skills required to deliver the national curriculum for music, which includes instrumental work and singing.

I am already providing substantial grant aid, £12 million in 1993-94, through the grants for education support and training programme, for LEA programmes aimed at assisting existing teachers to introduce the national curriculum subjects, including music. This should ensure that existing specialist teachers are capable of developing playing and singing skills.

Responsibility for the employment and deployment of individual specialist teachers rests with LEAs and schools which are well placed to decide upon and react to local needs.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about pupil-teacher ratios in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) all schools for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The figures are as follows:

	January 1990	January 1991	January 1992
Primary	22·3	22·3	22·3
Secondary	15·3	15·4	15·6
All schools	18·1	18·2	18·2

I am satisfied that pupil to teacher ratios have remained generally stable over recent years.

Schools Fundraising

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the amount of money raised by parents for schools in the last two years for which he has information.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information about school fundraising activities is not held centrally.

Special Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered inspectors in the Office for Standards in Education operating in Wales have recent knowledge and experience of special education provision.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Matters in respect of the operation of the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales (OHMCI) are for the chief inspector. However, I understand that the ongoing courses for training potential inspectors have included several persons with recent knowledge and experience of special education.

Key Stage 3 English

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many pupils of key stage 3 age were involved in the pilot tests conducted by the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate for key stage 3 English on which the proposed tests for 1993 are based;

(2) how many pupils of key stage 3 age plus one year were involved in the pilot tests conducted by the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate for key stage 3 English on which the proposed test for 1993 are based.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The University of Cambridge local examinations syndicate conducted pilot trialling of test material for this summer's end of key stage 3 tests for English with some 3,000 pupils, all in year 10, in November 1992 and again in 1993.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals and organisations involved in education have indicated their support for the way in which key stage 3 English is being introduced.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Many individuals and organisations involved in education support the national curriculum requirements for key stage 3 English which have been progressively introduced in schools since 1990.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the outturn of additional gross capital expenditure of Welsh local authorities in the period from 12 November 1992 to 31 March 1993, arising from the sanction of a temporary relaxation of the rules on the use of capital receipts for debt redemption.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on outturn expenditure for 1992-93 will not be available for some months.

Nursery Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about future developments in the provision of nursery education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Nursery education is provided by local education authorities at their discretion.

Health Service Waiting Times Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh health authorities in relation to the completion of the waiting times initiative contract funding; what provision he has made for carrying over unspent funding for uncompleted contracts; what information he has received on completion of all contracts by the end of the financial year; what assessment he has made of compensatory reduction or postponement in other treatments to complete waiting times initiative performance targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The implementation of waiting times initiatives is dealt with at official level between the Welsh Office and purchasers of health care.

All waiting times initiative funding for 1992-93 has been allocated to the relevant health authorities and GP fund holders.

Purchasers are aware of the need to complete initiative work by the end of the financial year. A full evaluation of this year's initiative will be undertaken at the end of the financial year.

There is no reason to believe there has been any reduction, or postponement, of treatment as a result of the waiting times initiative.

Education Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on indications of cuts in education services by local education authorities following Government announcements affecting local government finances for 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received representations from Members of Parliament, members of the public and various bodies. The great majority have been from members of the public about South Glamorgan county council's proposals for budget reductions in its music and community education services.

Farm Business Survey

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what method he uses to extrapolate farm incomes in less-favoured areas in Wales as a whole from the samples in the farm business survey.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 1 March 1993]: The sample contains proportionately more farms with large gross margins than [illegible]es Wales as a whole. This is done to reflect the importance of these farms in total farm output. To ensure accurate estimates of LFA incomes, the sample estimates for each farm type are weighted by the number of holdings in each category.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Bodies (Appointments)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the former hon. Members who have been appointed since June 1987 to bodies to which Government Ministers make appointments; and what are the emoluments, remuneration and salaries of the individuals concerned.

The Prime Minister: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the former hon. Members of the House who have been appointed to bodies to which Government Ministers make appointments together with the salaries, emoluments or honoraria paid to the former hon. Members concerned, since April 1992.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

10 Downing Street (Catering)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister when catering for No. 10 Downing street was put out to contract; if this took place by public tender; how many tenders were received; and how long the contract will run.

The Prime Minister: There is no single contract for catering for 10 Downing street. Catering for official functions in 10 Downing street is usually arranged by the Government hospitality fund using outside contractors.

Inhumane Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now make it his policy to arrange ratification of the 1977 additional protocols to the Geneva conventions and the 1981 inhumane weapons convention at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Prime Minister: We expect to reach decisions soon on ratification of both the additional protocols and the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 March.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION

Pupil-teacher Ratio

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about pupil-teacher ratios in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) all schools for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: Information on pupil-teacher ratios in maintained schools in England in 1990, 1991 and 1992 is shown in the table. The latest pupil-teacher ratios are all significantly lower than those recorded in 1979. Further information on this topic can be found in "Statistical Bulletin 1/93", copies of which are in the Library.

1990	21.98	15.26	16.94

[1] Includes only qualified teachers within schools.
[2] Includes all teachers employed by LEAs and self-governing state schools (GM).

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the pupil-teacher ratio in each education authority in England in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information on the pupil-teacher ratios in each local education authority in England in January 1992 was published in "Statistical Bulletin 1/93", copies of which are in the Library.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 129, if he will list the local education authorities in which no grant-maintained schools have yet been approved, together with the party in control in each case.

Mr. Forth: The details requested are as follows:

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) in which publication, speech or statement his Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department;

(2) if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and the family life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. Forth: Families play a crucial part in their children's education and full account is taken of the implications for the family in the development of educational policies. Since 1980 the Government have been intent on widening parental choice and entrenching parental influence and control in maintained schools. Schools are now more accountable to parents than ever before. The parents charter and the White Paper "Choice and Diversity" (Cm 2021) make clear the ways in which the educational service should respond to parents' aspirations for their children's education.

Musical Instruments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy that the opportunity to learn to play a musical instrument free of charge should be incorporated in the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: The statutory order for music in the national curriculum already requires that pupils in maintained schools between the ages of five and 14 should perform music and, as they progress, develop the skills needed to make use of a range of increasingly sophisticated instruments. Schools are not permitted to make a charge to parents for instrumental musical tuition within school hours where such tuition is provided to meet the requirements of the national curriculum.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list details of funds expended per pupil in each local education authority in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not yet available for 1991-92. The table gives the unit cost for nursery, primary and secondary pupils by local education authority for 1990-91, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available.

Notes to tables

1. Figures are derived from local education authorities' returns of their net institutional expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education.

2. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

Further Education Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the expenditure per head of population on further education for each local education authority in England in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Information on expenditure in 1991-92 by LEA's is not yet available. LEA expenditure on FE colleges includes expenditure on both further education and on some local authority provided higher education. It is not possible to disaggregate the FE spending from the HE spending at LEA level.

Class sizes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the target class size by age group recommended by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The internal organisation of schools is a matter for head teachers and governors.

English Tests

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which body funds the publication of materials relating to KS3 SATS (English); and how much, in total, it will cost to publish all materials relating to KS3 SATS (English) and to implement these tests.

Mr. Forth: The School Examinations and Assessment Council funds the publication of material relating to the key stage 3 tests.

The total cost of producing and distributing the papers and support material for the key stage 3 tests in English this June is estimated at £1·5 million.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many individuals and organisations involved in education have indicated their support for the way in which key stage 3 English is being introduced.

Mr. Forth: There is very wide support for the national curriculum, including the assessment arrangements that are an essential part of it. There is evidence that its implementation is already improving standards in the teaching of English, but that there is room for still further improvement. That is why my right hon. Friend commissioned a review of the English order.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many pupils of key stage 3 age plus one year were involved in the pilot tests conducted by the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate for key stage 3 age English on which the proposed test for 1993 are based.

(2) how many pupils of key stage 3 were involved in the pilot tests conducted by the University of Cambridge. Local Examinations Syndicate for key stage 3 English on which the proposed test for 1993 are based.

Mr. Forth: The University of Cambridge local examinations syndicate conducted pilot tests with some 3,000 pupils, all in year 10, in November 1992 and again in January this year.

School Leavers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the destination of school leavers by region for each year since 1980.

Mr. Boswell: The table gives estimated details of the intended destinations of school leavers by region in England since 1980. These figures are published each year in the Department's annual publication "Statistics of Education School Examinations GCSE and GCE."

Financial Cuts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received in respect of cuts in education services by local education authorities following Government announcements affecting local government finances for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of recent representations about local education authority spending plans.

Public Bodies

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list each of the non-departmental Government bodies and other bodies to which he makes appointments, with the names of all appointees and dates on which they were appointed; what is the selection procedure for appointments in each case; and whether any Minister in his Department interviews those being considered before appointment.

Mr. Boswell: The details requested are as follows. The selection of candidates for appointment to the Department's public bodies follows procedures recommended by the Cabinet Office in the "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures" published in September 1992. Ministers conduct interviews with candidates in those cases where they consider it to be appropriate.

Nursery Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about future developments in the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the second of my replies to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) on 19 February at col. 416.

Schools (Fundraising)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the amount of money raised by parents for schools in the last two years where figures are available.

Mr. Forth: Information on the amount of money raised by parents for schools is not collected centrally.

Education Inspectors

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many registered inspectors operating in the Office for Standards in Education have recent knowledge and experience of special education provision.

Mr. Forth: The registration of inspectors for the purpose of carrying out inspections under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 is a matter for Ofsted.

I have asked Professor Sutherland, the chief inspector, to write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Absent Parents

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much child support maintenance will be payable by an absent parent with one child aged under 11 years, the child living with a parent who has not got a partner and is receiving £10 child benefit, if (a) the absent parent has a net income of £300 per week before paying superannuation contributions of £50 net, or (b) the absent parent is a member of a non-contributory pension scheme provided by his employer and receives a wage of £250 net per week, assuming housing costs are identical in both cases.

Mr. Burt: In order to provide the calculation it has been assumed, in each case, that the parent with care is in receipt of income support, and the absent parent lives alone and has housing costs of £40 per week. The amount of child support maintenance payable will be £79.55 for (a) and £73.30 for (b).

The figures given are estimates for a specific set of circumstances and would be different if the level of earnings, superannuation contributions or the absent parent's housing costs were different.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the additional contribution required by the Child Support Agency for each £1 of additional income of an absent parent above the protected income level.

Mr. Burt: The assessed amount of maintenance an absent parent pays will increase by 90p for each £1 of additional income received while he is subject to the protected income provisions. Otherwise a deduction rate of 50p in the pound applies to assessable income until the maintenance requirement is met. A lower deduction rate of 25p in the pound applies to the balance of any assessable income remaining after the maintenance requirement is met.

Pension Age

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many members of the Social Security Advisory Committee which produced "Options for Equality in State Pension Age: A Case for Equalising at 65", were pensioners or retired people.

Miss Widdecombe: Four.

National Insurance Contributions (Avoidance)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to take punitive action against companies which make bonus payments to staff in cocoa beans, gold bullion or other commodities to avoid national insurance contributions.

Miss Widdecombe: The question of avoidance is kept under careful review. Regulations were introduced in 1991, to extend national insurance liability to shares, unit trusts and other financial instruments. Further action to tighten the law may be taken at any time as and when it is necessary to do so.

From April 1993 employers may be liable to pay interest on any national insurance class 1 contributions which are not paid by the due date.

Pensioners

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give an estimate of the trend in pensioners' real income since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Between 1979 and 1989 the total net average income of pensioner units[1] increased, in real terms, by 30 per cent. before housing costs are taken into account and by 37 per cent. after housing costs. Both single pensioners and pensioner couples enjoyed increases in their real net incomes of 29 per cent. before housing costs and 33 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively after housing costs are taken into account.

Note:

[1] Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

Benefits Agency (Staff Transport)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the costs of the transport contract to carry his Department's staff from Leeds station to the Benefits Agency's head office at Quarry hill, Leeds.

Mr. Burt: The cost to the Benefits Agency is £424 a week.

Disability Payments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision he proposes in the period up to 31 March for those requiring assistance equivalent to that provided by the independent living fund up until 31 December 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The provision of domiciliary care for all disabled people is a matter for local authorities and for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health. However, as previously announced and subject to parliamentary approval, two new funds will come into existence on 1 April. The independent living (extension) fund will manage the existing ILF case load of some 21,000 disabled people and the independent living (1993) fund will, in co-operation with local authorities, provide extra cash help for some of the most severly disabled people.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision he is making for those of pensionable age who require assistance equivalent to that provided by the independent living fund up to 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The provision of domiciliary care for all disabled people, including those of pensionable age, is a matter for local authorities and for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what organisations representing the disabled will be invited to become trustees of the trust for the new independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: Mr. John Shepherd, an ex-financial director of Remploy, and Mr. Robin Wendt, secretary of the Association of County Councils, have been appointed as the first two trustees.

I am still considering further candidates for appointment as trustees of the independent living fund successor bodies. A full announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for an ex-gratia payment towards telephone expenses arising from delays in the Benefits Agency dealing with disability allowance claims have been made; how many ex-gratia payments have been paid; what is the maximum and minimum ex-gratia payment paid; and how claimants are advised of the facility to claim an ex-gratia payment.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 8 March 1993.

Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions raised about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking how many claims for an ex-gratia payment towards telephone expenses arising from delays in the Benefits Agency dealing with disability allowance claims have been made; how many ex-gratia payments have been made; what is the maximum and minimum ex-gratia payment paid; and how claimants are advised of the facility to claim an ex-gratia payment.

Up to 3 March 1993, 79 claims have been received for ex-gratia payments towards telephone expenses arising from delays in the Benefit Agency dealing with Disability Living Allowance claims. Forty-one such payments have been made and four requests have been refused. There are 34 claims presently being considered. The maximum ex-gratia payment made has been £116.24 and the minimum £4.33.

Customers are not individually advised about the facility to claim ex-gratia payments, but there is advice within the Benefits Agency Customer Charter which advises what to do "If things go wrong". If the customer feels this to be applicable, contact with the Customer Service Manager is advised. The Benefits Agency Customer Charter was distributed to Welfare Organisations, other organisations representing customer interests, and to staff of the Benefits Agency. It is readily available from Disability Benefits Centres and District Offices.

The DLAU has issued written instructions to its staff, detailing the procedures to be followed when a claim for an ex-gratia payment is received. These instructions were recently updated and circulated to staff. A reminder is to be issued to staff about the update in the near future.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the library.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentres

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all those constituencies which do not have a jobcentre within their boundary.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Battle, dated 9 March 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about constituencies which do not have a Jobcentre within their boundary. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately the information you requested is not readily available, as the areas served by Jobcentres do not correspond with Parliamentary Constituencies. Therefore it will take some time to compile the details. However, I will reply fully to your question as soon as I receive the information.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Skills and Qualifications

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement giving the details of those policies which have been introduced by her Department in each of the last five years in order positively to encourage individuals to improve their skills and qualifications.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have taken a number of significant steps in the last five years to encourage individuals to improve their skills and qualifications.

These steps include: introduction of youth training and youth credits; introduction of employment training and employment action which merge into training for work from 1 April 1993; continued rapid development of the system of national vocational qualifications and other measures to secure parity of esteem with academic qualifications; and introduction of training and enterprise councils.

Further details for each year can be found in the relevant departmental report.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry or the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which her policies can more effectively encourage individuals to improve their qualifications or skills.

Mr. McLoughlin: I will continue to hold frequent meetings with industry representatives to discuss policies relating to skills and qualifications, and the way individuals might make best use of them.

Industrial Relations Code

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she plans to introduce a new code of good industrial relations practice in place of the one that was withdrawn in June 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no such plans.

Training

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to encourage small and medium-sized employers to take on trainees by allowing them to offset the employment costs of those trainees against the employers' national insurance account; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government keep their policies to stimulate employers to train under constant review. They already make a substantial contribution to the training costs of employers of all sizes through youth training and employment training.

Employers can also generally deduct the cost of training employees when calculating business profits for income and corporation tax purposes.

Training (Wales)

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the responsibility for training in Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government will take further steps towards greater policy and financial devolution to Wales in the field of training. In particular, the determination of future public expenditure provision for training programmes in Wales will, from next year, become a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

The establishment of a network of training and enterprise councils in Wales has put a sharper focus on the economic demands of local areas, and this has ensured that training programmes are better tailored to local needs. In view of this, and in view of the creation of an integrated training, education and enterprise department in the Welsh Office, the Government believe that there is now greater scope for the separate determination of training policy for Wales. Accordingly, responsibility for determining training policy in Wales will be transferred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales as from 1 April 1994, within the framework of the overall strategic priorities, initiatives and policies developed by myself, in consultation with colleagues and collectively agreed.

United States (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters were discussed and what decisions taken during his recent visit to Washington and California to meet the new American Administration and others.

Mr. Howard: I visited Washington from 28 February to 2 March. I met Vice-President Gore, Interior Secretary Babbitt, EPA Administrator Bowner and several other members of the Administration and members of Congress. We discussed international environmental matters, including the attitude of the new administration to the biodiversity convention, the climate change convention, UNEP, the Sustainable Development Commission and the global environment facility. We also discussed the administration's position on other environmental issues including energy taxes and endangered species. The exchanges were constructive and useful to both sides, but it was not the purpose of the meetings to take decisions.

I have not yet visited California. When I do go, one of my main objectives will be to study the Californian initiatives in seeking reductions in pollution through economic instruments, and in particular tradeable permits.

Disabled People (Council Tax)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is issued to local authorities on the criteria to be used in allowing a reduction in council tax bills for disabled people who require additional space in their property and on the medical evidence required.

Mr. Robin Squire: Guidance was included in paragraphs 34-42 of Council Tax Practice Note 2, and in a letter issued by my Department on 8 February 1993. I have placed copies of both documents in the Library of the House.

Government Offices

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of Government office accommodation in the SW1 postal district of London is now vacant.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 7·77 per cent. of the common user office estate in the SW1 postal district is now vacant. Of this, 5·46 per cent. is undergoing or about to undergo refurbishment. The remainder is awaiting allocation, including 0·83 per cent. of below ground level storage, or is scheduled for disposal.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many answers have been submitted by his Department in response to written parliamentary questions asked by the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) in the current Session of Parliament; what was the estimated cost to his Department; and what estimate has been made of the amount of paper and card used in preparing the answers.

Mr. Howard: My Department has answered 259 questions from the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) so far this session. I have no estimates of the cost to my Department of answering these questions as we do not routinely keep such records. However, I understand that the present guidelines suggest an advisory cost limit of £450 per question. My Department also does not keep records of how much paper and card are used in answering questions from hon. Members.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to carry out his consultation exercise regarding mandatory home improvement grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The consultation paper on the future of the house renovation grant system, announced recently by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 13 January, at column 707, will be issued in the spring.

Home Improvement Agencies

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 308, (1) what has been the total allocation, for each local authority, by region, to home improvement agencies in England in 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(2) what was the total value of the bids for funding of home improvement agencies in England, in each local authority in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Sir George Young: The information requested has been provided in table form and copies have been placed in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much rate or revenue support grant per head of population has been given in total to each of the London boroughs since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The amount of rate or revenue support grant in total for each London borough for the period 1980-81 to 1993-94 inclusive divided by the average resident population over that period is as follows:

Average rate or revenue support grant per head for London boroughs since 1980-81

Local authority	Grant per head (£)

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Radiation Leak, Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the terms of reference for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's inquiry into the recent radioactive leak at BNFL's Sellafield plant; (2) if he will publish, in respect of the recent radioactive leak at Sellafield (a) when the incident began, (b) when the plant workers were informed, (c) when the emergency services were notified, (d) when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the nuclear installations inspectorate were informed, (e) when his Department was notified, (f) when the accident was announced to the public and (g) how and when the leak stopped; (3) what assessment he has made of BNFL's report that no danger to the public arose during the recent radioactive leak at the Sellafield plant; (4) what measures he intends to take following the recent discharge to ensure that British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. will not exceed its future radioactive waste discharge authorisations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he was informed by BNFL of the radioactive leak that occurred at Sellafield on 13 February; how many mega becquerels were released; and what substances were involved; (2) if he will make a statement on the leak of radiation from the Magnox reprocessing plant at Sellafield that occurred on 13 February.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department was informed of the leak of radioactive iodine-129 from the B6 chimney at Sellafield on 13 February; and what estimate he has of the risks posed thereby to (a) the British Nuclear Fuels work force and (b) the local population.

Mr. David Maclean [holding answer 2 March 1993]: BNFL informed HMIP of increased discharges of alpha activity from the B204 stack at 16.00 hours on 12 February and of increased discharges of iodine 129 from the B6 cell vent line at 16.00 hours on 24 February.

Investigations into both these incidents at the Sellafield site are currently being undertaken jointly by the nuclear installations inspectorate, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to establish the cause and whether a breach of any operating license or discharge authorisation has occurred.

Between 10 and 12 February releases of alpha activity from B204 were calculated to be approximately 350 megabecquerels (MBq). These discharges have now fallen to 5 MBq per day. The current annual discharge limit for alpha activity from the schedule 1 stacks (including B204) is 4,300 MBq.

In the week ending 13 February 1993 BNFL discharged 3,000 MBq of Iodine 129 via the B6 stack. Discharges for the following week had fallen to 2,500 MBq and by week ending 27 February to 1,000 MBq. The current annual discharge limit for Iodine 129 from the schedule 2 stacks (including the B6 stack) is 41,000 MBq.

Assessments of the radiological impact of these incidents will be reported to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. HMIP expects to submit its report into the B204 incident by the end of March.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services Board

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for the Western health and social services board the number of employees defined as (a) Roman Catholic, (b) Protestant and (c) others, who were educated in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) the Irish Republic, (iii) Great Britain (iv) elsewhere.

Mr. Hanley: Information on the total number of employees of the Western health and social services board, including home helps, defined as (a) Roman Catholic, (b) Protestant and (c) others, together with available information as to whether they were educated within or outside Northern Ireland is as follows:

Community Background	Number	Educated inside Northern Ireland	Educated outside Northern Ireland
Protestant	2,817	2,817	—
Roman Catholic	4,515	4,515	—
Others[1]	1,135	0	1,037
Total	8,467	7,332	1,037

[1] Includes 98 staff in respect of whom the community background and place of education cannot be determined.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for the Western health and social services board the number of (a) Roman Catholics, (b) Protestant and (c) others in each grade or category used by the board.

Mr. Hanley: Information on the number of employees in the Western health and social services board who are (a) Roman Catholic, (b) Protestant and (c) others in each grade or category used by the board could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, an analysis of total Western health and social services board employees by negotiating groups and religion is as follows.

	Protestant	Roman Catholic	Not known	Outside NI	Total
Admin and clerical	395	541	6	87	1,029
Maintenance	93	55	3	7	158
Ancillary and General	448	609	9	103	1,169
Nursing	776	1,747	19	457	2,999
Social Services	137	292	2	73	504
Professional and Technical	189	208	1	50	448
Medical and Dental	79	82	10	125	296
Ambulance	53	43	1	8	105
Home Helps	647	938	47	127	1,759

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 247, when the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland began the practice of defining their employees as EC or non-EC nationals; which other quangos in Northern Ireland follow the same definitions; from what date each began the practice; how the employees of each such organisation were defined before the present practice began; and why the system was changed.

Mr. Mates: The health and social services boards in Northern Ireland began the practice of defining their employees as EC or non-EC in 1989 in response to fair employment legislation. The process of determining the nationality of employees prior to this was by a process of self-definition. The system was changed to prevent assumptions being made on the community background of employees on the basis of their nationality.

No other quangos in Northern Ireland follow the same definitions.

Training

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry, or the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which his policies can more effectively encourage individuals in Northern Ireland to improve their qualifications and skills.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Nicholas Winterton, dated 8 March 1993:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry or the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which his policies can more effectively encourage individuals in Northern Ireland to improve their qualifications and skills. As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to reply on his behalf.

The Secretary of State has no specific plans to meet the representatives of the groups you mention, although he spoke at a dinner organised by the Engineering Employers Federation on 8 February of this year.

However the Training and Employment Agency will continue to have dialogue with these and other employer representative bodies as part of its ongoing process to ensure that training programmes and policies more effectively encourage industries in Northern Ireland to improve their qualifications and skills and are relevant to the needs of the industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement giving the details of those policies which have been introduced by his Department in each of the last five years in order positively to encourage individuals in Northern Ireland to improve their skills and qualifications.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Nicholas Winterton, dated 8 March 1993:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement giving details of those policies which have been introduced by his Department in each of the last five years, in order positively to encourage individuals in Northern Ireland to improve their skills and qualifications.

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) (T&EA) the Secretary of State has asked me to reply.

During each of the last five years, training policy has consistently been to equip individuals with the skills and competences required to help them secure employment and to provide employers with a skilled workforce.

During this period there have been a number of changes to the way in which training and employment programmes have been organised and delivered.

The most significant change has been the establishment of the Training and Employment Agency brought together in a single statutory body with responsibility for both employment and training services. The Agency came into existence in April 1990. It is an executive agency within the Department of Economic Development and it is advised by a Board comprised mainly of employers. The Agency administers both employment services and training services which it uses to encourage people to acquire relevant skills and qualifications.

As far as training is concerned, the Agency's activities are directed around two main areas of activity. First, it aims to encourage the training and development of people who are already employed especially in companies of significant potential for growth in the tradeable sector. Secondly, it works with the Department of Education to raise the levels of skills and qualifications amongst the unemployed and entrants to the labour market, with particular emphasis being given to the 16-19 age group.

Policies under both these two main areas of activity are implemented in close conjunction with Northern Ireland business, through the Agency's advisory board, through a number of bodies which represent the training needs and standards of particular sectors of industry, and through individual company contact. Targets have been set for the attainment of qualifications which embrace the CBI's "world class standards".

During the five year period a number of new initatives have been undertaken. In 1988, the Job Training Programme was introduced to provide training for the long term unemployed. In 1989 arrangements were introduced to the Action for Community Employment Scheme (this is a short term job creation scheme) whereby persons employed under that programme spend a minimum of 20 per cent. of their time on training. In 1990, new arrangements were introduced for funding the Youth Training Programme, to enhance the quality of the programme, and to emphasise in particular the attainment of qualifications. In 1992, the Agency's Manpower Training Scheme, under which assistance concerning training is given to businesses in the tradeable sector was reshaped to make it more relevant to modern business needs, in the form of the Company Development Programme.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the administrative cost of housing benefit was in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what he expects the cost to be for 1992-93.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the rates collection agency of administering housing benefit was £6,004,792 in 1990-91, £6,092,335 in 1991-92 and is estimated at £6,396,890 for 1992-93.

Minority Rights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider the entrenchment of individual and minority rights through a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland and supervision by the new CSCE high commissioner for minorities, with effective rights of intercession conferred upon the Republic's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 5 March 1993]: The Government are firmly committed to the protection of human rights in Northern Ireland and substantial protection is already in place. The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights exists to advise the Government on the adequacy and effectiveness of human rights provisions in Northern Ireland. Human rights is among those issues which may be raised by the Republic's Government in the intergovernmental conference. The question of possible further measures to enhance the protection of human rights was considered by the Northern Ireland political parties during last year's political talks. I hope that it will soon be possible to hold further talks to continue to consider what part the protection of human rights might play in any comprehensive settlement.

Potato Processing

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of all grants from public bodies or Government departments, including the Local Enterprise Development Unit, the Industrial Development Board and the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, to companies involved in potato processing, for the past five years; and, for each company, if he will give details of the number of jobs promoted by public funding.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 5 March 1993]: During the past five years financial assistance totalling £4,075,089 has been offered by public bodies and Government to Northern Ireland companies involved in potato processing. A total of 281 jobs were promoted as a result of this assistance.

DEFENCE

Relocation

12. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to relocate his Ministry's civilian posts in Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Decisions which we have already announced will result in the transfer of around 1,000 civilian posts from Yorkshire. Other proposals would result in the further relocation of posts. However, there will continue to be a substantial Ministry of Defence presence in Yorkshire.

Trident

13. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident programme continues to progress to time and within budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

25. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Government expect to reach a decision on how many strategic nuclear warheads will be deployed on Trident.

Mr. Aitken: The Government have made clear that our Trident submarines will enter service from the mid-1990s carrying no more than 128 warheads. The exact number to be deployed will be decided in the light of circumstances at the time.

NATO

14. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet other NATO Defence Ministers to discuss NATO defence policy.

Mr. Rifkind: The next plenary meeting of my alliance colleagues is the defence planning committee and nuclear planning group in Brussels on 25 and 26 May, when I expect our discussions to cover a range of current alliance business.

Tactical Air-to-surface Missile

15. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of TASM.

Mr. Rifkind: We continue to study a range of possible options for our long-term sub-strategic nuclear capability; as I recently assured the House, I will make an announcement on the outcome at the appropriate time. The WE177 free-fall bomb is expected to remain in service well into the first decade of the next century.

United Nations

16. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held to improve the effectiveness of forces fighting under the United Nations flag.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We aim to ensure that our forces maintain their customary high level of effectiveness in all their activities. Where appropriate, units and personnel serving with the United Nations receive additional training and briefing specific to the mission concerned.

Bosnia

17. Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the RAF to participate in the proposed airdrop of humanitarian aid into Bosnia.

Mr. Rifkind: We have no plans to take part in airdrops of aid into Bosnia. The United Kingdom's military contribution to the humanitarian relief effort will continue to be made by participating in the airlift to Sarajevo and supporting land convoys.

Royal Navy

18. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what he expects the strength of the Royal Navy will be in 1994.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The strength of the Royal Navy will vary throughout 1994, as new ships enter service and others are paid off. A snapshot of the strength of the fleet on 1 April 1994 will be published, as usual, in the 1994 statement on the defence estimates.

Gordon Highlanders (Merger)

19. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration there has been of the proposed merger between the Gordon Highlanders and the Queen's Own Highlanders.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the statement to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 3 February, Official Report, columns 319-21.

RAF Chivenor

20. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department's annual process of recosting of the defence programme looks at all aspects and activities to ensure that resources are used to best effect to secure Britain's defence needs. Some adjustments to individual capabilities will be required to match the defence programme to resources. As the support programme is not exempt from this, I cannot give any firm guarantees about RAF Chivenor's future.

Nuclear Tests

21. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the effect on the United Kingdom's independent nuclear deterrent of a moratorium on nuclear weapons testing at the Nevada test site.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no implications for the Trident warhead programme, for which the tests have been completed. It remains our view that the minimum programme of testing is the best means of ensuring the continuing safety and credibility of our deterrent.

Aircraft Purchases

22. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the chairman of British Aerospace and other United Kingdom military aircraft manufacturers to discuss the cost of aircraft purchased from them by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State makes regular visits to many defence manufacturers to discuss a wide range of issues.

Yugoslavia

23. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held within NATO or within the WEU on the distinction between peacekeeping and peacemaking as part of their respective roles in the former republic of Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO and WEU participation in United Nations peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia are kept under constant review. The diplomatic efforts devoted to peacemaking are being undertaken by the United Nations itself and by the international conference on the former Yugoslavia.

Bosnia

24. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the volume of aid delivered to date by British troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Up to Sunday 7 March, 310 UNHCR convoys have been escorted by the British battalion group delivering 23,108 metric tonnes of humanitarian aid.

Compulsory Service

26. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce a period of compulsory uniformed service within the United Nations peacekeeping forces for all United Kingdom citizens between the age of 18 and 25 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Market Testing

27. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about progress on market testing in the armed services.

Mr. Aitken: The market testing programme in my Department has been substantially expanded following the publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality" in November 1991. The three services have been set challenging targets and progress is monitored by a steering group which I chair. A summary of our programme to September 1993 appeared in "The Citizen's Charter—First Report: 1992" (CM 2101. November 1992).

Procurement

28. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of procurement from British arms and equipment manufacturers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to table 1.10 of "Defence Statistics", 1992 edition, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available; they will appear in the 1993 edition.

Energy Saving

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the effect of the use of Chelec units in his Department at Bath on energy saving for his Department; what sum is being saved to the Exchequer by the use of the Chelec unit; and what proposals he has to adopt this unit in other of his Department's establishments.

Mr. Aitken: A Chelec heating control energy saver unit has been installed on a trial basis in one of our buildings in Bath. Evaluation of the device over the course of a complete heating season is still in progress. Wider use of this or similar devices will depend on the outcome of such evaluation exercises and on their being suitable for the type of heating installation involved. It is too early to say what savings might accrue or whether this unit will be adopted in other establishments or buildings.

D-Day

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to celebrate the 50th anniversary of D-Day in 1994.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department will be responsible for organising the Government's participation in the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the D-Day landings. At present, our plans are at a very early stage but will include high-level representation and the participation of all three services. Further details will be announced in due course.

Redundancies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men have had redundancy notices cancelled following his oral statement of 3 February, Official Report, column 319; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The statement on 3 February was taken into account before phase 2 Army redundancy notices were issued on 25 February. No redundancy notices have been cancelled, but anyone may submit an appeal against selection by 31 March 1993.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the statement of requirements relative to the proposal to site the integrated Army personnel centre outside London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to appendix 1 to annex A of the consultative document, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 13 January.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tayside, North, (Mr. Walker) on 4 March, Official Report, column 229, if the Roberts study team involved in the assessment of sites for the integrated Army personnel centre has visited the building in Stockport referred to in his answer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, but other Ministry of Defence officials have done so.

Surface-to-Air Missile

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the progress of the medium surface-to-air missile programme.

Mr. Aitken: Work on the evaluation of MSAM tenders was completed last September and we are now assessing the options in the context of our overall defence requirements. No decision has yet been made.

Vulcan Bomber

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Upminster (Sir N. Bonsor) on 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 507, if he has an updated estimate for the running costs of the Vulcan bomber in 1992-93.

Mr. Aitken: The full operating cost for the Vulcan during financial year 1992-93 will amount to approximately £260,000.

Upholder Submarines

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with (a) the Canadian Government or (b) any other party about the sale or transfer of one or all of the four Upholder class submarines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what disposal price he has placed on submarines in the Upholder class;

(3) what is his best estimate of the production cost of each of the four submarines of the Upholder class;

(4) what is his best estimate of the total cost of the design, development and production of the Upholder class of submarines;

(5) on what date each submarine in the Upholder class entered service or will enter service.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 15 February 1993, Official Report, columns 71-72.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many diesel-electric-powered conventional submarines are currently in service with the Royal Navy; and whether decisions have been taken about the future of each of them.

Mr. Aitken: Three submarines of the Oberon class, which on current plans is to be replaced by the Upholder class, remain in service, along with one Upholder boat. The position on the remaining Upholder class boats remains as set out in the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), on 15 February, Official Report, columns 71-72.

Submarines

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving naval officers are currently qualified to command submarines; and how many of these originally qualified as commanders of diesel-electric submarines.

Mr. Aitken: There are currently 135 serving naval officers who are qualified to command submarines. On successfully completing the submarine command course, officers are qualified to serve on both nuclear and diesel-electric submarines.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOODS

Processed Potato Products

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of imports of processed potato products during the past five years.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

	Thousand tonnes raw equivalent
1987	393
1988	488
1989	543
1990	520
1991	556

Source: Her Majesty's Customs.

Pâté de Foie Gras

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 73, if he can now supply the figures for imports of pâté de foie gras for 1992.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 9 November 1992, c. 610]: Provisional data from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise shows 28,704 kg. of fresh and chilled fatty livers of geese and ducks were imported in 1992. All imports were from France. Statistics on pâté de foie gras are collected separately under the heading of prepared or preserved duck or goose livers. Imports of prepared or preserved duck or goose livers for 1992 were 88,991 kg. from France, 22,307 kg. from Belgium and Luxembourg, and 30,427 kg. from Germany.

Live Animals (Transport)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what facilities his Department has at the port of Poole for veterinary checks; and if every live animal export consignment is given those checks;

(2) if health certificates covering live animal consignments give the total travelling time from market to destination; and what checks his Department makes to ensure that total travelling time under EC directives for animals in transit is not breached from market to European destination.

Mr. Soames: As I explained in my reply of 9 February at c. 553-54, Community law does not permit systematic checks on livestock at the Community's internal frontiers. However at the port of Poole, state veterinary service staff are available to carry out checks on a random basis to ensure that animals are healthy and being transported in conditions that protect their welfare.

The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 requires that a certificate detailing the origin and ownership accompany each consignment of animals. The certificate must also include details of their place of departure, place of destination and the date and time of departure of the consignment. For journeys exceeding 24 hours a journey plan is required showing the arrangements made for the animals to be rested, fed and watered, and, if necessary, unloaded and given accommodation appropriate to their species and the arrangement for feeding and watering in the event that the planned journey is changed or disrupted.

For journeys to other member states, local veterinary inspectors are required to certify the health of animals and their fitness to travel. These inspections may take place at a market where the market is being used as an assembly centre. Otherwise the inspections would take place either at the place of origin or where the journey commences.

Cod

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much cod has been landed by Russian vessels in United Kingdom ports since January.

Mr. Curry: The latest available figures show that 376 tonnes of cod were landed in United Kingdom ports from CIS vessels between 1 January and 10 February 1993.

Organic Food

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the main foods imported from Germany, Denmark and the Netherlands that are organically produced.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available since import statistics do not distinguish between the production methods of foodstuffs.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the value in pound sterling of the organic food imported from Denmark and Germany in the last available 12-month period.

Mr. Curry: These figures are not available since import statistics do not distinguish between the production methods for foodstuffs.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the grants or subsidies available to (a) Danish and (b) Dutch farmers and growers for the inspection, marketing and promotion of organically produced food.

Mr. Curry: I am seeking information and will write to my hon. Friend.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the acreage subsidy paid in Germany to organic farmers and growers.

Mr. Curry: I am seeking confirmation of the current arrangements and will write to my hon. Friend.

Mackerel

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all fishing vessels that have been boarded or called into port as a result of fishing activities in the south-west mackerel box; and if he will give details of any action taken in each case since January.

Mr. Curry: A total of 86 fishing vessels were inspected in the south-west mackerel box between 1 February and 4 March. Eight minor infringements were identified and warning letters have been issued to those concerned. Two further infringements are being pursued. It is not our practice to release details of the individual vessels involved.

Lambs (Mortality)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average percentage mortality figure for upland lambs during the lambing season.

Mr. Curry: The average mortality rate for upland lambs—exluding losses at birth—is estimated at 15 per cent. Actual rates will however vary significantly depending upon a number of factors, including climate, age and nutritional status of the ewe, lamb birth weight and husbandry.

Strategic Food Stockpile

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the strategic food stockpile.

Mr. Gummer: Since world war II, the Government have maintained a strategic food stockpile to help feed the civil population during a period of recovery should there be a major military attack. In July 1991 I announced a phased reduction over five years to achieve a smaller, more flexible stockpile consisting principally of ready-to-eat foods rather than raw commodities. This orderly run-down is now well under way as is the disposal of remaining emergency feeding equipment announced at the same time.

Latest assessments of food supplies suggest that there are more than sufficient stocks to meet expected needs in the aftermath of any conceivable attack on the United Kingdom. In the light of recently developed systems for locating on farm, and wholesale and retail stocks I have concluded that a strategic food stockpile is no longer justified. I am therefore putting in hand the necessary arrangements to secure liquidation of the stockpile by March 1996.

We shall continue to maintain plans for the recovery of the food and agriculture industries in the aftermath of war and to plan for the distribution of available foodstuffs in times of crisis. Future plans will be reassessed in the light of evolving civil defence planning assumptions.

Livestock Farmers, Northern Ireland

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the incomes of livestock farmers in the severely disadvantaged areas of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Curry: Statistics of incomes of hill farmers in Northern Ireland are collected in the farm business survey which has been carried out for over 50 years. The methodology is well established and the results are published each year in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom".

Net farm income is a measure of income available to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and return on tenant type capital. Net farm income recorded by the survey of livestock farms in the severely disadvantaged areas of Northern Ireland was £4,000 in 1990-91 and £4,400 in 1991-92. Forecasts made for the autumn review and agreed with the farming unions indicate that this will increase to £6,800 in 1992-93.

In addition to incomes from farming many farmers will have income from other sources.

Cash income, which is the difference between receipts and expenditure, may give a better measure of the actual net income available to farmers in any year. This will generally be higher than net farm income as it does not include as costs such items as depreciation, notional payments for unpaid labour and, in the case of owner-occupied land, a notional rental value. Cash income for livestock farms in the SDA in Northern Ireland is estimated as £10,400 in 1990-91, £9,700 in 1991-92 and is forecast to rise to £12,300 in 1992-93. These statistics of farm income are available in the Library of the House.

Cattle Registration

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on changes to the rules about the registration and recording of cattle.

Mr. Soames: Legislation comes into force today which requires owners or keepers of cattle to register that fact with their local animal health office. They will also have to record the deaths of any cattle in their herd books kept on the farm.

These changes are necessary to implement the EC directive (92/102) on the identification and registration of animals which was adopted on 27 November 1992. This will involve important changes affecting most of the livestock industry. Its objective is to set up a harmonised animal identification system to enable animals to be traced back to their farm of origin, for disease control purposes and for policing payments made under the common agricultural policy. My officials are discussing with industry organisations how these new requirements will be implemented so as to minimise the burden on the industry as a whole, including those who have charge of animals for only a short period, such as auctioneers and dealers.

The first changes affect only cattle. The directive requires that a national register of all holdings on which any cattle are kept must be established specifying the address of the holding, the name of keeper, and the holding number. As well as farms, this will cover all premises where the animals are kept, including slaughterhouses and markets, dealers, zoos and showgrounds. Animal health offices already have a record of known cattle herds, and will be contacting known herd owners to verify registration details. However, other owners or keepers of cattle will need to contact their local animal health office to supply them with their details.

Keepers will also be required to record in their herd books the deaths of any cattle, in addition to the information which they have to record under existing rules. To comply with these requirements an amendment to the Bovine Animals (Identification, Marking and Breeding Records) Order 1990 has been made and will come into effect today.

The directive requires ear tags for cattle to be coded to identify the country of birth. It has now been agreed that the code to be used for the United Kingdom should be the letters 'UK'.

The use of ear tags to identify all cattle, and this new format for tags, will become mandatory before the end of the year. Further announcements will be made later about the detailed arrangements. In the meantime farmers are advised to limit the purchase of ear tags, especially bulk purchases, to the quantities necessary to fulfil the existing rules until the new requirements have been announced. There will however be no requirement to re-tag animals which are already tagged when the rules change, so existing stocks of tags may continue to be used for the time being.

The directive also covers sheep, goats and pigs. The rules for these species are less detailed and do not come into force for some time. Further announcements will be made as implementation measures are developed.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year of the last 10 years, the number of police officers in the Metropolitan police area per head of population and the actual numbers used in the calculation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows:

	Population	Establishment	Ratio
1982	7,329,000	26,615	1:275
1983	7,214,000	26,915	1:268
1984	7,200,000	27,115	1:266
1985	7,202,000	27,165	1:265
1986	7,241,000	27,515	1:263
1987	7,247,000	27,815	1:261
1988	7,237,000	28,115	1:257
1989	7,201,000	28,415	1:253
1990	7,223,000	28,423	1:254
1991	7,260,000	28,439	1:255
1992	7,284,000	28,680	1:254

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement to the House on 2 March, Official Report, column 139, what he estimates will be the total capital costs of the secure units; and how much will be available in the current financial year and in each of the next five years.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend indicated in his statement on 2 March, at columns 139-42, we are now working up detailed plans for the introduction of a new secure training order for persistent juvenile offenders between the ages of 12 and 15. At this stage, it is not possible to provide detailed estimates of the extra capital provision likely to be required for this purpose.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department's expenditure on official entertainment in the financial year 1991-92 was £28,094; and in the current financial year, to 28 February, is £16,387.

Cleveland Alternatives for Young People

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 609, if he will give funding to revive the Cleveland Alternatives for Young People project.

Mr. Jack: I understand that the Cleveland Alternatives for Young People project, which originally received funding from the Department of Health, is now a part of the local authority's youth justice team and that its services continue to be offered by the local authority.

Andrew Ohene

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a statement about the death of Andrew Ohene in Swaleside prison on 13 June 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the inquest into the death of Mr. Ohene, which concluded on 5 February 1993, the jury recorded the verdict that death was caused by "misadventure aggravated by lack of care". Following the inquest, the prison service operational director with responsibility for Swaleside prison established an inquiry into the circumstances of Mr. Ohene's death. The inquiry is being conducted by Mr. John Harrison, the governor of Canterbury prison, and by Dr. Roger Ralli, principal medical officer within the prison service's directorate of health care.

Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide by police authority for England details of the ratio of the standard spending assessment and the population served for the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the ratio of the approved establishment to the population served in each police authority area in England in 1991-92 and 1992-93, and proposed for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is shown in the table.

WALES

Syllabuses

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local education authorities who have adopted new agreed syllabuses since 29 September 1988, stating for each such local education authority whether the syllabus is newly prepared or is an adopted syllabus of another local education authority; and in the latter case if he will give the name of that adopted syllabus and the date of preparation.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I understand the local education authorities for Clwyd, Dyfed, Powys and Gwent have adopted new agreed syllabuses since 29 September 1988 and that none of them is an agreed syllabus of another LEA. I further understand that Gwynedd LEA has completed a review of its agreed syllabus and that Mid Glamorgan, West Glamorgan and South Glamorgan LEAs are at present reviewing their agreed syllabuses.

Schools (Daily Worship)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each local education authority (a) the number of determinations granted to schools by the Standing Advisory Committee on Religious Education under section 12 of the Education Reform Act 1988, (b) the total number of county and controlled schools and (c) the percentage of such schools which have been granted exemption from daily Christain worship; and if he will give the corresponding figures for Wales as a whole.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Development Agency (Merger)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for the merger of the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Tillery Valley Foods

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what authorisation was (a) sought and (b) granted for departmental officials from his NHS directorate to attend the opening of Tillery Valley Foods new factory on 1 March.

Mr. David Hunt: No specific authorisation was required for the visit, which was undertaken by the director, NHS Wales.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total received for Wales from the European regional development fund in each year since 1987-88; and what are the expected receipts for each year until 1996-97.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1987-88, the amounts allocated from the European regional development fund are given in the table:

	£ million
1987	57·8
1988	63·3
1989	38·8
1990	27·4
1991	89·0
[1]1992	54·9
[1]1993	61·9

[1] Figures quoted are based on an exchange rate of £1 = 1·435 ecu.

Negotiations are continuing over Wales' allocation for 1994-97.

National Technology Strategy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to develop a national technology strategy for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I already have a policy which actively encourages the strengthening of the technology base in Wales. This includes maximising the use in Wales of Government support means such as SMART, SPUR, STRIDE and other technology transfer schemes.

In addition, other initiatives such as the creation of Imperial Park, the formation of the Welsh relay centre and the publication by the WDA of the "Welsh Academic Directory" are designed to assist.

Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1987-88 (a) the estimated market value at 1993 prices of property owned by the Welsh Development Agency, (b) the amount raised by the sale of property, (c) the total floor area of property owned and (d) the total floor area of property sold; and if he will provide forecasts of the corresponding figures for years until 1996-97.

Mr. David Hunt: I have arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Gentleman, and for a copy of his response to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the finance for the work of the Welsh Development Agency has come from European Community sources in each year since 1987-88; and how much is expected to come from European Community sources in each year to 1996-97.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for the period 1987-88 to 1992-93 are set out in the table:

Finance from the European Community

1987-88	502,166
1988-89	2,560,725
1989-90	1,759,046
1990-91	3,917,682
1991-92	1,231,505
[1]1992-93	804,252

[1] To 5 March 1993.

Note: Figures include loans from the European Coal and Steel Community for which the WDA acts as agents.

EC funding for future years will be dependent upon the number of successful bids made by the agency.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much has been allocated to and how much has been spent of the Welsh Development Agency's technology growth fund budget, in each of the last four years;

(2) if he will list the projects which have been funded from the Welsh Development Agency's technology growth fund budget in each of the last three years; and what was the funding level granted to each project.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Development Agency's technology growth fund—TGF—is supported from its investment, grant in aid budget which includes a number of other investments. TGF expenditure in each of the last three years and a forecast outturn for the current year is as follows:

Total WDA technology growth fund payments

1989-90	540,000
1990-91	120,000
1991-92	92,500
1992-93	400,000

I am not able to provide details of support to individual companies as this may be commercially sensitive.

Organic Farming

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve investment in Welsh organic farming.

Mr. David Hunt: I am considering a new grant scheme to encourage organic methods of production on farms and holdings in Wales. A consultation paper will be issued shortly.

High Technology Training

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to improve the quality of training in high technology in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A rigorous quality standard is applied to high technology training under employment training in Wales. A comprehensive quality system, based on the European quality award and developed by the department in collaboration with the Wales Quality Centre, is used by training and enterprise councils in contracting with their training providers.

Under the new training for work programme I expect all Welsh TECs to continue to offer quality training in high technology skills.

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total cost of services provided by local authorities and other public bodies in connection with the official duties of lords lieutenant in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Personal expenses arising from the official duties of lords lieutenant in Wales are paid by the Welsh Office. Expenditure in 1992-93 is estimated to be £16,500. Information on the cost of services provided by local authorities and other public bodies is not held centrally.

RECHAR Programme

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the projects in Wales that have gained approval under the European Community's RECHAR programme to date and the amount of funding granted.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budget for each training and enterprise council in Wales for 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 10 November 1992, at column 723.

Education (Special Needs)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase available resources to local education authorities in Wales to assist with promoting policies of integrating children with special educational needs in mainstream schools; and how much has been allocated to each local education authority for this specific purpose in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Resources for local authorities are not hypothecated and it is for authorities to determine funding for integration in the light of local circumstances and priorities. For 1993-94, under the grants for education support and training—GEST—programme, the Welsh Office is making grant available to local education authorities to support expenditure of £223,000 on projects for the integration of children with special educational needs into mainstream settings. The Department has also invited applications from county joint planning teams for pump priming funding under the mental handicap strategy for integration in education.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. David Hunt: There have been none.

Local Government

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he received during the consultation period on the future of local government in Wales; how many of these representations urged him to abolish Montgomeryshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Since June 1991 I have received many tens of thousands of representations in the form of letters, petitions and other submissions including a small number who favoured unitary authority status for Powys.

Substance Advisory Committee

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will grant funding to the substance advisory committee to enable it to employ a full-time worker in the Llandrindod Wells area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This financial year the Welsh Office has allocated to Powys health authority over £131,000 from central funds for combating drugs misuse, to supplement the authority's own investment in this field of work. The location of the drugs misuse workers is a matter for the health authority.

Drugs Dependency

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of drugs dependency have been recorded in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available in the form requested. Figures relating to the number of first admissions to mental illness hospitals for drugs-related diagnoses are published in "Mental Health Statistics for Wales". The latest information on the number of addicts in Wales notified by medical practitioners to the chief medical officer at the Home Office is published in "Statistics of Drug Addicts notified to the Home Office, UK 1991: Area tables". Copies of these publications are available in the Libraries of the House.

Further information is available from the Welsh drug misuse database, which was set up in April 1991. The database records anonymous information on individuals applying to voluntary/statutory drugs services of general practitioners in Wales with problems relating to the misuse of drugs. A total of 1,759 new cases of drugs abuse were recorded in 1992.

Carmel Woods

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the future of Carmel woods in the Gwenlais valley; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received representations from hon. Members, individuals and organisations. An appeal for the registration of a claimed old mining permission in respect of land including the woods is currently before him. A public inquiry has been held and a decision will be reached as soon as possible after the inspector's report is received.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. David Hunt: The amounts spent by the Welsh Office on official hospitality were:

	Amount
1991-92	£35,982
[1]1992-93	£34,569

[1] 28 February 1993.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Nicaragua

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what quantities of aid by bilateral, United Kingdom and EC programmes have been given to Nicaragua in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following is the information.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Equal Opportunities

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he will implement to ensure that the equal opportunities practices established in the civil service will be continued in any areas where services are contracted out to private companies.

Mr. Waldegrave: Where services are contracted out to private companies, the Government do not intend to require particular employment policies and practices, and such requirements will not be included in tender documents. EC directives impose restrictions on the Government's ability to take account of non-commercial matters. Subject to these restrictions, departments and agencies may wish to give prospective contractors the opportunity to provide information on their employment policies and practices, including equal opportunities, that such contractors may believe is relevant to their ability to fulfil the contract for which they are bidding.

Citizens Charter

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements are in place for the modification of insurance agreements between public service providers and insurance companies, in order to underwrite the service commitments outlined in the Citizens Charter White Paper (July 1991, Cm 1599).

Mr. Waldegrave: No special arrangements have been established in relation to the commitments set out in the "Citizen's Charter", Cm 1599. Government Departments do not generally insure, as it is considered more cost effective to deal with claims as they arise.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The expenditure by my Department on official entertainment was £282,770 in 1991-92 and £52,567 in 1992-93 to date. The 1991-92 figure includes £234,126 directly attributable to the 1991 economic summit.

European Bioinformatics Institute

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on the United Kingdom's bid to host the European Bioinformatics Institute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am delighted to announce that the United Kingdom has been successful in its bid to host the European Bioinformatics Institute at Cambridge. This was agreed yesterday by the governing council of the European molecular biology laboratory. The EBI is expected to be fully operational within two years. Accommodation will be provided jointly by the Medical Research Council and the Wellcome Trust.

Winning this bid represents a significant boost for British science. Molecular biology is an exciting and important area of modern science, with great potential for industry, and the EBI will provide researchers with vital informatics support. Securing this facility for the United Kingdom underlines our commitment to international science and will reinforce our leading position in molecular biology in Europe and beyond.

TRANSPORT

Roadworks (Code of Practice)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the issue on approval of codes of practice under parts III and IV of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Three codes of practice have been prepared by the highway authorities and utilities committee, representing highway authorities and utilities in Great Britain, and have been approved by the Secretaries of State for Transport, Scotland and Wales. They are the codes on:

Reinstatement, approved under Sections 31 and 130, dated June 1992, published September 1992.

Diversionary works, approved under Sections 84 and 143, dated June 1992, published October 1992.

Co-ordination and Co-operation, approved under Sections 56, 59, 60, 115, 118 and 119, dated November 1992, published February 1993.

The Secretaries of State for Transport, for Scotland and for Wales have issued a code of practice, dealing with safety at street works, under sections 6 and 124. This was published in February 1993.

In addition, the Secretaries of State have arranged for the publication of the code of practice on inspections prepared by the highway authorities and utilities committee and dated July 1992. The Secretaries of State commend the use of this code although they have no statutory power to approve it.

All of the codes have been the subject of extensive public consultation before approval, issue or commendation. All apply to the whole of Great Britain, and all are published by HMSO.

Copies of all the codes of practice have been deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many night flights will be permitted at Heathrow and at Gatwick in the winter under his recent proposals, excluding aircraft which are at present exempt and assuming that airlines use the same mix of aircraft as in the past year.

Mr. Norris: At Heathrow the mix of traffic in the period 2330 to 0600 does not differ markedly between the seasons. Assuming airlines use the same mix of traffic as in the past year, the proposed winter quota of 5,000 for Heathrow would translate into about 2,000 movements by aircraft counting one or more under the proposed new system and there would be about 300 movements by zero-rated aircraft in addition to those currently exempt. The assumption that the mix of traffic at Gatwick at night in the winter season will remain unchanged is unlikely. The best estimate is that the proposed winter quota of 6,450 for Gatwick will translate into between 2,350 and 3,500 movements depending on the build-up between scheduled and chartered services. There would also be some movements by zero-rated aircraft in addition to those currently exempt.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport, excluding its agencies, spent £169,050 on official entertainment during 1991-92, and has spent £194,222 to date—5 March 1993—during 1992-93.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria used by his Department for the calculation of spending on roads leading to red routes in Greater London; how much has been spent in Islington; and how much is further planned on the A1 red route in Islington.

Mr. Norris: The specific traffic management measures to be introduced on and adjacent to red routes will be determined in local plans to be prepared under the direction of the traffic director in accordance with his network plan.

Some £680,000 has been spent by the Department on approved works on roads adjacent to the A1 pilot red route in Islington. Apart from maintenance, there are no plans at present for further expenditure on the pilot scheme in Islington, but the traffic director will be reviewing the route in due course to ensure that it is operating in accordance with his network plan for red routes generally.

Speed Limits

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate has been made of the effect a drop in the national speed limit to 60 mph would have in a reduction in energy consumption.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have made no precise estimate of the effect on fuel consumption of such a reduction in speed limits. The calculation is a complex one as fuel consumption would be affected by a number of factors, particularly the level of compliance with the speed limit, the rate of acceleration and braking, and the transfer of traffic to roads which already have a speed limit of 60 mph or less. However, the Government are keeping speed limits under review for both safety and environmental reasons. Our strategy is set out in the Department's document "Killing Speed and Saving Lives".

Road Accidents (Children)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children were (a) killed and (b) injured on the roads in each police authority area in England in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The table shows the number of children aged up to 15 killed and injured on the roads, by police authority area for 1990 and 1991.

Child casualties[1] by Police force area and severity: Great Britain 1990-1991

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of passenger trains using the core west coast main line are arriving within five minutes of their scheduled times for the latest available period.

Mr. Freeman: Under the passengers charter, punctuality on InterCity services is measured by the number of trains arriving at their destinations within 10 minutes of the advertised time. On this basis, the west coast main line's performance for the period ending 27 February was 89·2 per cent.

Twyford Down

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will order an inquiry into whether excessive force was used by private security guards to evict protesters from Twyford Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: No. Any allegations about the use of excessive force to remove trespassers from the Department's land at Twyford Down are for the police to investigate.

Motorways (Grey Boxes)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sets of steps have been built on motorway verges to connect with grey boxes; what is the purpose of the boxes; what is the average cost of the construction of the steps; what is their expected annual usage; and amortised over 20 years what is the predicted average cost of such use.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: No central record is kept of the total number of sets of steps or their total usage. The steps are provided for safety reasons for when maintenance engineers carrying equipment need to gain access to the grey boxes mounted on embankments or at the bottom of slopes. Such access might be routine—about four to seven times a year per site—or for emergency repairs which might be during the day or night. The average cost of a set of steps is about £1,000. The grey boxes house electronic equipment for the motorway emergency telephones and matrix signals.

New Drivers

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the introduction of probationary plates for young or inexperienced drivers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend is considering various options for reducing the high accident rate associated with young drivers. Probationary plates are just one of many possibilities. We hope to issue a consultation paper shortly.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which he has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if he will make a statement on his policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 March 1993]: As part of implementating the citizens charter, my Department has already undertaken a number of surveys of customers' attitudes and needs. Among other things, they have enabled the Department to adjust office "opening hours" more closely to what the public want. We do not apply a uniform rule, but we have a number of changes to provide a better service; for example the Driving Standards Agency now offers driving tests on Saturdays and summer evenings. We will continue to keep the position under review.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the casualties sustained by Her Majesty's armed forces' peacekeeping force stationed in Bosnia; and how they were sustained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been two deaths, that of Lance Corporal Edwards during an exchange of small arms fire by the warring factions in Gorni Vakuf on 13 January 1993, and that of Lance Corporal Rocke in the early hours of Saturday 6 March, the circumstances surrounding which are currently being investigated. There have been a further 48 casualties whose injuries were sufficiently serious or incapacitating that medical evacuation was necessary. Most have been of a minor nature resulting from road traffic accidents but more serious were a shrapnel wound sustained during a mortar attack, a ruptured liver suffered while taking exercise and an acid burn and fractured collar bone sustained from separate road traffic accidents.

Gulf Patrols

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost at current prices of the Royal Navy Gulf patrols in each year since 1987; and what are his estimates for the next two financial years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The costs of individual fleet tasks could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Test Sites, Australia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet his Australian counterpart to discuss rehabilitation of the former United Kingdom nuclear test sites in Australia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Australian Minister for Primary Industries and Energy met my noble Friend, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, in November 1991 to discuss the Australian request for a United Kingdom contribution towards the cost of further rehabilitation of the former United Kingdom nuclear weapon tests sites at Maralinga and Emu Field. We have no plans for further meetings, but there has been regular contact with the Australian authorities on this subject and we hope to respond to the Australian request shortly.

Belize

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many traffic accidents involving military personnel have occurred in Belize in each of the past seven years; what was the number of service men killed or injured in these accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

On and off duty road traffic accidents involving British Forces Belize

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	[1]1992
Number of accidents	13	6	26	33	22	50	[2]44
Number of injuries[3]	9	8	5	4	8	7	17
Number of deaths	0	0	0	1	0	0	6

[1] Figures for 1992 are provisional.
[2] Up to July 1992.
[3] Comprises only those injuries resulting in admission to hospital.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums of money have been paid to the Government of Belize in each of the past 10 years for the payment of road repairs and maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence does not make any payments to the Government of Belize in respect of road repairs and maintenance.

Road Accidents

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is the practice for boards of inquiry to investigate road traffic accidents occurring in other countries which involve armed forces personnel and vehicles and in which service men and women have suffered fatal or serious injuries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Road traffic accidents involving military personnel serving overseas are investigated by the service police in liaison with the local police authorities. The findings of the police investigation are submitted to command headquarters for consideration. A board of inquiry may subsequently be convened if the command authorities require an internal investigation additional to that of the police, but this is not normally considered necessary.

Welbeck College

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the examination results for Welbeck college, Nottinghamshire for the last two academic years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information on A-level results is set out in the table.

Academic year	1990-91	1991-92
Number of students	66	55
Overall pass rate (per cent.)	81	76
Average points per student in all examination subjects[1]	19.35	17.33

[1] Grade A=10 points, B=8, C=6, D=4 and E=2.

RAF Hospitals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 February to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), Official Report, column 740, if he will place in the Library a copy of the review on which he based his decisions concerning RAF hospitals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Gibraltar

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 255, what estimate he has made of the costs of deploying personnel from the United Kingdom to undertake naval control of shipping tasks at Gibraltar in periods of tension or war, hitherto undertaken by Royal Naval Reserve personnel; what plans he has to close the maritime headquarters; what use it is intended to make of the accommodation at HMS Calpe; from whose budget the annual costs have hitherto been met; on whose budget the costs of the Territorial Army element of the Gibraltar Regiment are borne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Naval control of shipping staff would only deploy to Gibraltar in the event of a major conflict. The extra costs of deploying an RNR officer would be approximately £160 per person travel costs, should a trooping flight be unavailable, and £1·55 per officer per day for mess accommodation at current prices. There are no plans to close the maritime headquarters. The accommodation at HMS Calpe will be used as a community centre by the staff of Commander British Forces Gibraltar and their families. The costs of pay, bounty and allowances for volunteer reservists at HMS Calpe fall to the top level budget of the Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command; all other costs fall to the higher level budget of the Commander British Forces Gibraltar within the top level budget of the Vice Chief of the Defence Staff as do the costs of the TA element of the Gibraltar Regiment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Agricultural Land (Building)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual estimated yield if a 20 per cent. tax was imposed on the enhanced value of agricultural land sold for building development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that a reliable estimate could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Self-employment

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals who claim self-employed status each year are subsequently found to be employed.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to review the principles of contract of service and contract for services in distinguishing between employed and self-employed status.

Mr. Dorrell: The principles of contract of service and contract for services are matters of general law. The application of these principles to the question of employment status for tax purposes is kept under review.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the Inland Revenue treats an individual with one source of income as self-employed.

Mr. Dorrell: Whether or not an individual is self-employed is a question of fact and law, and depends on the terms of the engagement concerned, rather than the number of sources of income.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the criteria applied by the Inland Revenue in determining whether an individual is self-employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidelines to help an individual decide whether he or she is self-employed or an employee are set out in the Inland Revenue leaflet IR56/N139. These are summarised briefly in the table. But the criteria must be considered as a whole. Any one of them is unlikely to be sufficient in itself and the relative weight to be given to each may vary accordingly to the particular circumstances of the case.

Does the individual have a final say in how the business is run? Does the individual risk money in the business? And is the individual responsible for meeting losses as well as taking profits?

Does the individual have to do the work themselves, or can they hire someone to do the work (and pay them out of their own pocket)? Does someone else tell them what to do?

Does the individual provide major items of equipment necessary to do the job?

Does the individual have to work at the premises of the work provider?

Is the individual paid by the hour, week or month, or for a specific piece of work?

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which publication, speech or statement his Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Sir John Cope: The "1993 Departmental Report for the Chancellor's Departments", Cm 2217, outlines the roles and objectives of the Treasury. The Chancellor's Budget statement and the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" outline developments in the economy, provide economic forecasts and set out the Budget proposals. The "Autumn Statement" and "Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement" set out public spending plans. The policies outlined in these various publications take account of implications for the family.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and the family life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Sir John Cope: These issues are considered by the Treasury in the formulation and implementation of the Government's economic and financial policy.

Taxation

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to the rules covering the claiming of expenses against tax in respect of a person opting for the payment of fees to a company rather than of a salary to himself.

Mr. Dorrell: I cannot comment on suggestions for tax changes at this time of year. But benefits in kind provided by a company to its directors or employees, and expenses paid on their behalf for which they could not obtain a tax deduction, are chargeable to tax on the individuals in the normal way.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Nelson: All services or functions in the Treasury that have been contracted out since November 1991 were either new services or functions, or had previously been contracted out. In all these cases, there was no in-house team to bid.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take to reduce opportunity for tax avoidance by full-time employees through the payment of fees to private companies in lieu of salaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 5 March, at column 341.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the number of companies which are being used as vehicles for tax avoidance purposes for individuals who have their salaries paid through the companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Inland Revenue has made of the number of single person service companies currently established primarily for the purpose of receiving fees in lieu of salaries where that person works full time for one organisation; and what plans he has to regulate these companies.

Mr. Dorrell: Aggregate information of the sort requested is not available centrally. But tax avoidance arrangements of all kinds are kept under review and action is taken as appropriate.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines have been issued to the Inland Revenue on the handling of tax returns of individuals who opt to register as self-employed rather than as an employee of a company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Whether an individual is an employee or self-employed for a particular engagement is a question of fact and law. Inland Revenue staff receive guidance to help them deal with all aspects of tax returns.

11 Downing Street (Catering)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when catering for No. 11 Downing street was put out to contract; if this was by public tender; how many tenders were received; and for how long the contract will run.

Mr. Nelson: There is no single contract covering the provision of catering services for official functions at No. 11 Downing street. Arrangements are made for individual functions as and when they arise.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in levels of trade in manufacturing between (a) the second half of 1973 and September 1992 and (b) since September 1992.

Mr. Nelson: The latest information is available from table A9 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and its annual supplement which are available in the Library of the House, and from the Central Statistical Office database which can also be accessed through the Library.

Skills and Qualifications

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement giving the details of those policies which have been introduced by his Department in each of the last five years in order positively to encourage individuals to improve their skills and qualifications.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 March 1993]: In the 1991 Finance Act my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, introduced tax relief at source for fees paid by an individual for training towards most national vocational qualifications and their Scottish equivalents.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the possible impact upon the property market of the abolition of stamp duty on the purchase of houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 March 1993]: We have received a number of representations about stamp duty on land and buildings. I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Council Tax

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether listing officers are required to correct factual errors on the council tax valuation list which are brought to their attention before 1 April.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Listing officers are required to take such steps as are reasonably practicable in the time available to ensure valuation lists are accurately compiled on 1 April 1993. This will include taking account where possible of factual errors brought to their attention before that date.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of domestic properties located on registered agricultural holdings in England and Wales have been valued for council tax purposes (a) by officers of the Valuation Office agency and (b) by valuers engaged from the private sector.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The valuation for banding of all known composite dwellings was undertaken by officers of the Valuation Office.

Small Firms

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those regulations affecting small firms which have been abolished by his Department in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 March 1993]: This information is not available in the precise form requested. The Chancellor is fully committed to relieving the regulatory burden on small businesses to the maximum possible extent. A significant number of taxes have been abolished altogether, including car tax, the investment income surcharge, the national insurance surcharge, development land tax, on-course betting duty, capital duty and a number of stamp duties. Both Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have made major contributions to reducing the burden of tax administration on small businesses. Each Department has its own deregulation unit, strategically placed to ensure that deregulation is well to the fore when policy options are being considered. Measures implemented in recent years include significant increases in the threshold for VAT registration, the introduction of a cash accounting scheme to simplify VAT administration for smaller traders, increases in the corporation tax threshold, the introduction of an option for small businesses to submit three-line accounts instead of full accounts, and a major and continuing programme in both Departments to cut down on and simplify the forms which businesses have to complete.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Responsibility for market testing has been passed to the efficiency unit of the Cabinet Office, which will be issuing guidance shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

War Crimes

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what personnel and resources in the Crown prosecution service are now being devoted to the investigation and possible prosecution of recent war crimes.

The Solicitor-General: The war crimes unit of the Crown prosecution service, which was established to advise the police on war crimes committed between 1939 and 1945, is made up of seven lawyers together with appropriate administrative staff. The unit also provides advice to the Metropolitan police in connection with their inquiry concerning the Falkland Islands. The latter is the most recent allegation of war crimes on which the unit is currently giving advice.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

The Attorney-General: The amount spent on official entertainment in the departments for which I am responsible, the Crown prosecution service, the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Serious Fraud Office, and the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, in 1991-92 totalled £32,118. The amount spent in 1992-93 as at 28 February 1993, totalled £27,563.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competition Legislation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has under competition legislation to investigate the role of major retailers in decisions by manufacturers to withdraw supplies from other retail outlets.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the competition legislation, the responsibility for investigating allegations of anti-competitive practices and restrictive practices lies with the Director General of Fair Trading. Unregistered registrable restrictive agreements can be addressed under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976, while refusal to supply can be tackled under the Competition Act 1980 or the Resale Prices Act 1980.

Kelloggs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Director General of Fair Trading the matter of decisions by Kelloggs in respect of the supply of products to Shoprite.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the competition legislation the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg, has a responsibility to investigate allegations of anti-competitive practices. I understand that Sir Bryan is looking into a complaint from Shoprite regarding the supply of products. Any evidence of possible anti-competitive behaviour should be submitted to Sir Bryan.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much electricity has passed from England to France and how much electricity has passed from France to England in each year since the interconnector link opened.

Mr. Eggar: According to the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1992", the amounts of electricity which have passed from France to England and England to France have been as follows:

Calender year	France to England TwH	England to France TwH
1986	4·4	0·2
1987	11·7	—
1988	12·5	—
1989	13·5	0·9
1990	12·0	—
1991	16·4	—

Figures are not yet available for 1992.

Propellant Gases (Labelling)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans there are to require the labelling of canisters of propellant gases such as butane and propane with warnings that if they are inhaled the consequences could be fatal; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have no present propposals to require the labelling of aerosols containing butane or propane to warn about the dangers of inhalation, but we will continue to keep the matter under review.

Foam Furniture

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will extend the 1 March deadline in respect of second-hand foam furniture regulations to enable clarification and safeguards to be written into the regulations in connection with the recycling of second-hand furniture by charities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has no plans to amend those requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, which apply to second-hand upholstered furniture, and which came into force on 1 March this year.

Royal Mail

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many proposed Royal Mail capital investment projects have not proceeded in the last 10 years.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested is not available.

Stepped Piston Engine

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is provided by his Department for the development of the stepped piston engine.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is not currently supporting any project specifically involving stepped piston engines. However, my Department does support other industry-led research projects including the development of vehicle engine technologies.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response the nuclear installations inspectorate has made to the representations from the British Computer Society regarding the computer safety system planned for Sizewell B; and what assessment he has made of the delay and the cost involved in implementing them.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate—NII—received a copy of the British Computer Society's—BCS—open letter which put forward suggestions for reassuring the society about the safety of the computerised primary protection system—PPS—for Sizewell B. The NII replied to BCS noting the points made. In the NII's view, none of these raise safety issues that are not already being addressed by the NII in its ongoing assessment of NE's safety case of the PPS.

Nuclear Electric has carefully considered the BCS open letter but have not identified any points which might undermine their safety case for the PPS. The company do not believe that any changes to the PPS are required and consequently do not foresee any delay leading to extra costs being incurred.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what shareholding Nuclear Electric holds in the European fast reactor consortium, SKB; and what effect Her Majesty's Government's recent decision to discontinue involvement in collaborative European breeder reactor research will have on the future of this shareholding.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric plc has a shareholding of 1·65 per cent. in SBK consortium. The future of this shareholding is a commercial matter for the company.

British Telecom

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the directors appointed as Government appointed directors of British Telecom since 1984 with their dates of appointment; what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the appointment of such directors; and under what legal provisions such appointments are made.

Mr. Leigh: Under the terms of BT's articles of association, the Government hold a 'special share' in BT. By virtue of their status as special shareholder, the Government are entitled to appoint up to two directors to the BT board.

There have been four such directors to date:

Mr. Graeme Odgers was nominated as Government director on 20 September 1984 and relinquished this post on 30 September 1986;

Mr. John Raisman was appointed as Government director on 20 September 1984 and relinquished this post on 30 September 1987;

Mr. Paul Bosonnet was appointed as Government director on 1 October 1986 and relinquished this post on 30 September 1991;

Mr. Geoffrey Mulcahy was nominated as Government director of BT on 19 October 1988. His current terms of appointment run until 19 October 1993. In addition to discharging the function of Government-appointed director, Mr. Mulcahy is a director of BT in his own right.

The Government's present policy in this area is that they do not plan to appoint a second Government director. The Government will keep the longer term issue of Government directors to BT in general under review.

Energy Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the policies set out in Energy Paper 42 remain those of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's current strategy on wave energy is laid out in Energy Paper 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward". An updated appraisal of wave energy "A Review of Wave Energy", ETSU-R-72, was published in December 1992, a copy of which is available in the Library. A decision on any future United Kingdom wave energy programme will be made in the context of the Government's overall review of renewable energy strategy in the light of the 1992 review of wave energy, the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group, the coal review, and Government energy policy generally.

Support for Products under Research

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the success of the Spur initiative.

Mr. Leigh: The support for products under research scheme offers grants of 30 per cent. of eligible project costs, up to a maximum £150,000 grant, to companies in Great Britain with up to 500 employees who need support to develop innovative products and processes. It has been a great success and in its first two years up to the end of February 1993 there have been 255 offers of grant worth a total of over £22 million. There will be an interim evaluation of the scheme in autumn this year.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ban the import of coal from countries where there is evidence of the employment of children or the exploitation of coal miners in the coal mines providing such coal.

Mr. Eggar: As a general rule, there are severe practical difficulties in identifying goods allegedly produced using child labour or exploiting labour, given the complexities of international trade. Also, it is highly doubtful whether the social conditions that give rise to such practices can be improved by restricting trade.

In the specific case of coal from Colombia, which the hon. Member may have in mind, the authorities have assured the Government that no coal mined from pits which employ children is exported to the United Kingdom. The Government call on all states which have ratified international instruments covering slavery, servitude, forced labour or child labour to meet their obligations.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects the safety-related plant status monitoring system to be fully integrated into the control systems of nuclear power stations;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that Nuclear Electric has carried out full safety checks on its safety-related plant status monitoring system; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the nuclear power stations where the safety-related plant status monitoring system (a) has been installed and (b) is under consideration for installation.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that Nuclear Electric—NE—proposes to employ the plant status monitoring system—STATUS—to augment current administrative procedures at their nuclear power plant for assessing that adequate safety systems remain available whenever equipment is temporarily taken out of service for maintenance purposes. STATUS is neither a protection nor a control system, and is currently at the trial stage and not yet in operational use at any of NE's plant. Before the system is put into operation it will require the agreement of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. NE has not yet asked the NII to consider the matter.

Directors Disqualification Act 1986

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long on average it takes from the initiation of an investigation to a conviction of those prosecuted under the Directors Disqualification Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In cases where the prosecution was brought by my Department and the conviction was obtained in 1991-92 or 1992-93, the average period between the date when an investigation with a view to prosecution was initiated and the date when a conviction was obtained for an offence under section 11 or section 13 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 was 20·3 months.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many successful prosecutions there have been in 1991 and 1992 under the Directors Disqualification Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Prosecutions by my Department for offences under section 11 or section 13 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 resulted in 83 convictions in 1991-92. So far in this financial year my Department has been informed of 54 convictions for offences under section 11 or section 13.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many investigations are pending under the Directors Disqualification Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There are 76 cases where my Department is conducting an investigation with a view to prosecution under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Consultancy Service

Mr. Booth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of consultancy services offered by his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to announce that my Department will be working with the training and enterprise councils and pilot one-stop shops to develop and trial a package of business advisory services which will build on and ultimately succeed the very successful DTI enterprise initiative consultancy scheme.

Businesses are not homogeneous. Strengths and weaknesses vary between individual firms. Their problems do not remain static. Rather they change as the firms and the markets in which they operate evolve.

In considering DTI's own business services I have, therefore, decided that we should begin to move away from the idea of rigid, narrowly defined national schemes towards a more flexible system responsive to consumer needs and delivered locally.

The new package of support will include a new diagnostic service, a consultancy brokerage service, continuation in some form of consultancy support and technology-related advice.

To provide for the development of this new package of services, I am revising the rate of subsidy paid by my Department under the existing enterprise initiative consultancy scheme.

At present the DTI meets two thirds of the cost of consultancy in assisted areas and urban programme areas and half the cost elsewhere. These rates will be reduced to one half the cost in assisted areas and one third elsewhere. The revised rates will apply for all applications received after 4 pm on Wednesday 24 March 1993.

The scheme will continue until 31 March 1994 as originally scheduled.

Beyond that I am convinced that consultancy support will have a continuing role to play. The new flexible package will enable it to continue beyond the previously designated closure date of the consultancy scheme.

The new services will be developed, trialed and introduced alongside the consultancy scheme to ensure a smooth transition to the new arrangements.

I am convinced that the comprehensive range of local services outlined in these proposals, contracted through TECs and delivered through the one-stop shops where they exist and through TECs elsewhere, will provide high-quality support for business. It will not only provide support suited to business needs; it will also make cost effective use of public funds.

In doing so it will enable the Department to assist a larger number of firms than at present while enabling them to choose from a wider variety of support services which meet their needs.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the surplus in the Post Office superannuation fund can be attributed to (a) the Royal Mail, (b) Post Office Counters and (c) Parcelforce.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 5 March 1993]: The Post Office has two pension schemes: the Post Office staff superannuation scheme, which all staff who were employed before 1 April 1987 were eligible to join, and the Post Office pension scheme which is open to all staff who have joined the Post Office since 1 April 1987. Both these schemes are Post Office-wide schemes, and there has never been any attribution of any part of their surpluses to any of the constituent businesses of the Post Office. This information is therefore not available.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent research has been undertaken into the levels of Japanese and United States investment in the United Kingdom and the factors encouraging or discouraging such investment.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Specifically commissioned research into the levels of Japanese and United States investment in the United Kingdom is not necessary since information on this is reported regularly by various governmental and other bodies.

My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau commissions research from consultants to assist its promotion of the United Kingdom as the preferred location for manufacturing investment in Europe. This information is not published as it is commercially sensitive and would be of value to competitors.

Qualifications and Skills

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement giving the details of those policies which have been introduced by his Department in each of the last five years in order positively to encourage individuals to improve their skills and qualifications.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 March 1993]: My Department aims to ensure British business has access to an adequate supply of people with the right skills and attributes. It does this by encouraging business to invest in the training of its work force, listening to what business has to say, and, where appropriate, influencing the policies of the Department for Education and the Department of Employment who have primary responsibility for education and training. Specific programmes supported by my Department in furtherance of these aims include the teaching company scheme, senior academics into industry and the Shell technology enterprise programme.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry or the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which his policies can more effectively encourage individuals to improve their qualifications or skills.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The President of the Board of Trade regularly meets a range of industrial bodies to discuss issues of concern to industry, including qualifications and skills.

Airbus Agreement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the full terms of the US-EC Airbus agreement (a) in respect of aircraft engines and (b) in respect of other matters.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Since the agreement applies only to support offered for the development of the airframes of large civil aircraft, it does not contain provisions relating to aero-engines. However, the agreement commits the signatories to seek its multilateralisation and its expansion to cover aircraft of all sizes, engines and equipment, through the GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft. Negotiations are currently under way on this extension.

Copies of the agreement between the United States and the European Community have been available in the Library of the House since 23 June 1992. The text is also available on request from my Department.

EDUCATION

Music Teachers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time music teachers were employed in state schools in 1979, 1985, 1989 and the latest available date.

Mr. Forth: Information on the numbers of full-time music teachers is available from school staffing surveys. The four secondary school staffing surveys show the following numbers of full-time teachers who taught music at some point in the survey week and, regardless of whether they taught any music in the survey week, the number of full-time teachers who held a post A-level qualification in the subject:—

Maintained Secondary Schools in England

	1977	1984	1988	1992
Number of full-time teachers teaching some music (thousands)	10·4	9·3	7·1	5·8
Number of full-time teachers with a post 'A' level qualification in music (thousands)	14·3	11·6	9·2	7·6

The primary school staffing survey carried out in 1987 showed that 15,200 full-time teachers teaching in English primary schools had a post A-level qualification in music and that 18,600 full-time teachers had responsibility for curriculum leadership in music.

Research and Development

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the net expenditure on research and development activities by the Higher Education Funding Council, and its predecessors, the Universities Funding Council, University Grants Committee and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, in each year since 1979 (a) in cash terms and (b) at current prices.

Mr. Boswell: Estimated expenditure on research and development funded by the University Grants Committee, the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council from 1979-80 to 1991-92 is shown in the table. There are no outturn spending estimates for later years. The figures are based on a notional attribution of spending between teaching and research. The funding councils have not separately earmarked funding for teaching and research.

UGC/UFC and PCFC funding of research and development

1. Source: Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development, 1992.
2. Figures exclude research into the humanities.
3. Figures include PCFC funding for research from 1988-89 onwards.
4. Figures for 1989-90 onwards are calculated on a revised basis which is not directly comparable to previous years.
5. Figures for 1991-92 only include Computer Board.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what education grants or other forms of assistance are available to asylum seekers to enable them to take up full-time courses (a) while their applications to remain are determined, (b) when they have been granted exceptional leave to remain and (c) when they have been granted indefinite leave to remain; and what is their status, as seen by college authorities, when in each of the above categories.

Mr. Boswell: Mandatory awards and student loans, and help from the access funds, are available to eligible students on qualifying courses of higher education who have been ordinarily resident in the British islands throughout the three years immediately preceding the start of the academic year in which their course commences. Students who are recognised as refugees within the meaning of the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and who are now ordinarily resident in the British islands are exempt from the three-year requirement, as are their spouses and children. They are eligible for support from the date of their recognition as refugees. This provision does not apply to students who have been granted exceptional or indefinite leave to remain, for whom local education authorities are free to make discretionary awards. Discretionary awards may also be available for most other courses of further and higher education not designated for mandatory awards. Other assistance may be available through refugee charitable organisations in the form of scholarship programmes.

Further and higher education institutions may not, in most cases, lawfully charge a higher rate of fee to students who are recognised as refugees or have been granted leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom than to students who meet the three year ordinary residence requirement.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Boswell: Since November 1991, the Department has contracted out—that is, engaged private sector contractors to undertake work previously done by the Department's staff—without market testing in one area: the professional architectural scrutiny of school building projects. The successful contractor is Hurd Rolland of Berkhamsted; there was no in-house bid because this is a small-scale pilot to test whether external contractors can provide the necessary service satisfactorily.

Since November 1991 the Department has also let contracts as a result of market tests undertaken before that date. Previously in-house costings rather than in-house bids were used to frame value-for-money judgments.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to amend section 4 of the Special Educational Needs Regulations 1983 to require that local education authorities seek written professional advice on a child's potential for learning and the provision required to realise this potential as part of any section 5 assessments;

(2) if he will seek to amend section 4 of the Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1983 so as to secure that local education authorities seek out written professional advice related to the kind and level of provision needed by a child whom the authority decides to place in an ordinary school.

Mr. Forth: Paragraph 2(1) of schedule 8 to the Eduation Bill, currently before Parliament, provides that regulations shall make provision as to the advice which a local education authority are to seek when making an assessment of a child's special educational needs. We shall be consulting widely on the regulations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 so as to establish statutory rights for non-statemented children with special educational needs;

(2) if he will make it his policy to place an obligation upon school governors and head teachers to obtain professional advice regarding the form of special education required by statemented and non-statemented children with special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: Clause 153 of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, places statutory duties on the governing body of all maintained schools to use their best endeavours to secure that all registered pupils with special educational needs receive the necessary special educational provision. This clause also requires governors to report annually on the implementation of their school's policy for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to issue new guidelines to local education authorities on defining efficient use of resources within section 2 of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Forth: No. It is for local education authorities themselves to reach decisions on the efficient use of their resources.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 to ensure that local education authorities have a duty to ensure that children with special educational needs are not deprived of the opportunity to realise their full potential.

Mr. Forth: A child's potential is relevant in deciding whether he or she has special educational needs. The Education Bill, currently before Parliament, reinforces LEAs' duties to arrange appropriate provision to meet pupils' special educational needs where they are required to determine that provision.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 so as to grant the rights of parents to insist on an assessment under section 5 of the Act if they disagreed with any changes to statements of children with special educational needs via the statement amendment process.

Mr. Forth: Clause 162(2) of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, provides for the parent of a child with a statement of special educational needs to ask the local education authority to arrange for full assessment under clause 158 to be made. The authority shall comply with the request where a further assessment is necessary providing that such an assessment has not taken place within the preceding six months.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 so as to secure that local education authorities consider their duties to explore the possibility of integrating special needs children into mainstream schools under section 2 as part of the assessment and statementing procedures under section 5, and prior to considering their duties to consult parents under section 7;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 so as to remove the responsibility on local education authorities to satisfy themselves that the integration of a single child with special educational needs must represent an efficient use of resources.

Mr. Forth: Our policy is to encourage sensible integration of children with special educational needs into mainstream schools. Clause 152 of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, puts a qualified duty on local education authorities to integrate unless that duty is incompatible with the wishes of the parent.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to give statutory force to the principles outlined in his departmental circulars 1/83 and 22/89 relating to the involvement of a child or young person in determining the nature of his or her special educational needs provision.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to my remarks made during debates in the Committee stage of the Education Bill, Official Report, Standing Committee E, 26 January 1993, c. 1139-40.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to place an obligation on local education authorities issuing new statements or amendments to existing statements for children with special educational needs to secure that such statements are produced no later than the beginning of the term prior to the one when they are intended to come into effect.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to my remarks made during debates in the Committee stage of the Education Bill, Official Report, Standing Committee E, 26 January 1993, c. 1108-9.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to seek to amend part II of schedule 1 to the Education Act 1981 to secure that the form and contents of a statement include reference to any non-educational needs;

(2) if he will amend section 10 of the Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1983 so as to ensure that all statements refer to the amount, type and content of the provision to be made and the qualifications of the person designated to deliver it.

Mr. Forth: Clause 159(2) of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, provides that a statement of special educational needs shall be in such form and contain such information as may be prescribed. We shall be consulting widely on the regulations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to amend section 10 of the Special Educational Needs Regulations 1983 requiring a school to be named within a statement.

Mr. Forth: Under paragraph 3(3) of schedule 9, to the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, a local education authority shall name the parent's preferred school in the statement of special educational needs, subject to prescribed exceptions. If those exceptions apply or the parent has not expressed a preference for a school, clause 159(4)(b) requires the LEA to specify the name of any school or institution which it considers appropriate for the child and which should be specified in the statement.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to amend section 12 of the Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1983 to place a duty on a local education authority to whose area a family of a child with special educational needs has moved, to fulfil the needs expressed in the statement established by their former local education authority in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Forth: Paragraph 7(2) of schedule 9, to the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, allows for regulations to make provision for the transfer of a statement of special educational needs from one local education authority to another, and for the new authority to have the duty to maintain that statement. We shall be consulting widely on the regulations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 to ensure that children are not placed in special schools without the provision of a statement or the formal commencement of a section 5 assessment.

Mr. Forth: The Department's guidance in circular 22/89 is that children in special schools should normally either have the protection of a statement or be undergoing a formal assessment under section 5 of the 1981 Education Act. The Education Bill, currently before Parliament, will not make this a statutory requirement.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to separate the power to assess statements for children with special educational needs from the power to decide on and make appropriate provision outlined within statements.

Mr. Forth: Part III of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, makes it clear that the duty to assess, make statements of special educational needs and, unless the parent has made suitable alternative arrangements, arrange the provision specified in the statement, remains the responsibility of the local education authority.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to place a duty on local education authorities to establish a minimal procedure for the annual review of statements for children with special needs to include (a) the preparation of written reports and their submission to parents and (b) the granting of a meeting with parents to discuss the review.

Mr. Forth: Clause 162(6) of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, provides that regulations may make provision as to the manner in which reviews of statements of special educational needs are to be conducted. We will be consulting widely on the content of the regulations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to place a legal duty upon the relevant authorities to provide non-educational provision to children with special educational needs whose assessments under section 5 of the Education Act 1981 have specified the need for such provision.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to my remarks made during debates in the Committee stage of the Education Bill, Official Report, Standing Committee E, 26 January 1993, c. 1128-31.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to seek to amend section 9(1) of the Education Act 1981 to enable parents of non-statemented children to request local education authority assessments under section 5 of the Act.

Mr. Forth: Clause 163 of the Education Bill, currently before Parliament, provides for the parent of a child who does not have a statement of his special educational needs to ask the authority to arrange for an assessment under clause 158 of the Bill.

Schools (Access)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will establish a target date by which time all schools in the United Kingdom will be wheelchair-accessible;

(2) what plans he has to seek to amend the Education Act 1981 so as to remove from the category of children with special educational needs those children whose only problem is that the school that they wish to attend does not offer full and equal physical access;

(3) if he will place an obligation upon local education authorities to (a) seek professional advice on adapting a mainstream school for the needs of a child with special educational needs, (b) make an assessment of the child's mobility needs and (c) receive an estimate from a professional builder of the cost of the adaptation work to be undertaken at the school, prior to taking a decision under section 2 of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Forth: The Government do not intend to set a target date by which time all schools should be adapted to allow wheelchair access. Government policy is to encourage local education authorities to improve access to school buildings to facilitate the integration of disabled pupils into mainstream provision. When established, the Funding Agency for Schools will also contribute to the furtherance of this policy.

Youth Crime

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the answer of the Home Secretary of 10 February, Official Report, column 625, what future plans he has to increase the amount committed by his Department in 1992-93 under its grants for education support and training for youth crime prevention schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 9 March 1993]: No grants were provided for youth crime prevention schemes under the Department's 1992-93 programme of grants for education support and training—GEST. With the 1993-94 GEST programme, my right hon. Friend will be grant aiding expenditure by English local education authorities of £4·1 million on such schemes. Funding beyond 1993-94 will be considered in this year's review of public expenditure plans.

SCOTLAND

School Populations

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average size of each school population for which each education authority in Scotland is responsible.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the average school population for each education authority is as follows.

Average school population as at September 1991

NHS Trusts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it the policy of his Department to decline to advise health boards on ways of arranging transferring services to trusts so that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 do not apply.

Mr. Stewart: No such advice has been given by my Department. As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 23 February at column 565, health boards and trusts have been advised to seek legal advice on the applicability of transfer of undertakings regulations in relation to specific proposals for the market testing of services.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decisions to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Ian Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 17 February, at column 169. Of the functions listed in that answer, property management at the Scottish police college, the management and maintenance of court houses, the building and plan maintenance for the Scottish fire service training school and property management at the marine laboratory, Aberdeen were all previously undertaken by the Property Services Agency on behalf of the Scottish Office. The toll collection at Erskine bridge was examined and tenders invited under the procedures obtaining before the publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality" in November 1991. External tenders were examined against the existing in-house service. The audit of two national health service trusts involved new work. The Scottish Office audit unit submitted bids for the work but these were unsuccessful. I am encouraging in-house bids in all the activities currently being market tested.

Infertility Services

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the report produced by a working group of the national medical advisory committee on infertility services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The report is being published today and will be welcomed by all who are interested in planning and providing services to the infertile. It contains valuable guidance on good practice and on the organisation and management of infertility services at all levels of treatment. Accordingly, I have accepted, or commended to health boards, all but one of the report's recommendations which when implemented will bring much needed improvements to the services provided for childless couples. The one exception is the recommendation supporting the establishment of a centrally funded NHS service for high-tech treatments such as in-vitro fertilisation and gamete intra-fallopian tube transfer. I do not consider that these services meet the criteria for central NHS funding and have concluded that decisions on the provision of such services are a matter for individual health boards. Boards may provide or purchase high-tech assisted reproduction services from the general resources already allocated to them: as is the case for many other treatments, the judgment of the priority for these services, as compared to others, is for them to make.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many juvenile offenders are in Scottish prisons at ages of (a) 14 years, (b) 15 years, (c) 16 years and (d) 17 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The information is as follows:

	Number
14 years	Nil
15 years	Nil
16 years	72
17 years	152

The figures for 16 and 17-year-olds relate to prisons and young offender institutions but exclude those held on remand.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners on remand or after conviction have (a) committed suicide, (b) attempted suicide or (c) been recorded as having attempted self-mutilation in the last five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of suicides	Number of attempted suicides	Number of attempted self mutilations
1988-89	9	40	18
1989-90	4	18	23
1990-91	5	30	26

[2]1992-93	[1]4	22	13

[1] Additionally there are 4 outstanding fatal accident inquiries.
[2] To 28 February.

Prison Escort (Escapes)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many escapes there have been from prison escort in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of convictions for assault on (a) male prison officers and (b) female prison officers in each of the past 14 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1993]: Records of convictions for assault on prison staff are not maintained.

Shetland Oil Spillage

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sub-littoral monitoring of benthic marine communities in the vicinity of MV Braer has been undertaken to assess the immediate impacts of the oil spillage in the Shetland Islands.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 March 1993]: Adverse weather has prevented any structured programme of diving, although local divers have made occasional descents which indicate significant mortality of macro-benthic species. The marine nature conservation review team from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee carried out work between 25 February and 2 March but the results of this are not yet available.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring of the marine plants and invertebrate communities in the shorelines in the vicinity of MV Braer has been undertaken to assess the immediate impacts of the oil spillage in the Shetland Islands.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 March 1993]: Adverse conditions prevented immediate post-spill monitoring. Scottish Natural Heritage marine biologists have recently visited the area, but their observations have not yet been assessed. Monitoring will be kept under review by the ecological steering group.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funding he has allocated to Scottish Natural Heritage to undertake studies and other work in the aftermath of the grounding of the MV Braer.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 February 1993]: None. On present information, Scottish Natural Heritage currently has sufficient resources available to it to fund such research studies or other work likely to arise following the MV Braer incident.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The national health service in Scotland management executive wrote to health authorities in Scotland on 11 December 1992 on the need to seek legal advice on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. A copy of this advice is being placed in the Library. No other general advice has been issued by my Department.

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of new-build (a) general needs, (b) special needs and (c) sheltered houses constructed by local authorities in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Information on housebuilding by category of need is not readily available for the years prior to 1986, and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. The available information is set out in the table.

Local authority housebuilding in Scotland

Year	Category of need: General needs	Special needs[1]	Sheltered housing[2]
1986	1,192	540	273
1987	1,068	592	321
1988	1,249	632	312
1989	953	498	330
1990	[3]677	[3]294	[3]207
1991	[3]567	[3]419	[3]272

[1] Consists of sheltered, sheltered wheelchair, amenity, ambulant disabled and wheelchair housing.
[2] Includes sheltered wheelchair.
[3] Based on incomplete returns.

Water Services

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he received to his consultation on the future of water services in Scotland, in the form of (a) letters, (b) names on petitions and (c) individually signed postcards; and how many submissions were in favour of (i) continued control of water services by local authorities with no privatisation, (ii) control by a body other than a local authority and (iii) for privatisation options; and, in the last case, how many were for each method of private involvement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 March 1993]: In response to the consultation paper we have received more than 4,800 letters; 11 large petitions and a number of smaller petitions which together have over 85,000 signatures; and more than 56,500 pre-printed postcards some of which were received before the consultation paper was issued. The petitions and postcards oppose privatisation of the water and sewerage services. Other responses are being studied and a full analysis is not yet available.

Minerals Extraction

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 562, if he will give the amounts received by the Forestry Commission from licences and leases for permitting the extraction of minerals in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 March 1993]: The information is as follows. Detailed records are only available for the last four years; the amounts for the first six years are therefore based on estimates.

Year ended 31 March	£ million
1983	[1]0·3
1984	[1]0·3
1985	[1]0·4
1986	[1]0·4
1987	[1]0·5
1988	[1]0·5
1989	0·6
1990	0·7
1991	0·9
1992	0·8

[1] Estimate.

School Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools are eligible to have a school board; and how many have such a board currently in operation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1993]: A total of 2,907 schools in Scotland are eligible to have a school board. Of these, 2,199 currently have such a board.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Belfast Education and Library Board

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the number and (b) the proportion of applicants for positions with the Belfast education and library board in the last three years who were classified as (i) Protestant, (ii) Roman Catholic and (iii) from outside Northern Ireland or non-religious; and what proportion of each group was appointed to positions with the board.

Mr. Hanley: The information, as supplied by the Belfast education and library board, is as follows:

	Protestant		Roman Catholic		Non-denominational
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
1. Applicants
1990	3,722	50·12	3,349	45·10	355	4·78
1991	2,792	49·10	2,649	46·59	245	4·31
1992	1,959	46·76	1,949	46·53	281	6·71
2. Appointees
1990	118	47·39	108	43·37	23	9·24
1991	222	49·22	212	47·01	17	3·77
1992	122	44·53	145	52·92	7	2·55

Applicants and appointees from outside Northern Ireland have, where possible, been classified as Protestant or Roman Catholic.

Homelessness

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend the Housing Executive's new build programme to house homeless people in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Housing Executive's new build programme is not required to be extended to provide housing for homeless people in Northern Ireland.

Government Employees

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, whether prospective Government employees in Northern Ireland are asked to indicate on their application forms whether they are EC or non-EC nationals.

Mr. Mates: Prospective Government employees in Northern Ireland are not asked whether they are EC or non-EC nationals. Applicants are asked to state their place of birth and, if they have changed their nationality since birth, to state their nationality.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Mates: Expenditure on Department of Finance and Personnel official entertainment has been:

1991-92	29,000
1992-93	43,000

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much was spent of offical entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office, which includes the Private Office of the Lord Privy Seal and Lord President as well as the Judicial Committee and Privy Council proper, spent £6,782 in 1991-92 and £10,477 in 1992-93, to 8 March 1993, on official entertainment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prime Minister's Questions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 5 March to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), Official Report, column 334, how many of the five questions tabled for answer to the Prime Minister by each of the two hon. Members mentioned were (a) reached and (b) answered by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Newton: Three of the questions asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) were answered orally by the Prime Minister, and the other two were answered by me. Two of the Questions asked by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) were answered orally by the Prime Minister, one was answered by me, and one was not reached; the remaining question is due for answer on Tuesday 16 March.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

15. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a Minister from his Department last visited Cyprus to obtain information as to the situation on the island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Our high commission in Nicosia is in close and regular contact with both communities. I have frequent meetings with Cypriot Ministers, and all parties to the dispute, in London and elsewhere.

Since the last ministerial visit in 1983, we have believed it important not to undertake initiatives that could cut across negotiations by United Nations envoys in Cyprus itself. In particular a ministerial visit would raise problems concerning the nature and level of contact with the Turkish-Cypriot community. The timing of any such move must be most carefully considered.

31. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on what steps the British Government have taken to promote a successful outcome from the forthcoming United Nations-sponsored talks on Cyprus.

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to encourage greater progress towards a political settlement in Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We give full support to the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General to promote a negotiated settlement to the Cyprus dispute. Talks are due to resume in New York shortly. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed the way forward with Dr. Boutros-Ghali on 3 March and with the Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr. Cetin, on 26 February. We will continue to work hard to prepare the ground for a successsful outcome to negotiations.

36. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet the new President of Cyprus to discuss the situation on the island.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have congratulated Mr. Clerides on his recent election success and welcome his commitment to attend continuing negotiations on the intercommunal dispute to be held by the United Nations in New York. No firm date has yet been set for a meeting with President Clerides, but we hope a mutually convenient opportunity may be found in advance of those talks.

Dalai Lama

17. Mr. Illsely: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which members of Her Majesty's Government will be available to meet the Dalai Lama during his visit to Britain later this year.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that the Dalai Lama will be visiting this country privately in May. As a distinguished religious leader and Nobel Prize winner he is very welcome. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has indicated that, if a suitable time can be found, he would be glad to have a private meeting with his holiness. I do not know the private plans of other members of the Government.

United States of America

18. Mr. Ottoway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom/United States relations.

Mr. Hurd: United Kingdom/United States relations are in excellent shape and we expect them to remain so.

25. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United States ambassador to the Court of St. James's to discuss co-operation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs meets the United States ambassador on a fairly regular basis. They last met on 3 March.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what high level contacts have taken place between the United Kingdom Government and the United States Government on future relations between Britain and the United States of America since the new United States presidency began.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister visited Washington for talks with President Clinton and members of his administration on 24 February.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met United States Treasury Secretary Bentsen last weekend, and I have had meetings with Secretary Warren Christopher and Defence Secretary Les Aspin.

India

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of India about human rights in Nagaland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regularly raised human rights with the Government of India.

Sudan

20. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place concerning the situation in the Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have discussed the situation in Sudan with our EC partners, the United States and other countries which give relief, and also with Governments in Africa and the middle east. We are following up at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva the United Nations General Assembly resolution on the human rights situation in Sudan adopted by an overwhelming majority in December. We hope that the United Nations Commission will agree to appoint a rapporteur to investigate the situation in Sudan on a public basis.

South Africa

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of Governments of front-line states regarding progress in the Republic of South Africa towards ending the policy of apartheid.

Mr. Hurd: We share the wish of all states in the region to see non-racial democracy established in South Africa. We discuss progress on this with representatives of those states at every suitable opportunity.

37. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will have further discussion with President de Klerk and other members of the South African Government regarding their proposed constitutional changes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We shall keep in regular touch with them, and with the other main parties in the constitutional negotiations, as the process develops.

Angola

22. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking at the United Nations Security Council to support the Government of Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 29 January, the United Nations Security Council adopted resolution 804 which, among other things, calls on member states to render economic and technical assistance to the Government of Angola for reconstruction and development.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the leaders of UNITA since the beginning of 1993; and what was their response.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We were actively involved in United Nations Security Council resolution 804 of 29 January and the EC statement on Angola of 17 February, which condemn UNITA's initial rejection of the results of the elections of 29-30 September 1992 and call for a ceasefire and dialogue between the Government of Angola and UNITA. Officials, including our outgoing ambassador, have reinforced this message with the UNITA office in London.

Maastricht Treaty

23. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts about changes in the powers, accountability and openness of European Community institutions consequential upon ratification of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Edinburgh European Council agreed a range of measures to increase transparency and openness in Community decision-making. The first results are being felt, for example in the televising of some Council debates, even before the Maastricht treaty comes into force. The Edinburgh Council also welcomed the measures decided and announced by the Commission on greater openness.

29. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he has had with his counterparts in the other EC countries regarding the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs regularly meets his counterparts in other member states. The Maastricht treaty is frequently a topic of discussion.

Diplomats (Experience)

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many senior diplomats in overseas posts have any industrial or commercial experience; and if he will list them.

Mr. Goodlad: Forty-five senior diplomats of first secretary rank or above, have gained direct industrial or commercial experience through attachments to companies during their diplomatic service careers; 20 are currently serving overseas. Fifty senior diplomats have undertaken attachments to the Department of Trade and Industry; 32 are currently at overseas posts. A number of senior diplomats had commercial or industrial experience before joining the diplomatic service. The figures for these categories are not readily available. A total of 669 senior diplomats have trained for, and carried out, overseas commercial work. Of these, 433 are currently at post. Nearly half our senior locally engaged staff overseas are engaged in commercial work.

Kashmir

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of human rights abuses in Kashmir; and what representations he has made to the Government of India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received representations from a number of sources about abuses of human rights in Kashmir. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed the situation in Kashmir with the Indian Prime Minister in January, who assured him of his commitment to respect for human rights, that allegations of human rights abuses were investigated, and that those responsible for wrongdoing were punished.

Nuclear Conflict

27. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to reduce the possibility of a nuclear conflict.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Our strategy for preventing nuclear conflict will continue to rest on two pillars: the maintenance of an effective minimum deterrent, and wholehearted support for the nuclear non-proliferation regime. We attach the highest importance to securing the indefinite extension of the non-proliferation treaty in 1995.

Ukraine

28. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with the Ukraine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have good relations with Ukraine. President Kravchuk's visit to the United Kingdom on 9 to 12 February helped to consolidate ties, and gave British business men opportunities to make useful contacts. During the visit a bilateral treaty, which sets out the framework for future relations, and a number of other agreements were signed.

Bosnia

30. Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the United Kingdom has to contribute to a multinational peacekeeping force in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British troops are already an important part of the relief effort in Bosnia. They will no doubt continue to be needed. If there is a durable ceasefire and a workable agreement, there may need to be a United Nations peacekeeping effort alongside the relief operation. I cannot say whether there should be a change in the role of the British troops in Bosnia until a workable agreement has been secured and the nature of any peacekeeping operation been determined.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the suitability of Tuzla airfield in northern Bosnia for taking heavy transport planes; if mines have been cleared; what plans he has for using the airport to deliver aid; and what assessment he has made of the number of refugees and availability of supplies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current assessment of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees is that road access and delivery of supplies to Tuzla are adequate and that there is no need to open the Tuzla airfield for the delivery of supplies by air. The possibility of using the airfield in future is being kept under constant review but would require an extension of UNPROFOR's mandate as well as additional troops on the ground to secure the airport.

There are now estimated 70,000 to 100,000 refugees in Tuzla and more are expected following the recent fighting in eastern Bosnia. Shelter and supplies for the refugees are being prepared and the United Kingdom has already offered to provide additional aid to help meet the needs of the expected refugees.

Serbia and Montenegro

32. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to improve the enforcement of sanctions on Serbia and Montenegro.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are providing material assistance to help the customs authorities of Serbia's neighbours to improve sanctions enforcement. We are also contributing to international sanctions assistance missions to those states, and welcome the recent appointment by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe of a sanctions co-ordinator.

European Assembly

33. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, he will bring forward proposals at the next intergovernmental conference of the European Community, to put the European Assembly on a more representative basis.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have no present plans to do so.

Balkans

34. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in the Balkans.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our European Community partners have made clear our full support for the international conference for the former Yugoslavia. It is vital to achieve settlements in Bosnia and Croatia, and to prevent the conflict spreading into Kosovo or Macedonia. We are devoting considerable resources to the provision of humanitarian relief to those caught up in the fighting.

Yemen

35. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Yemen.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have good relations with Yemen. I made a worthwhile visit there in December. I was able to demonstrate British support for Yemen's move towards establishing a democratically elected government, and to support British aid and trade initiatives in Yemen.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 30, concerning Shenaz Begum, Afsar Khan and Shaira Begum, what consideration is being given to the submission of further evidence dated 10 February by the representative of the children's father; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British high commission at Islamabad considered that the further evidence submitted by Mr. Ismail Ghani on 10 February tended to support the passport applications of Shenaz Begum, Afsar Khan, and Shaira Begum but some doubts still remained. As the hon. Member knows, the case was subsequently referred to the Home Office on 2 March. Once the outcome of its inquiries is known, the passport applications will be considered again.

Minority Languages

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have signed, or have declared an intention to sign, the European charter for regional or minority languages; and which languages each country has specified or expressed an intention to specify, under article 3 of the charter.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following countries have signed the Charter:

Austria
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
Germany
Hungary
Liechtenstein
Luxembourg
Malta
Netherlands

Norway
Spain

No countries have declared an intention to sign and none has specified or expressed an intention to specify a language.

Poland

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the timetable for negotiations on Poland's application to join the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We support Poland's accession to the EC when she is ready. The Edinburgh European Council endorsed this objective. There is no precise timetable. The United Kingdom will work to use the association agreement to prepare Poland for the earliest membership possible.

El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's Government representatives in El Salvador concerning human rights abuses and the pursuit of the perpetrators of such crimes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's ambassador reports on human rights and other issues. The end of the armed conflict has led to an improvement in human rights observance, but we remain concerned by continuing reports of abuses. We will continue to support UN monitoring of implementation of all aspects of the peace accords in El Salvador.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government concerning the conduct of the proposed referendum in western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have been fully involved in consultations in the Security Council on western Sahara which led to the adoption of resolution 809 on 2 March on the proposed referendum.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Accidents

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many safety reports required under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations have been submitted to the Health and Safety Executive for each of the last four years; how many have been accepted as complying with CIMAH provisions in each year; and if she will list those companies whose submissions have not yet been accepted as complying.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

By 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is centrally available, a total of 668 safety reports required by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards—CIMAH—Regulations 1984 had been received by the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—since the regulations came into force on 1 April 1985.

Of these, the HSE considers that 207 reports provide sufficient and suitable information but that 109 do not. The remaining reports are still subject to the HSE's multi-discipline assessment.

It is not the HSE's policy to publish the names of those companies whose reports do not meet the requirements of CIMAH.

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) in which publication, speech or statement her Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of her Department;

(2) if she will make a statement on how her Department takes account of the family perspective and the family life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of the Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The objectives, activities and expenditure plans of the Department are set out in the latest departmental report, Cm 2205. Full account is taken of the implications for the family in developing and operating policies and programmes. For example, this January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched a booklet entitled, "Rising to the Challenge", which encourages employers and individuals to consider the advantages of women achieving their full potential in the workplace. In April 1993, a new out-of-school child care grant will be introduced, which will make it easier for parents of school-age children to participate fully in the labour market.

Training

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are taken by training and enterprise councils to ensure that proper training is given by placements with employers.

Mr. McLoughlin: All training and enterprise councils are aiming for employer placements, which form an integral part of youth training. The terms of their contract with us require that they satisfy quality criteria and provide each trainee with an individual training plan which specifies the work experience element.

Job Clubs

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the performance of job clubs in the south-east of England.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Hartley Booth, dated 10 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the performance of Jobclubs in the South East of England. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

A national study carried out by my Research and Evaluation Branch in 1989 concluded that nationally, attending a Jobclub increased an individual's chance of finding a full-time job by about 50%. This study was followed by a nationwide review of the performance of Jobclubs, carried out by my Consultancy and Management Services in August 1991, which confirmed the effectiveness of the Jobclub programme for the long-term unemployed. Several locations in the South East of England were visited during the fieldwork for the review.

Information is collected monthly to measure the performance of individual Jobclubs. The information is collated to give area, regional and national totals. Between April 1992 and January 1993, 41% of people leaving Jobclubs in London and the South East Region left to go into jobs. This compares with a national figure of 45%. Overall, in the London and South East Region some 56% went into jobs, further education, training or self-employment compared with 59% nationally. However, these figures have been achieved against a background of a 20% rise in unemployment in the Region over the last year, compared with a 15% rise nationally. London and the South East Region still achieves 27% of all our Jobclub placings into jobs.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Potato Processing Industry

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the potato processing industries five years ago and at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates for the potato processing industries are not available separately. The figures are aggregated with data for other food processing industries.

Self-employment

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of people who are simultaneously employed and self-employed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest estimate for Great Britain from the summer—June to August—1992 labour force survey, is that there are 250,000 such people, not seasonally adjusted. This total comprises 189,000 people who were employees in their main job and self-employed in their second job, and 61,000 people who were self-employed in their main job and employees in their second job.

Unemployment, Tottenham

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the relative position of Tottenham as regards unemployment levels; what assessment she has made of the extent of structural unemployment; and what consideration has been given to its designation as an assisted area.

Mr. McLoughlin: Meaningful comparisons of unemployment between areas with different sized work forces can be based only on unemployment rates. However, official unemployment rate estimates are not available at the level of parliamentary constituencies.

The criteria for designating assisted areas are published in the consultation paper "Regional Policy—Review of the Assisted Areas of Great Britain", which is available in the Library.

All areas are being considered in the assisted areas review, the results of which will be announced as early as possible taking account of the outcome of the coal review and after necessary clearance from the European Commission.

Training Places

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her assessment of the impact on the providers of training places of her policy that training and enterprise councils and the Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate should withhold 30 per cent. until job placement has been secured.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1993-94 the majority of TECs will receive between 25 and 40 per cent. of their training for work funding in the form of output-related payments for job placements and national vocational qulifications. Payment to providers is a matter for the TECs and they are not required to pass on to providers their funding arrangements with TEED.

National Training Partnership Ltd.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a further statement on the establishment of the National Training Partnership Ltd. and the scope of its intended operations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Training Partnership Ltd. is a non profit-making company, limited by guarantee, whose board of directors is made up of individuals drawn from TECs, national organisations and independent bodies such as the CBI. Its primary business function is to provide a central contracting service to national providers of training and TECs. The company is currently involved in contract negotiations and plans to become fully operational in April 1993.

Women's Issues

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the decisions of the ministerial sub-committee on women's issues which have been made known to Parliament and the public since it began its work.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to her on 5 March 1993, Official Report, column 310.

Clean Bake Ltd.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects her Department to pay the outstanding start-up grant to Clean Bake Ltd. of Southport and Skelmersdale.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 March 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

Although the terms of the offer of regional selective assistance to Clean Bake Ltd. provided that the second and final payment would not fall due until 19 August 1993, the Department exceptionally agreed to the applicant's request to submit an earlier claim for payment. A claim was received on 4 March, but without the necessary supporting documentation. When this is received, the Department will proceed without delay to consider whether the normal criteria for payment have been met. Grant is usually payable on a fully documented and eligible claim within 30 working days of receipt.

HEALTH

Prescriptions

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of prescriptions written by doctors who are (a) fund holders and (b) non-fund holders.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average net ingredient cost (NIC) per head of prescription items dispensed in 1991-92 is as follows:

	Net ingredient cost per head £
Non-fund holders	54·31
Fund holders	48·52

Notes:
1. NIC is the basic cost of drugs without the discount, VAT or container costs.
2. This information is derived from data provided by the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of prescriptions written by family doctors per annum; and what is the average number of prescriptions written per patient, per annum by doctors who are members of a fund holding practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. However, in 1991-92, the average number of prescription items dispensed per head was 8·6.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all medicines and treatments which are available on a prescription-only basis, whose cost price is lower than £4·25; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is contained in the drug tariff and the British National Formulary, copies of which are available in the Library.

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which publication, speech or statement her Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of her Department.

Mr. Yeo: The role of the family is discussed in a range of departmental publications, speeches and statements. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health discussed the role of the family at length in the National Childrens Homes George Thomas Society lecture in 1992.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on how her Department takes account of the family perspective and the family life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of her Department.

Mr. Yeo: Family perspective and life cycle are considered in relation to a wide range of departmental activity, including: many aspects of the implementation of the Children Act 1989 and of care in the community policies; improving parental awareness of drug and alcohol abuse; grant aid for United Kingdom voluntary organisations providing help and support for families and children, and for the United Kingdom Association for the United Nations Year of the Family (scheduled for 1994) and support for family members in their role as carers. Statistics collected by the Department also reflect this emphasis, for example: statistics on local authority services to children identify family placements. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys also collects information on a variety of aspects of family life; for example: the General Household Survey, the Family Resources Survey, the Labour Force Survey and the census.

Diabetics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department has finished its evaluation of the case for providing injection pens and special needles for availability on general practitioner prescription for diabetics; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We continue to consider the financial case for authorising general practitioners to prescribe insulin injection pens and needles for diabetics. Their inclusion in the GP prescribable list must, like other new additions to the list, be subject to the availability of resources.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of (a) conventional syringes and needles for the injection of insulin, (b) the cost of insulin, (c) the cost of insulin injection pen systems and (d) the cost of needles for injection pen systems; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Prescribable disposable syringes with needles cost £10·70 per 100. Disposable needles for use with syringes cost £2·20 per 100. A published cost is available for three makes of reusable pen injectors—£13·96, £18·40 and £23·86 each. The most commonly used pen needles cost £7·35 per 100, and retail at a recommended price of £9·80 per 100.

Insulin costs vary according to type and presentation. Insulin in vials for use with disposable syringes costs £0·67-£0·95 per ml; in cartridges £1·03-£1·13 per ml, for reusable pens and £1·80 per ml if the pen is disposable.

Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of ethnic minority and non-ethnic minority hospital doctors and general practitioners at the latest available date.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Consultant to Patient Ratio

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the consultant to patient ratio in each EC country.

Dr. Mawhinney: Data on the number of practising physicians per 1,000 of population for all countries in the EC are available from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). This covers all qualified doctors. Data specifically about consultants are not available.

The table gives the available information:

	Number
United Kingdom	1·4
France	2·6
Germany	2·9
Belgium	3·3
Netherlands	2·4
Italy	[1]1·3
Spain	3·6
Luxembourg	1·9
Portugal	2·7
Denmark	2·7
Greece	3·2
Ireland	1·5

[1] Hospital doctors only.

The OECD does not guarantee consistency of information between member states. The data are not directly comparable as training, career structure and nomenclature of medical staff and the organisational structure of health services vary greatly between the states.

Data on consultant-to-patient ratios in other EC countries are not available.

Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of nurses currently leaving nurse training schools who wish to serve in the national health service but find no post to go to; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities are responsible for ensuring that there are sufficient trained nurses to meet local requirements. With around 390,000 full-time nursing posts in the national health service in England, the matching of newly qualified nurses to vacancies is best handled at local level.

The Department does not routinely collect information on nursing vacancies or newly qualified nurses seeking employment.

Establishment and Finance Officer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the qualifications by examination held by her Department's principal establishment and finance officer.

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by family health service authority in England (a) the number of dental care payments made and (b) the number of dental patients registered in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is given in the table.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the oral statement by the Home Secretary of 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-42, if she will list the measures to be taken within her Department in relation to secure accommodation, care and control.

Mr. Yeo: We are proposing to implement a range of measures to strengthen existing policies. These will include:

- issuing guidance on measures of control in secure and other forms of children's residential accommodation;
- ensuring that social services departments, working with others, take a consistent approach towards the control of juvenile offenders;
- reinforcing the social services inspectorate's role in upholding rigorous standards in all forms of secure accommodation, including the new secure training centres;
- amending regulations to enable private and voluntary providers to provide secure accommodation;
- charging the Central Council for the Education and Training of Social Workers with ensuring that issues of control and standards of supervision of offenders are properly addressed in the training of social workers.

We will implement our commitment that local authorities provide an additional 60 to 65 secure places by 1995-96 for juvenile remands.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library copies of the correspondence between her Department and the city of Newcastle upon Tyne director of social services about the provision of additional local authority secure unit accommodation.

Mr. Yeo: There has been no such correspondence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers and occupancy rate of local authority secure unit places in each region over the last five years; how many children were in such accommodation each year; and what was the cause of their admission.

Mr. Yeo: Information held centrally about local authority secure units is published in "Children accommodated in secure units during the year ending 31 March 1991, England". The information published includes numbers accommodated in each secure unit at 31 March in total and by the legal status on admission, the number of places at 31 March in each unit and occupancy levels. The number of children accommodated in each former social services inspectorate region is also published.

Information is not collected about the circumstances of admission, other than the legal status.

Copies of the publication are held in the Library.

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what purposes a hospital transferred to an NHS trust continues to be treated as Crown property.

Mr. Sackville: A hospital transferred to a national health service trust continues to be treated in the same way as Crown property in respect of developments notified to the local planning authority before 1 April 1991 whilst the trust has an interest in them; in respect of any building work approved before 1 April 1991 until such time as the work is completed; and in respect of tenancies entered into before 1 April 1991 in which the trust is landlord and which would otherwise be assured tenancies under the Housing Act 1988 or protected tenancies under the Rent Act 1977. NHS trusts are exempt from the need to carry insurance under the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 (equivalent arrangements under NHS (Injury Benefit) Regulations 1974 cover NHS staff); from the need for motor vehicle taxation under the Vehicles (Excise) Act 1971; from the need to effect third party insurance for ambulances under the Road Traffic Act 1988; from most taxation in line with the arrangements for other public bodies, and there are exemptions in certain circumstances in relation to licences under the Medicines Act 1968. In respect of section 48 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, NHS trusts are deemed to be Crown bodies in relation to material communicated to the Crown for a particular purpose in the course of public business, and thereby are entitled to copy and issue copies of the material to the public for that purpose without infringing copyright therein.

GP Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by family health service authority in England, the number of patients registered with general medical practitioners in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested at 1 October 1991 is shown in the table.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider setting up arrangements whereby NHS employees transferred to non-NHS employers under planned schemes involving the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 can continue in membership of the NHS superannuation scheme.

Mr. Sackville: No. The national health service pension scheme is intended only for those people who are directly employed by NHS employing authorities.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the present range of oral contraceptives will continue to be available to women free of charge under the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have asked the advisory committee on national health service drugs to ensure that contraceptives to meet all real clinical needs will continue to be available free of charge on NHS prescription. There is no change in policy on family planning and we remain committed to the aim that the full range of NHS family planning services, however provided, should be appropriate, accessible and comprehensive.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of direct employees of each regional health authority; and what estimate she has made of the effect on staff requirements of the proposed reorganisation of the regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 4 March at column 221 about the numbers of regional health authorities' employees.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in her speech to the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts (NAHAT) on 23 February that there would be a rigorous review of the manpower and functions of the intermediate tier; with the view that regions should typically employ a maximum of 200 people against the current average of 560.

Local Authority Homes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require local authority homes caring for the aged to meet the same registration standards as those met by the voluntary and private sector.

Mr. Yeo: All residential care homes, including those run by local authorities, are inspected regularly by reference to common inspection standards and criteria. We expect authorities to act on inspection reports which identify shortcomings in their own care homes.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to ensure that women users of mental health services have the choice of a woman worker.

Mr. Yeo: The "Health of the Nation" key area handbook on mental illness published in January advises purchasers that when considering local needs they should take into account women's particular concerns. This may include the choice of a female professional including a female key worker.

Music Therapy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time music therapists are currently employed in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The number of full-time music therapists in England at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which information is available centrally, is 40 (rounded to the nearest ten whole number). Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Deployment of staff, including the number employed is a matter for trusts and directly managed units.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local authorities use music therapy as a way of treating autistic children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally. The Department is currently funding Professor Newson of Nottingham university to undertake an evaluation and comparative study of current interventions for children with autism.

Community Care

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the NHS management executive's report "Care for the Community in the 21st Century".

Mr. Yeo: The document referred to is not a national health service management executive document but a discussion paper which represents the output from a "learning set" of professionals drawn from the NHS and from local government and does not represent Government policy, nor the official view of any of the organisations who employ the members of the group.

The establishment of the set was supported through the resource management unit of the NHS management executive to enable an exchange of views between experienced senior people from different backgrounds but with a common interest in community and priority care services on a topic of their choice.

The "learning set" decided to distribute their piece of work widely within health organisations as a contribution to the debate on the future of community and priority care services, as one might with a piece of academic research. In the same spirit arrangements were made for distribution to Health Select Committee members and for copies to be available in the Library.

Medical Advisers

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical advisers employed by family health services authorities have had their performance assessed; and how many were deemed effective on the criterion laid down to assess their performance.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. All family health service authorities (FHSAs) are expected to have medical advisers. Individual FHSAs are responsible for salary costs of medical advisers and for setting in train any procedures for monitoring their effectiveness.

Guy's and Lewisham Trust

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish the report of the inquiry into allegations about patient deaths at Guy's and Lewisham NHS trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The report was commissioned by the Guy's and Lewisham NHS trust and publication is a matter for it.

Hospital Charges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a system of (a) billing or (b) charging patients for any elements of their stay in NHS hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans.

Children's Homes, Islington

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports she has received concerning the operation of children's homes in Islington; what proposals are being made for future changes; and what aspects she has asked the social services inspectorate to examine.

Mr. Yeo: An interim report by the independent inquiry into allegations of mismanagement in Islington's children's homes has been received by the Department. The inquiry team is being strengthened by the addition of a former director of social services. The inquiry will complete its investigation into the management and practice of the children's homes, the management of child care cases by the Islington neighbourhood services department and a range of associated personnel matters. The social services inspectorate will also conduct a full inspection of the children's homes service shortly.

Children in Care

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints she has received about children in care in England in the past year; and on how many occasions she has ordered a social services inspectorate inquiry.

Mr. Yeo: We have received a number of representations, some contain complaints but others seek advice or express opinions. The social services inspectorate does not undertake "inquiries" as such. However, on the instructions of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State it has undertaken an inspection of children's homes in Southwark and inspections will be carried out in Lambeth and Islington in the near future.

Air Pollution

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further research is planned on the causes of child asthma and bronchial conditions and its relationship to air pollution; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology. As stated in my reply on 8 June, 1992, the MRC is sponsoring some research into factors contributing to the rise of asthma and has set up a working party to examine the aetiology of asthma under the chairmanship of Professor A. J. Newman Taylor. It is considering a range of possible contributory factors to current levels of asthma, including air pollution. The Department is represented on the working party and on the MRC committee on toxic hazards in the workplace and the environment, both of which will consider areas of need for further research.

In addition, the committee on the medical effects of air pollutants (COMEAP) which was established by the Chief Medical Officer last year has set up a sub-group on asthma which will make recommendations on research relating to asthma and air pollution.

Whittington Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the deficit of the Whittington hospital for 1991-92; what is the projected deficit for 1992-93; and how this will be paid.

Mr. Sackville: The balance on the audited income and expenditure account of the Whittington hospital for 1991-92 showed a breakeven operating position. This was after a temporary increase of £600,000 in the cash limit from the regional health authority (RHA) under the brokerage arrangements operated by them.

The projected unaudited net income and expenditure deficit for 1992-93 is presently £70,000 after regional support. The RHA is currently in discussion with the hospital to identify ways in which the deficit can be covered.

Primary and Community Care

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications for grant for the commissioning of primary and community care under the new purchasing arrangements for general practitioner fund holders have been made (a) nationally and (b) in Stockport; how much each individual application has been for; and which applications have been granted.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 25 February 1993]: General practitioner fund holders do not apply for grants for primary and community care.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what areas of food production within the United Kingdom currently fall (a) within and (b) outside of arrangments made under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: Within the United Kingdom, all primary food production falls within the common agricultural policy with the exception of potatoes and honey. A Commission proposal to bring potatoes within the CAP is currently under discussion.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

1991-92	89,014·54
[1]1992-93	53,884·91

[1] To 31 January.

Bananas

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom's traditional suppliers in the Commonwealth Caribbean on the agreement in the Agriculture Council on the Community arrangements for bananas.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council agreed, at its meeting in February, a regulation setting up harmonised arrangements for the Community banana market. The negotiations were long and difficult but the final text of the regulation reflects the agreement reached at the December Council on the basis of a United Kingdom presidency compromise.

The new arrangements needed to satisfy a number of objectives: completion of the single market in bananas, compatibility with GATT, the needs of consumers and the Community's legal and moral obligations to the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries under the Lomé convention. Until now, those obligations have been met by the United Kingdom and a small number of member states and we were careful, during the negotiations, not to lose sight of the crucial importance of the banana industry to our traditional suppliers in the Commonwealth Caribbean. The common organisation of the EC banana market which will now be introduced will share the burden of the Lomé obligations among all 12 member states. The agreement will ensure that banana producers in the Caribbean can maintain a viable industry and it has been widely welcomed by them.

Ministers' Homes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent from public funds on approved work on Ministers' private residences arising from their ministerial duties other than in respect of security.

Mr. Gummer: None, but I refer the hon. Member to the Second Report of the Committee on Members' Interests —HC 469, Session 1992-93.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Walthamstow are in receipt of benefits; and what percentage this is of the age group.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in which publication, speech or statement his Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department;

(2) if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and the family life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. Burt: A substantial proportion of the activities of the Department of Social Security is aimed at supporting families, through the benefit system and through the proposed child support arrangements. Numerous speeches and statements have set out the Department's views on the family perspective and the needs of families featured prominently in the deliberations leading up to the 1988 social security reforms, as well as the 1990 White Paper "Children Come First".

The structure of the benefit system now provides two clear and distinct paths for the provision of help to families with the cost of bringing up children. The first is to provide help for families generally, while the second is to provide extra help for low-income families, both in and out of work.

Child benefit is designed to meet the needs of families generally and the Government remain committed to the principle of giving financial support to those who bear the extra responsibility of bringing up children.

The introduction of income support to replace supplementary benefit enabled us to tackle many of the deficiencies and complexities of the old system. Through the system of personal allowances and premiums reflecting the needs of particular client groups, such as the family premium for families with children, we are now able to direct help specifically towards low-income families not in work.

The cornerstone of our approach to help low-income working families is family credit. This now provides a tax-free weekly cash payment to boost the incomes of almost 450,000 working families, payable in nearly every case to the mother. Family credit is designed to:

(i) provide extra support to these families in accordance with their needs and ensure as far as possible that they are better off in work;

(ii) ensure that those who are able to work harder or for longer hours do not lose all or more of the extra money earned because of the withdrawal of income related benefits.

In our manifesto we promised:

"We will set up a new Family Credit telephone advice service to support working families".

The new family credit helpline will be set up from April 1993 to help potential, as well as existing customers.

Families both in and out of work qualify for housing benefit and for community charge benefit, to be replaced next month by the council tax benefit. Both benefits, like income support, feature a family premium and a structure of allowances to take account of family needs.

There is a need for social policy to reinforce and encourage parents' acceptance of their responsibility for providing for their children. Our new Child Support Agency, to be launched on 5 April, will take over the task of assessing, collecting and enforcing payments of child maintenance. By setting up a purpose-built agency charged with all aspects of maintenance, rather than the current fragmented system, we expect to see big gains in the extent to which absent parents contribute towards the support of their children. The new system should also bring greater predictability and regularity in the payment of maintenance—so that maintenance will contribute to creating a stable basis of income on which parents caring for children can build.

The Department also commissions research to analyse the situation of single people and families receiving benefit of various stages of life. All benefit statistics give a breakdown of the numbers and characteristics of the people receiving them. The departmental report—Cm 2213, February 1993—provides an analysis of social security expenditure and includes a bibliography; a copy is in the Library.

Fire, Banbury Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants' records were destroyed in the fire at his Department's office in Banbury, Oxfordshire; and if he will make a statement as to the probable cause of the fire;

(2) what action he is taking to see that claimants whose records were destroyed in the fire at his Department's office in Banbury, Oxfordshire, do not suffer undue delay in having their claims processed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: There was no fire at the Department's premises in Banbury—media reports were misleading. It is understood that the fire in question was at the local authority social services office in Banbury.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by year for the last five years (a) the number of persons employed by grade and (b) the annual cost of (i) the disablement benefit section, (ii) the contributory benefits (appeals) section, (iii) the social fund section, (iv) the income support (appeals) section, (v) the income support section, to cover all aspects of income support including housing benefit, (vi) the section dealing with income support for persons aged 16 and 17 years, (vii) the section dealing with direct payments to third parties in respect of fuel costs etc., (viii) the Child Support Agency, (ix) the Contributions Agency section, (x) the fraud and special investigations section and (xi) the reception area of his Department's offices in Castle house, Doncaster.

Mr. Burt: Figures are available only for 1991-92 and 1992-93 since the Benefits Agency was formed except for details from the Contributions Agency where 1990-91 information is held.

Such information as is available is tabled.

Unemployment Benefit

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will abolish the regulation by which unemployment benefit is reduced by 10p for every 10p over £35 received in occupational pension for those aged 55 years.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the conditions in which persons over the age of 55 years lose unemployment benefit arising from interaction with pension entitlement.

Mr. Burt: Unemployment benefit is reduced by 10p for every 10p by which an occupational or personal pension payable to a claimant aged 55 years or over exceeds £35 a week.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to review the benefit rules as set out in NI 230 in so far as they discriminate against persons aged over 55 years; how many persons are in receipt of a reduced level of unemployment benefit arising out of the rules; and what is the reason for the different treatment of persons in receipt of unemployment benefit arising out of the rules.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to revise these rules.

The number of people whose entitlement to unemployment benefit is reduced or extinguished due to the receipt of an occupational or personal pension is 26,400.

The abatement rules are in line with the Government's policy to target help to those in greatest need, particularly those who do not have the support which an occupational or personal pension provides. The reduction of the age threshold from 60 to 55 years was made to reflect changing patterns of retirement. Since the introduction of the original rule, increasing numbers of people have been retiring before the age of 60 with an occupational or personal pension.

Source: Half Yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants, May 1992.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people lose all their entitlement to unemployment benefit because of an occupational pension; and are such people still counted on the official register of number of unemployed;

(2) how many people lose some amount of unemployment benefit because of receipt of an occupational pension.

Mr. Burt: The number of people who lose some amount of unemployment benefit because of receipt of an occupational or personal pension is 26,400. In 9,200 of these cases entitlement to unemployment benefit is extinguished.

Source: Half Yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants: May 1992.

People whose entitlement to unemployment benefit is extinguished due to the receipt of an occupational or personal pension may continue to register unemployed for the purpose of obtaining national insurance credits. Those who do so will be included in the unemployment statistics. No figures are held for people who decide not to pursue a claim for credits and they could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will raise the age at which receipt of occupational pension affects unemployment benefit from 55 to 60 years of age.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

Income Support

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, columns 201-2, if he will (a) make it his policy to end the arrangements on the deprivation of capital for benefit purposes and (b) place in the Library of the House a copy of the adjudication officers' guide; and when benefits agency officers were last reminded of the provision of existing legislation and guidance on this matter.

Mr. Burt: There are no plans to change the present rules. Copies of the adjudication officers guide have been in the Library for some time. I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the most recent reminder to agency staff was issued in January 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has, following the United Kingdom's commitment to reduce carbon dioxide emission levels in 2000 to the level in 1990 for the emission levels beyond 2000.

Mr. Maclean: The United Nations framework convention on climate change contains provision for further commitments to be agreed for limiting greenhouse gas emissions in the period beyond 2000. The commitments in the convention must be reviewed at the first meeting of the convention's conference of parties, again not later than the end of 1998, and periodically thereafter.

For the present, the Government have no specific objectives for emissions beyond 2000. However measures taken as part of the programme to limit emissions by 2000 are likely to have a continuing effect on emissions thereafter. And, given that there is likely to be a continuing need to restrain emissions, the Government are looking at the options for containing emissions in the longer term and are carrying out research where necessary. Interim advice has already been given to local planning authorities on how land use planning might influence the need to travel and choice of travel mode, and hence affect CO_2 emissions from transport in the longer term.

Packaging Directive

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to secure amendments to the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste in order to (a) set targets for reducing the overall amount of packaging used and (b) introduce measures to increase the use of refillable containers.

Mr. Maclean: We believe that limiting the amount of packaging to be produced in the Community would be an unacceptable constraint on economic growth. Such a limit would be very difficult to enforce and is not necessary to achieve the environmental objective of reducing the amount of packaging waste going to final disposal. We believe the approach proposed by the Commission of setting targets for the recovery and recycling of packaging waste is more appropriate. We will explore in negotiation whether those targets can reflect the contribution made by refillable containers without creating barriers to trade or competition.

Catalytic Converters

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the projected decrease in emissions of nitrogen dioxide resulting from the introduction of catalytic converters takes into account the effects of cold starts and short journeys within urban areas; and what are the implications of these factors for future urban air quality.

Mr. Maclean: Projections of emissions of oxides of nitrogen published by Warren Spring Laboratory take account both of the introduction of catalytic converters on cars and of the fact that these do not control emissions effectively until the engine has warmed up. The introduction of catalytic converters is expected to result in a decline both in emissions of oxides of nitrogen and in average concentrations of nitrogen dioxide. However, peak wintertime concentrations of nitrogen dioxide in urban areas will be less affected because of the preponderance of short car journeys and of low ambient temperatures in winter.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the publicity budget of the Energy Efficiency Office (a) for 1986-87 and (b) for 1992-93, expressed in constant money terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Efficiency Office's publicity outturn in 1986-87 was some £18 million in 1992 prices, and the estimated outturn for 1992-93 is £8 million. The higher level of expenditure on publicity in 1986-87 reflects the short-term "Monergy" campaign undertaken at that time to raise general awareness of the economic benefits of energy efficiency. The EEO continues to run general publicity campaigns such as "Helping the Earth Begins at Home", but in addition is now giving greater emphasis to helping specific groups of consumers make energy efficiency improvements by providing them with advice and information.

Noise Abatement Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he now proposes to take arising from the Building Research Establishment's report on noise abatement zones; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received on noise abatement zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently considering the findings of a review of noise abatement zones in England and Wales 1976-1992. We will announce our conclusions in due course. We have received no representations on noise abatement zones, other than from the hon. Member.

Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public complaints, broken down by region and by county, have been received in each of the last four years by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will provide the same information identified for each installation complained about.

Mr. Maclean: The information can be provided in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. However, the figures for public complaints against processes are included in the HMIP annual report which is placed in the House of Commons Library.

Landfill Sites

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many landfill sites in the United Kingdom have gas control plant with flarestacks; how many of these have licence conditions incorporating the recommendations for combustion temperature contained in waste management paper 27; and what action has been taken against site operators who do not maintain flarestacks to a satisfactory standard.

Mr. Maclean: Waste disposal licensing is the responsibility of the waste regulation authorities and these authorities maintain public records of licensed activities in their areas. The information is not held centrally.

In considering applications for licences, suitable conditions are set by authorities to ensure that operations do not lead to pollution or danger to public health. Conditions are set on a site specific basis taking account of the guidance given by the Department in waste management papers. Waste management paper 27 explains that all landfill sites should be considered as having the potential to generate landfill gas and all should be monitored for gas evolution and migration. Sites should, where necessary, have control systems installed to prevent uncontrolled gas migration.

Authorities have a duty to monitor activities at licensed sites. They are able to revoke licences if licence holders fail to comply with the conditions attached to the licence and take appropriate remedial action if a hazard arises.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the levels of radioactive discharges into (a) the sewerage system and (b) rivers, in the United Kingdom, for each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: Discharges of radioactive waste to the public sewerage system and to watercourses are strictly regulated by means of authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP. Authorisations are issued only after a careful radiological assessment and impose strict conditions and maximum activity limits which ensure proper protection from such disposals for all members of the public, including sewer workers. Discharges in excess of the set limits would be an offence and could render an operator liable to prosecution.

Results of a research study conducted on behalf of HMIP by the National Radiological Protection Board into the exposure of sewer workers associated with radioactive discarges from hospitals was published in June 1991. It found that doses of radiation to those sewer workers with long exposure near to hospital discharge points are approximately 100th that of natural background levels.

Further research conducted on behalf of HMIP by St Bartholomew's medical college into the levels of Iodine 125 in drinking water show that actual radiation exposure to the public is less than 100th that of natural background levels. I-125 is a principal component of discharges from hospitals. Both these reports (DOE/HMIP/RR/91/030 and 031) are in the Library of the House. The studies form part of an HMIP-commissioned programme of research into the environmental behaviour of radionuclides.

A programme for monitoring radioactivity in public water supplies in England and Wales has operated for many years. Results from this programme are published in the Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" a copy of which is in the Library. Selective monitoring of private water supplies is also undertaken under contract to this Department.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Howard: None of the projects in my Department's market-testing programme which involves exposing in-house functions to competition has yet reached the stage where a contract or service level agreement has been awarded. In-house bids are being encouraged in every case.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the formula for arriving at the housing element allowed to local authorities under the housing subsidy application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department publishes, annually, two general determinations setting out how each local housing authority's entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy for the forthcoming financial year shall be calculated. These determinations are placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The most recent determinations were published on 17 December 1992 in respect of the financial year starting on 1 April 1993.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the rate of inflation included in the housing element of the housing subsidy (a) nationally and (b) for Wakefield district council.

Mr. Baldry: Our policy is to target housing revenue account subsidy according to the relative needs of each authority. This is done by targeting the two main components of the housing element of the subsidy calculation, guidelines rents and management and maintenance allowances, according to the relative value and characteristics retrospectively of each authority's stock. For 1993-94, we are increasing guideline rents nationally by 7·75 per cent.—5 per cent. above the underlying rate of general inflation—compared with a 7·1 per cent. increase for Wakefield district council. Management and maintenance allowances are to be increased by 3·75 per cent. overall but Wakefield district council's allowance will be increased by only 1·25 per cent. because the council's existing allowance is already very close to our assessment of the council's relative need to spend.

House Conditions Survey

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the reasons for the delay in publishing the English house conditions survey.

Sir George Young: There is no delay. The data are being analysed now and the results will be published as soon as they are available.

Housing Association Lettings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of new lettings made by housing associations in England for each year since 1979; and what proportion of new lettings were made to tenants receiving housing benefits.

Sir George Young: Information on the number of housing association lettings in England is available from 1988-89, and information on lettings to tenants qualifying for housing benefit from 1990-91. The information is as follows:

New lettings[1] made by housing associations (England)

	Number
1988-89	56,800
1989-90	60,400
1990-91	62,600
1991-92	70,500

Leighton Hospital Incinerator

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for the construction of additional road facilities to accommodate waste transport to the proposed waste incinerator at Leighton hospital in Crewe.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for Cheshire county council.

Hazardous Substances

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990 and the 1992 regulations made under it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This legislation came into force in June 1992. My Department has been closely monitoring the operation of the new controls since then and will continue to do so. We will shortly be asking local authorities to provide detailed information about all applications for hazardous substances consent received up to 31 March this year.

Service Pesonnel (Housing)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authority associations concerning the housing needs of personnel leaving the services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Advice to local authorities about housing for people leaving the services is given in Department of the Environment circular 54/75 "Housing for Ex-Servicemen and Ex-Service Women". Much of that guidance remains relevant, but the circular needs updating to reflect, for example, the third—1991—edition of the homelessness code of guidance, Ministry of Defence housing innitiatives announced in 1992, and the increasing role of housing associations in the provision of social housing. We will consult the local authority associations and other interested parties on the draft text of a replacement circular shortly.

Northumbria Water Laboratory

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will intervene to halt the transfer of the Northumbria River Authority laboratory from Washington to Leeds.

Mr. Maclean: This is a management matter for the National Rivers Authority.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the planning laws concerning the number of satellite dishes allowed on blocks of flats without planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Revised planning rules affecting satellite TV dishes on flats came into force in July 1991, following a review. When the 1991 rules were introduced, the Minister for Housing and Planning made clear that they would be considered again should the Independent Television Commission license another significant direct broadcasting by satellite provider or should another major satellite service emerge that cannot be received by means of an Astra aerial.

Housing Association Grant

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which have made representations to him concerning the effect of reduced housing association grant rates on rent levels for housing association tenants; and if he will give the proportion of these organisations which expressed concern about increased rent levels.

Sir George Young: Ministers receive representations throughout the year on rates of housing association grant and rent levels, and on the relationship between the two. There is no analysis available of which bodies have made what type of representation, but the organisations which have expressed views on this subject include the National Federation of Housing Associations and other national bodies, as well as individual housing associations and local bodies.

Council Homes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the first-year revenue cost in England of providing a two-bedroomed council home for rent

Sir George Young: The majority of new house building for rent is undertaken by housing associations and consequently the information requested by the hon. Member is not collected by my Department.

National Parks

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the future funding and organisation of the national parks.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy statement on the national parks, published in January 1992, promised legislation to create independent authorities for the eight national parks in England and Wales currently run as county council committees. I fully recognise the importance of introducing national park legislation at the earliest opportunity and I have repeatedly said that we will do so. We cannot commit ourselves to a specific level of resources for the parks, but I believe that our record of funding should give confidence that the new authorities will be able to discharge their various responsibilities.

Dumplington Development

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 189, on the proposed development at Dumplington, when he now proposes to announce his decision to the House.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's decision to grant planning permission for the development of a sub-regional shopping centre at Dumplington, was issued on Thursday, 4 March.

"Helping the Earth Begins at Home"

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many telephone complaints have been received about the "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" campaign.

Mr. Maclean: Since the "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" campaign began in November 1991, one telephone complaint has been received by my Department.

Homeless People (Deaths)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people have been found dead on the streets of London in each of the past five years.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in each year (a) at year-by-year prices and (b) at current prices the total amount of moneys made available to the travel-to-work areas included in the assisted areas map since 1984.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Monday 8 March, Official Report, column 412.

Local Authority Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour organisations made significant financial losses in 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: Statutory notices under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 were served on 35 local authorities between July and September of last year in respect of financial failure in 1990-91. I announced on 2 December 1992, Official Report, column 209 and 4 March, Official Report, column 265 decisions in respect of 26 authorities. The Secretary of State has now considered the responses of a further nine authorities on whom notices were served on 11 September 1992.

He has decided to take no further action in respect of financial failure in 1990-91 by Boston borough council —highways and sewerage: Carlisle city council—new construction in excess of £50,000 and highways and sewerage; Chorley borough council—highways and sewerage; Gosport borough council—building maintenance; London borough of Newham—new construction of less than £50,000 and building maintenance; Newcastle upon Tyne city council—building maintenance; Southend on Sea borough council—highways and sewerage; and London borough of Southwark—building maintenance.

In all these cases the authority:

(a) appears to have successfully responded to the financial losses incurred in 1990-91, and has either achieved a surplus in 1991-92, or expects to achieve the appropriate financial objective in 1992-93, or,

(b) has re-tendered or intends to re-tender very shortly the work in question.

Derelict Land Survey

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the next derelict land survey in England to be carried out.

Mr. Redwood: The next derelict land survey is being undertaken this year, with a base date of 1 April. The survey forms were sent out to the local authorities in England in February and I hope that they will all be able to take part. The previous survey was in 1988 and now we need more up-to-date information to enable the Department to allocate grant for land reclamation and to provide a starting point for the urban regeneration agency's work. The survey is being managed for the Department by the consultants, Arup Economics and Planning, and the results of the survey should be published in the summer of 1994.

Street Lighting

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average emission of lighting above horizontal, as a proportion of output in (a) trunk road lighting and (b) other street lighting; if he will estimate the amount of electricity used per annum in lighting above horizontal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

About 12 per cent. of the light output from most road lighting lanterns on trunk and other roads is reflected upwards from the road surface. It is this reflected light which provides safe visual conditions for drivers. It is estimated that about 2 per cent. of the light output from lanterns is reflected upwards by impurities in the air before it reaches the road surface and about the same proportion goes directly upwards.

It is estimated that some 2,000 million units of electricity are used each year for road lighting in Great Britain.

British Waterways Bill

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of the British Waterways Bill on commercial shipping.

(2) if he will list the British Waterways docks planned to be closed as a result of the Waterways Bill.

Mr. Maclean: [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1993 c. 524]: British Waterways now advises me that a small amount of commercial shipping continues to use Weston Point docks for discharging and loading at facilities leased by a third party. I, and British Waterways Board, apologise for the error in earlier reply. It remains the case that the British Waterways Bill does not prevent the future operation of the docks for commercial traffic.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of members of the Countryside Commission, when they were appointed, the number of meetings held, the number of meetings attended by each member and when each term of office is to be completed.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The information is as follows:

Commissioner	Date appointed	Date current term expires	Number of meetings held in past 12 months	Number of meetings attended in past 12 months
Sir John Johnson (Chairman)	1 April 1991	30 March 1994	6	6
Antony Jarvis	1 July 1986	30 June 1993	6	6
Professor Bryn Green	8 May 1984	30 June 1993	6	6
Earl of Swinton	1 July 1987	30 June 1993	6	6
Rachel Thomas	1 October 1987	30 June 1993	6	6
David Fletcher	1 July 1988	30 June 1994	6	6
Sarah Ward	1 August 1991	30 June 1994	6	6
Sir Richard Carew Pole	26 September 1991	30 June 1994	6	5
Professor Allen Patmore	22 September 1992	30 June 1995	6	[1]3

[1] Professor Patmore has attended the three Commission meetings held since his appointment.

Enterprise Zone, Barrow

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards establishing an enterprise zone in the Barrow in Furness travel-to-work area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 March 1993]: I am aware of the case made by Barrow in Furness for a new enterprise zone. It remains Government policy that enterprise zones should be designated only in exceptional circumstances and where they can be most effectively deployed. Decisions on future designations of enterprise zones await the outcome of a review of the assisted areas map now being undertaken by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 11 March 1993

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many individual movements of plutonium were involved in post-irradiation examination experiments at Berkeley nuclear laboratories and Winfrith nuclear research establishment to which reference is made in note (2) to section A of his departmental press release P/93/51 of 4 February on annual plutonium production and stockpile figures.

Mr. Eggar: Dispatches for post-irradiation examination involve movements of spent fuel, details of which are an operational matter for the owner of the fuel in question.

Technology Imports

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals to place a duty on those importing technology into the United Kingdom to provide environmental impact information as part of the import licensing procedure.

Mr. Needham: No.

Tractors and Earth-moving Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the import, export, balance of payments and import penetration figures for tractors and earth-moving equipment since 1987.

Mr. Needham: Information on trade in, and sales of, earth-moving equipment is regularly published in the Central Statistical Office's business monitor PAS3254, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. However, because product sales information is collected only from large firms, it is not comparable with the trade data and reliable import penetration figures cannot therefore be derived.

Anthracite

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual production of anthracite in each year since 1985; and what has been the cost of its production in 1992 prices.

Mr. Eggar: The annual production of anthracite in the United Kingdom since 1985 was:

	Thousand tonnes
1985	2,142
1986	1,985
1987	2,091
1988	1,798
1989	2,060
1990	1,945
1991	1,864
1992	2,029

Information on the cost of anthracite production is not held centrally.

Coal Industry

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the average cost of British Coal's production in each year since 1985 in 1992 prices.

Mr. Eggar: Information on British Coal's production costs are published in British Coal Corporation's report and accounts. Figures in 1992 prices are as follows:

Financial year	Cost per tonne[2]
	Deep-mined	Opencast
[1]1985-86	66·95	40·85
1986-87	57·52	37·48
1987-88	56·07	35·70
1988-89	48·91	33·75
1989-90	50·59	33·99
1990-91	45·45	35·09
[3]1991-92	42·13	33·99

[1] Figures for 1985-86 exclude release of 1984-85 provisions for strike recovery costs.
[2] Cash figures adjusted to 1992 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator.
[3] The GDP deflator for 1992 has been estimated.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated percentage market share of British Coal in (a) the industrial steam coal market, (b) the domestic coal market, and (c) the market for electricity generation in Britain during 1992.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal's percentage shares of the respective coal markets during 1992 are estimated at 85 per cent. for electricity generation, 45 per cent. for industrial steam coal and 75 per cent. for domestic coal.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much coal has been produced by the private sector of (a) opencast and (b) deep mined, annually since 1987; and what proportion of private sector production was sold to (i) the power generators, (ii) industrial users, (iii) the domestic home market and (iv) abroad.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of opencast and deep-mined coal produced by private sector licensed mines since 1987 was:

Thousand tonnes

	Opencast	Deep mined
1987	1,155	855
1988	1,130	875
1989	1,093	1,013
1990	1,109	1,006
1991	1,987	1,102
[1]1992	2,592	1,099

[1] Provisional.

About a tenth of this coal is sold back to British Coal, while most of the remainder is sold for power generation. Small amounts are also sold to domestic and industrial users or exported.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total tonnage of coal used for electricity generation in Britain in each year since 1987; and how much of this was obtained from (a) opencast coal mining, (b) Britain's deep mines and (c) imports of foreign coal.

Mr. Eggar: The amounts of coal used for electricity generation from 1987 were:

Million tonnes

	Major generating companies				Other generating companies[1]	Overall total
	Open-cast	Deep mined	Imports	Total
1987	12·2	67·8	1·4	81·4	6·6	88·0
1988	10·2	65·2	2·0	77·4	6·9	84·2
1989	10·0	65·3	2·0	77·3	5·3	82·6
1990	11·3	62·4	4·7	78·4	6·1	84·5
1991	11·9	61·9	7·3	81·1	2·9	84·0
1992[2]	10·3	57·1	7·6	75·0	4·0	79·0

[1] Information on the source of coal used by other generating companies is not collected centrally.
[2] Provisional.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual change in labour productivity, output per man shift, in British Coal's deep mine pits since 1985.

Mr. Eggar: The annual change in labour productivity, as measured by average output per man shift worked, in British Coal's deep mines since 1985 are as follows:

	Percentage change over previous year	Output per manshift, tonnes
1985	11	2·49
1986	27	3·15
1987	14	3·59
1988	11	3·97
1989	9	4·33
1990	5	4·53
1991	13	5·11
[1]1992	18	6·01

[1] Provisional.

Coal Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the estimated annual tonnages of British Coal exports to (a) France, (b) Germany, (c) Ireland, (d) Spain, (e) the European Community total and (f) total world wide during 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The figures requested are given in the table:

Thousand tonnes

	1990	1991	1992[1]
France	276	327	155
Germany	282	274	63
Ireland	198	154	107
Spain	131	207	52
European Communities[2]	1,739	1,390	614
All countries	2,533	1,672	668

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will request Her Majesty's chief inspector of nuclear installations to investigate the problems discovered in the status nuclear safety computer system developed for Nuclear Electric's Magnox plants.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 10 March 1993, Official Report, column 582.

AEA Technology

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of the contracts by AEA Technology (a) completed and (b) currently under negotiation with foreign companies or other nuclear organisations for the reprocessing or storage of materials, test reactor and research reactor nuclear fuels at Dounreay; and what is the total value of this business to AEA Technology to date.

Mr. Eggar: These are commercial matters for the AEA.

Renewable Energy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department commenced formal discussions with the European Commission on the question of support for renewable energy beyond 1998.

Mr. Eggar: My Department first raised this matter with the Commission in autumn 1991.

Bio-diesel Fuel

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much subsidy was given to companies producing bio-diesel fuel in the United Kingdom in the last year; what information he has as to subsidies given by other EC Governments to companies producing bio-diesel fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom Presidency of the European Community secured agreement to directive 92/81/EEC on the harmonisation of the structures of excise duties on mineral oils on 19 October 1992. This directive provides that member states may apply total or partial exemptions or reductions in the rate of duty to mineral oils used under fiscal control, inter alia, in the field of pilot projects for the technological development of more environmentally friendly products and in particular in relation to fuels from renewable resources. No such exemptions have so far been granted in the United Kingdom and data concerning other member states are not recorded in the United Kingdom.

Electricity Imports

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what payments have been made since 1990 on imports of electricity from France as an equivalent to the fossil fuel levy.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for those regional electricity companies that have contracts requiring them to make such payments to Electricité de France.

Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specific contributions the United Kingdom has made to discussions in the OECD joint sessions of trade and environment experts; what further contributions are planned; and what plans exist for the issue of guidelines on the use of trade and environment policies.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The United Kingdom participates actively in the work of the OECD trade and environment group, in close collaboration with the European Commission and other EC member states. The Government attach high priority to the development of criteria, including possible OECD guidelines, to govern the proper use of trade measures for environmental purposes. The Government are therefore committed to bringing this work to a positive conclusion as soon as possible. It is not yet possible, however, to say when guidelines might be issued.

As this work has developed, the United Kingdom has tabled a number of informal analytical papers dealing with detailed technical questions.

Textiles

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will carry out an examination of the effect on the United Kingdom textile industry of the double pricing by overseas countries of raw materials such as cotton and cashmere; if he will consider the compatibility of such measures with GATT; what remedies exist to protect the United Kingdom industry from their effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Although double pricing of raw materials is incompatible with GATT rules, developing countries which are GATT members are allowed derogations from the rules. Since many of the countries which practice double pricing fall into this category, it is not possible to take action against them. However, the draft GATT Uruguay round textiles agreement contains provisions which, if implemented, will make it easier to act against any member country on this issue. Remedies under GATT are available only if the country practising double pricing is a GATT member. If not, a remedy may be sought bilaterally through the appropriate mechanisms of any bilateral agreement that exists between the country concerned and the European Community.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Care Funding

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of total funding for health and social care during the 1993-94 financial year is to be spent on community care; which Department is responsible for deciding the provision for community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Community care expenditure is not separately identified within the 1993-94 provision of £1,318 million for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland. However, this total includes £29·452 million from which the management executive of the Department of Health and Social Services will make available the necessary funds to health and social services boards for their new community care responsibilities from 1 April 1993.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds have been allocated to Northern Ireland for health and social care for the financial years 1993-94 and 1995-96; and if he will break the figures down by (a) health board, (b) county and (c) the proportion to be spent on (i) health and social care and (ii) community care.

Mr. Hanley: Expenditure on the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland is estimated at £1,318 million for 1993-94 with planned expenditure rising to £1,504 million in 1995-96.

Expenditure on the health and personal social services cannot be attributed by county and community care expenditure is not separately identified within the HPSS programme resources. However, the totals above include £29·452 milllion in 1993-94 and £105·152 million in 1995-96 for the new community care responsibilities from 1 April 1993.

The breakdown of 1995-96 planned expenditure has not yet been determined but in terms of the initial 1993-94 revenue budgets for the health and social services boards the provision for hospital, community health and personal social services expenditure and the amount subsumed therein for their new community care responsibilities is shown in the following table:

£ millions

Health and social services board	Revenue budget	New community care responsiblities
Northern	195·872	6·957
Southern	155·688	5·414
Eastern	374·781	12·089
Western	141·267	4·932
Total	867·608	29·392

Community Care Trusts

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what options his Department has considered for reforming existing Northern Ireland legislation on (a) mental health and (b) care of children, in connection with the creation of community care trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Government intend to publish a proposal for legislation later this year which will enable boards to delegate certain statutory functions to health and social services trusts.

In bringing forward new legislation, the Government's objectives are to enable as many units as possible to take advantage of the significant benefits that trust status offers, whilst also preserving the integrated structure of the health and social services in Northern Ireland.

Social Security

Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the application of the Social Security Revaluation of Earnings Factors (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 as it applies to additional pension paid with invalidity benefit.

Mr. Hanley: The policy intention has been that the Revaluation Order should apply to additional pensions paid with invalidity benefit. Legal advice is that provisions enacted in the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1990, and carried forward into the Contributions and Benefits (Northern Ireland) Act 1992, have not given full effect to this. This means an estimated £228,000 paid between April 1992 and April 1993 will have been paid on a basis which is incorrect on the strict interpretation of the law. We intend to continue payments on an extra-statutory basis to ensure that claimants receive a level of benefits in line with the policy intention. Appropriate primary authority will be obtained in due course. The total amount paid on this basis, initially estimated at a cost of £20,000 (rounded) per month, will be reported in a note to the Department of Health and Social Services appropriation account.

Market Testing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the market testing of public services in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today placed in the Library guidance on the implications for market testing of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. I hope that all those engaged in market testing, including contractors, will consider the guidance helpful.

Emergency Provisions Act 1991

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made to review the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Viscount Colville of Culross, QC has accepted my invitation to prepare a report on the operation in 1992 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991. As with previous reviews, the intention is that the report should enable both Houses of Parliament to discharge effectively their responsibility to scrutinise the operation of the Act on the occasion of the annual debates on the continuance orders, and to determine whether any of the Act's temporary provisions could be allowed to lapse.

As the temporary provisions of the Act will lapse on 15 June 1993 unless continued in force by order, I have asked Viscount Colville to submit his report in sufficient time to facilitate the House's consideration of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 247, whether employees of the health and social security boards can define themselves as British or United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 9 March 1993]: There is no provision for employees of the health and social services boards to indicate whether they are British or United Kingdom citizens.

Police Interview Notes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests have been made to the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each of the past three years for the disclosure of original interview notes in cases where criminal charges have been brought; in how many instances these requests have been denied; and for what reasons.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 5 March 1993]: This is a matter for the chief constable. However, I understand that statistical records on the number of requests for access to original interview notes are not maintained by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have had their period of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts extended pending the results of forensic tests.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 3 March 1993]: I consider each application to extend the 48-hour period for which a person may be detained under section 14 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 very carefully, and I take into account all the relevant circumstances of each case, which frequently include the need for further forensic work. It would only be possible to provide details of these cases at disproportionate cost. It is worthy of note that, in his most recent report on the operation of the Act in 1992, Lord Colville who looked at all the extension order files was able to conclude that "the proper criteria are being carefully observed in considering whether extensions should be granted".

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many legal aid certificates have been issued for (a) criminal cases and (b) civil cases in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of criminal legal aid orders and civil legal aid certificates issued for each of the last 10 years is given in the table.

Legal aid certificates issued 1982-83 to 1991-92

Year	(a) Legal aid orders granted in criminal cases	Year	(b) Legal aid certificates issued in civil cases (thousands)
1982	428,494	1982-83	189·6
1983	446,654	1983-84	205·9
1984	471,186	1984-85	222·2
1985	525,248	1985-86	232·4
1986	518,202	1986-87	245·7

1988	594,297	1988-89	226·0
1989	608,962	1989-90	259·2
1990	623,554	1990-91	297·6
1991	638,305	1991-92	337·3

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department how many legal aid certificates have been issued for (a) criminal cases and (b) civil cases in each of the last 24 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Table (a) gives numbers of legal aid certificates issued in civil cases in each month from January 1991 to February 1993. Statistics for the issue of legal aid orders in criminal cases are collected quarterly, and the numbers of such orders issued during each quarter in 1991 and 1992 are shown in table (b).

Table (a)

The Department's statistical returns from magistrates courts are, however, incomplete and the above figures for criminal legal aid orders have been estimated based on the information available.

Family Perspective and Life Circle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: One of the Departments' aims is to establish a single body of family law applied within a unified jurisdictional structure by specialist courts and supported by appropriate services. As an employer, the Department seeks to support those with dependant carer responsibilities by offering a range of flexible working conditions, including job-sharing, working at home and term-time working.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in which publication, speech or statement his Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department's strategic plan, which is to be published on 22 April, includes a description of the developments and initiatives in the fields of family law and departmental personnel policy. The plan will set out objectives and targets relating to both of these areas. "Judicial Statistics" and the "Court Service Annual Report" are the principal publications giving statistical information about the Department. Both publications are produced in July each year and placed in the Libraries.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Programmes

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will take action to ensure that the Parliament and courts of the United Kingdom have sole right to decide whether violent or pornographic television programmes may be received on television sets in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: Responsibility for television programmes originating in the United Kingdom falls to the independent regulatory authorities—the BBC governors, the Independent Television Commission and the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority (S4C). It is for these bodies to ensure that nothing is included in programmes which is likely to encourage or incite to crime or lead to disorder or be offensive to public feeling. Broadcasts originating elsewhere in the EC must meet the standards set out in the EC Television Without Frontiers Directive (89/552/EEC), and any action which the Government take in relation to such broadcasts must be in accordance with our international obligations.

Television Licences

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what estimate has been made of the number of unlicensed television sets in use in (a) Belfast, (b) Londonderry and (c) the remainder of Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and how many households have been prosecuted for use of an unlicensed television;

(2) what estimate has been made of the number of unlicensed television sets in use in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales in each of the past five years; and how many households have been prosecuted for use of an unlicensed television.

Mr. Brooke: Under section 180 and schedule 18 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, responsibility for administration of the television licensing system, including enforcement of the licensing requirement, passed to the BBC with effect from 1 April 1991. I understand from the BBC that statistics for estimated television licence evasion and prosecution rates in Northern Ireland are not broken down by area. Estimated evasion and actual prosecution rates for the financial years 1988-89 to 1992-93 for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are given in the table. The number of evaders is based on a percentage evasion rate applied to the total number of licences in force.

	Estimated number of evaders	Prosecutions
1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989
England	1,291,642	153,219

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Key [holding answer 10 March 1993]: My Department was formed in April 1992 and has incurred expenditure of £23,260 to date on official entertainment. A comparable figure for 1991-92 is not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Civil Service college has contracted out the distribution of the college prospectus to JBS Mailing Services, without in-house comparison. The service represented a small part of the activities of several in-house units and it was considered unproductive to continue with this arrangement.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will issue guidance on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the Government's market testing initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1991 White Paper "Competing for Quality" set out the Government's plans for achieving more effective competition, and thereby better value for money, through an expanded market testing programme in central Government. Department's current market testing targets for the period up to September 1993 cover work costing about £1·5 billion and employing 44,000 staff. This work will be offered to outside contractors, for the most part in competition with the in-house teams currently providing the service.

I am today placing in the Library guidance on the implications for market testing of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. In some cases where work is awarded to an outside contractor following market testing that may constitute the transfer of an undertaking in the terms of the regulations. If so, the regulations provide that the new employer takes over responsibility for the employment contracts of the employees, who would transfer on their previous terms and conditions of service. The guidance sets out circumstances in which the regulations are, and are not, likely to apply, and explains their effect where they do. It is intended for information only, to help those engaged in market testing, including potential contractors, to understand the issues involved. It is not designed as a complete statement of the law, and does not obviate the need for legal advice to be taken. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland, for Wales, for Northern Ireland and for Health are making separate statements on the application of the regulations to their areas of responsibility.

The guidance makes clear that, as has been the case for over 10 years, contracting out is not affected by the regulations unless it involves enough of the elements of the original operation; such as premises, staff, good will or customer base, to constitute the transfer of a going concern. Whether this applies in any particular case will depend on the nature of the work awarded and the contractors' own proposals for carrying it out.

The Government intend that market testing should proceed without delay. The Government look to bidders, both external and in-house, to put forward innovative proposals for carrying out the work. Bidders will be given access to information about the numbers of posts in the in-house operation, and the terms and conditions of service which attach to the posts, where they need it in order to submit a bid based on a proposal to which the Regulations might apply.

The Government will specify requirements for services being market tested in terms of the outputs to be delivered rather than the structure or methods used to deliver them, and without prejudging whether or not the regulations will apply. Where the regulations would not otherwise apply, it would be inconsistent with our policy to seek to require contractors to adopt particular employment terms and conditions or use particular employees to do the work. It would also be inconsistent with our policy to reorganise in-house operations prior to market testing with the purpose of bringing any subsequent transfer within the scope of the regulations or to dictate the contractor's organisational structure except for reasons strictly related to the performance of the service in question. Bids will be evaluated against the specification on the basis of quality and value for money.

Departments will take account of the costs of redundancies, if any, involved in the respective tender proposals. Some contractors have expressed concern about the possible additional costs involved in a tender proposal falling within the scope of the Regulations compared with a proposal which does not do so. Whilst the basic cost of the former may be higher, the latter is more likely to involve redundancy or redeployment costs which would be taken into account in comparing the respective tender bids. Genuinely innovative proposals should still enable contractors to offer good value for money to Departments, whether or not the regulations apply.

Research Vessels Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the cruise programme of Research Vessels Services (Barry) for 1993-94; and how the programme will be funded.

Mr. Waldegrave: As in previous years, the cruise programme of Research Vessels Services for 1993-94 will be funded from the science Vote, supplemented by commissioned research and charter income.

I have placed copies of the cruise programme for 1993-94 in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police (Assaults)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General how many charges for assaults on police officers in 1992 were reduced by the Crown prosecution service from the original to a lesser charge.

The Attorney-General: The information sought by the hon. Member is not centrally recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Court of Justice

Dr. Godman: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions in the past five years (a) a magistrates court, (b) a crown court, (c) a high court, (d) a court of appeal and (e) the House of Lords requested the European Court of Justice to provide a ruling as provided in article 177 of the treaty of Rome.

The Attorney-General: A magistrates court has requested the European Court of Justice to provide a ruling under article 177 of the treaty on nine occasions in the past five years. A Crown Court has sought a ruling on four occasions, the High Court on 22 occasions, the Court of Appeal on 10 occasions and the House of Lords on five occasions during that period.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Development Association

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 601, on the United Kingdom's contribution to the International Development Association, if he will set out the United Kingdom's contribution in constant 1992 prices.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is set out in the table.

United Kingdom contributions to IDA replenishments

Note

Commitments to IDA 1-3 were in US$. The current price figures have been converted to £ at the exchange rate prevailing at the start of the relevant commitment period. The constant price series was formed by deflating the total amount committed by the UK GDP deflator, based on the start of the relevant commitment period. For IDA 10 this will be 1 July 1993.

Cambodia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which United Kingdom representatives attended the donors conference convened by the United Nations held in Phnom Penh on 25 February; what issues were raised; what further funding Her Majesty's Government have committed to Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The donor meeting in Phnom Penh on 25 February, called to review progress and enable co-ordination, was attended by the United Kingdon head of mission in Phnom Penh and his deputy. The meeting focused on the need for donors to accelerate aid expenditure and to give attention to the geographical and sectoral distribution of their programmes and the particular needs of the health and education sectors.

We announced further assistance for repatriation (£400,000 through UNHCR), food aid (£100,000 through the World Food Programme), human rights education (£71,000) and well-drilling (£90,000). The latter will cover schemes in areas controlled by all three factions participating n the peace process.

Food Aid

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with United Nations bodies, the OECD and the EC with a view to rationalising the accounts required by donor countries of recipient countries in their use of food aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regular discussions on the uses of food aid with our EC partners and with other members of the world food programme. We are always ready to discuss specific problems that may arise in accounting for United Kingdom food aid with the organisation through which the aid is channeled.

Somali Refugees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Kenyan Government on financial assistance to help with the Somali refugees in Kenya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development discussed the burden imposed on Kenya by Somali refugees with President Moi last September. It was also raised when Baroness Chalker visited Kenya in February. In 1992, we provided almost £2·5 million, including 5,000 tonnes of food, for projects in northern Kenya to help refugees from Somalia, Ethiopia and Sudan.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposals for security assurances tabled by the delegation of the Nigerian Government at the fourth review conference of the treaty on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have noted the proposals tabled by the Nigerian Government.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what security assurances have been given by Her Majesty's Government to non-nuclear weapon states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Non-nuclear weapon states (NNWS) which are parties to the non-proliferation treaty (NPT) benefit from both our positive security assurance (PSA) and our negative security assurance (NSA). NNWS, not party to the NPT but party to other similar internationally binding commitments are also covered by our NSA.

Cambodia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial, military and other support Her Majesty's Government have provided for the UNTAC in Cambodia.

Mr. Goodlad: As well as our assessed contribution to the UNTAC budget (6·102 per cent. of the estimated $1·69 billion costs, ie $103 million), we have provided 122 personnel to UNTAC's military component. We will also be providing a number of polling station officers for the elections due to take place in May.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will recommend to the United Nations Security Council a strengthening of the UNTAC mandate; what progress has been made in planning development assistance for Cambodia following elections; and which sectors have been prioritised.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no plans to propose a change to UNTAC's mandate. UNTAC has made considerable progress towards implementing the Paris agreements under difficult circumstances. Elections are planned for May; electoral registration has been completed, with 4·6 million Cambodians registered to vote; and more than 320,000 refugees have returned to Cambodia. The international community has pledged some $880 million to Cambodia, within which the United Kingdom has pledged some $30 million, to be used for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia. There is continuing co-ordination between donors who have agreed that in allocating resources priority will be given to the health and education sectors.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Minister of State's meeting with representatives of the PLO; and what assurances were sought from the PLO concerning the abandonment of the Intifada.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Faisal Husseini, head of the Palestinian negotiating team, called on me on 9 March, accompanied by two PLO officials. I explained the importance of an early resumption of the peace process. I told Mr. Husseini that we recognised the need for Israeli moves to lighten the weight of the occupation, but that it would be an enormous help if the Palestinian leadership were able to take steps to reduce violence by Palestinians.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the amount of grant in aid and (b) the total budget at 1993 of the Welsh Development Agency at 1993 prices in each year since 1987-88; and what amount is planned for each year until 1996-97.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for the period 1987-88 to 1993-94 are set out in the table:

	Grant in aid 1993-94 prices[3] £ million	Total gross budget 1993-94 prices[3] £ million
1987-88	73·9	139·4
1988-89	81·6	151·7
1989-90	86·3	165·0
1990-91	93·0	170·9
1991-92	93·4	169·6

Total budgets and grant in aid for the years 1994-95 to 1996-97 will be decided during the course of future public expenditure surveys, although indicative levels of central Government expenditure cash plans are shown in "The Government Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96—A Report by the Welsh Office", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Radiological Protection Board Survey

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the results of the Radiological Protection Board survey of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The results of the next phase of the survey of radon levels in Wales are expected in spring 1994.

ReChem International Ltd.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding ReChem International Ltd. in Pontypool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Over the last year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has received a petition and a number of letters from the residents of the Pontypool area about various issues relevant to ReChem International Ltd. The three main themes have been the company's plans to build a new (replacement) incinerator at its Pontypool site; the question of environmental pollution and the import of toxic waste. The first of these issues is currently the subject of an application to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The second is being addressed in the major study the Welsh Office has commissioned from the university of East Anglia, and which is now drawing to a close. As regards the third, the Government is committed to the principle of self-sufficiency in waste disposal within the international community, which is incorporated in the European Community Waste Shipment Regulation, agreed at Council on 20 October 1992.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of spending in maintained schools has been met by the Welsh Office in (a) each of the last five years and (b) 1978-79.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local authority schools are funded through the annual local government revenue and capital settlements. Resources provided by the Welsh Office are not hypothecated to particular services. For 1993-94 Government plans will provide local authorities with 90 per cent. central Government support for revenue expenditure, including loan charges. Grant maintained schools are fully funded by the Welsh Office but are free to generate additional income.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places for children with special educational needs are purchased in non-maintained and independent special schools by local education authorities (a) in total and (b) in each local education authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of places purchased for children with special educational needs in non-maintained and independent special schools is not available centrally. Information relating to the number of pupils with statements of special educational needs, by local education authority and place of education, is given in table 12·01 of "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools No. 1 1993".

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budget for the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Subject to parliamentary approval, in 1993-94 £3,619,000 will be made available to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales including £384,000 for new projects, £20,000 to fund the authority's capital expenditure and £126,000 for the authority's life education centres project. The allocation will be conditional upon satisfactory completion of annual performance review. It represents a further and substantial commitment of resources to the authority.

Market Testing

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidance to contractors and public authorities on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the market testing of public services in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster—has today placed in the Library of the House guidance on the implications for market testing of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations.

I hope that all those engaged in market testing, including contractors, will find the guidance helpful.

PRIME MINISTER

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with members of the United States Congress on his recent visit to Washington about Matrix Churchill.

The Prime Minister: None.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 March.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Knighthoods

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if it is now his policy that the Lord Mayor of the City of London corporation will no longer be recommended automatically for a knighthood.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many hon. Members have received knighthoods since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 March 1993]: One hundred and seven Members of Parliament have received knighthoods since May 1979.

Prerogative Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 19, if he will give examples of areas where the prerogative powers residing in the Crown are not exercisable by Ministers.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 March 1993]: There is a variety of situations in which the Queen may exercise the prerogative directly or on the basis of advice, including the advice of Ministers. These include the Dissolution of Parliament and certain appointments—for example, those of Ministers, the Archbishop of Canterbury, other ecclesiastical appointments, lords lieutenant and certain other office holders. In the matter of honours, the Queen would normally make appointments herself in the Order of the Garter, the Order of the Thistle, the Order of Merit and in the Royal Victorian Order, but for the rest would receive recommendations from her Ministers here and in the Commonwealth.

Manufacturers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his Government's policy on the level of support and encouragement which should be given to British manufacturers.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The Government's commitment to industry is at the heart of our policies, where it will remain. I refer my hon. Friend to the detailed answers that he received from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment on 26 January at column 659, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 27 January at columns, 735-36, and my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 29 January at column 894 for details of specific measures that the Government have recently taken.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sterling (Devaluation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of the devaluation of the pound sterling against (a) the deutschmark, (b) the US dollar and (c) the basket of international currencies since the close of trading in London on Tuesday 15 September 1992 on the latest available figures.

Mr. Nelson: Between the close of business in London on 15 September 1992 and opening 8 March 1993 the £ sterling has declined against the deutschmark by 13·9 per cent., against the dollar by 23·6 per cent. and against its exchange rate index by 13·5 per cent.

Council Tax

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of carrying out the valuation of properties in Wales for the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The cost of the valuation banding of domestic properties in Wales was £2,899,149.

Value Added Tax

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with representatives of charities and voluntary bodies on the possible imposition of VAT on their activities.

Sir John Cope [pursuant to the answer, 4 March 1993, Official Report, c. 242]: While neither the Economic Secretary nor the Chancellor of the Exchequer has had recent discussions with representatives of charities and voluntary bodies about VAT, I met representatives of the Charities Tax Reform Group for a general discussion on 3 March 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

Ruddy Duck

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which are currently involved with Her Majesty's Government's working group into the Ruddy duck problem; what preliminary conclusions have been reached by the group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The working group referred to by the hon. Member is drawing up a strategy to control the Ruddy duck, an introduced species, which has spread from Britain to mainland Europe and is hybridising with and putting at risk the survival of the globally threatened White-headed duck.

The working group is chaired by the Government's statutory scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. The other organisations represented are the Department of the Environment, the Welsh Office, English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales, Scottish Natural Heritage, the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust, the International Council for Bird Preservation, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the British Trust for Ornithology.

My Department, in partnership with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the International Waterfowl and Wetlands Research Bureau organised an international workshop at Arundel, Sussex on 1 and 2 March of more than 50 delegates from 10 countries. The workshop helped to foster mutual understanding about the scale of the problem and a recognition that international co-operation was needed to tackle it. The agreed objective was to develop a strategy to stop and reverse the population and range expansion of the Ruddy duck in order to safeguard the White-headed duck. Delegates were asked to take back to their countries recomendations for action in a number of areas including legislation, monitoring, research, control measures, public relations and captive birds. The problems can be resolved only on the basis of mutual understanding and effort.

In Spain, the Ruddy duck is undermining conservation efforts to save the White-headed duck. I am very pleased to learn that the Spanish delegation at the workshop found the proceedings helpful and that they were encouraged by the positive action being taken in Britain to address the problem.

Ozone Levels, Lerwick

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels of high-level ozone were recorded at Lerwick during the week 22 to 28 February, and what was the degree of deviation from normal recorded levels.

Mr. Maclean: Dobson spectrophotometer measurements of total ozone at Lerwick for the week 22 to 28 February were:

Date (1993)	Ozone Dobson units
22 February	230
23 February	256
24 February	[1]no data
25 February	[1]no data
26 February	351
27 February	362
28 February	312

[1] Due to weather conditions.

The average February measurement over the period 1981 to 1992 is 365 DU. The monthly average for February 1993 was 286 DU, just outside the range of previous February monthly averages which is 290 to 466 DU.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authorities show a negative housing entitlement under the Government's housing subsidy scheme;

(2) how many local authorities receive no Government housing subsidies and made contributions from their housing revenue to the general fund for their local authority for the years (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93 and (c) for 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: Housing revenue account (HRA) subsidy is distributed on the basis of each local housing authority's need to spend relative to other authorities. This involves making sensible assumptions about each authority's income and expenditure, with HRA subsidy making up any shortfall between those assumptions. If an authority's rental and other income is assumed to exceed its housing expenditure, it is required to make a contribution towards its rent rebate expenditure. If an authority's assumed income exceeds all of its housing expenditure and its rent rebate expenditure, it must transfer the surplus to its general fund.

On the basis of provisional claim forms from authorities in respect of the current financial year, 273 authorities are assumed to have a negative housing entitlement, and therefore make contributions to their rent rebates expenditure; 22 of those authorities are not claiming HRA subsidy and anticipate making contributions to their general funds. On the basis of final claim forms received for 1991-92, 18 authorities received no HRA subsidy and made contributions to their general funds. Information for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent for a three-bedroomed council house in (a) an authority that does not receive housing subsidy and (b) in an area where housing subsidy is paid.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect information on rents for local authority dwellings of different sizes.

The average weekly unrebated rent for all English authorities is £30·70. There are considerable variations in local authority rents in different areas due to the varying nature of the dwelling stock and its age. In the current financial year, 1992-93, the average weekly unrebated rent for all council dwellings in those authorities which make a contribution towards rent rebate expenditure is £30·37. The average rent in the authorities which receive full HRA subsidy is £31·03.

Self-build Projects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the self-build projects which will benefit from loans or grants from the Housing Corporation for the building of houses in England in the current financial year.

Sir George Young: The details of individual schemes are a matter for the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 162, which Government Department holds information on how many completed self-build units are achieved in the United Kingdom each year; and if there are any comparable figures available to illustrate how the United Kingdom compares with other European countries.

Sir George Young: The Department of the Environment collects a range of house-building data but this does not separately distinguish self-build activity. Information on completions of self-build housing is not collected by any other Government Department. Comparable official figures for other European countries are not known, nor is any unofficial source for such figures known.

Housing Market Package

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties were purchased under the housing market package from the Ministry of Defence.

Sir George Young: Sixty six properties have been purchased from the Ministry of Defence under the housing market package, and approvals have been granted for a further 12.

Transport and the Environment

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has made to consult business, voluntary groups, local authorities and others with interests and expertise in transport and the environment concerning the United Kingdom's report to the Sustainable Development Commission.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are committed to widespread consultation in the preparation of the United Kingdom report to the Sustainable Development Commission. We have written to more than 150 organisations and individuals inviting views of submissions, and welcome the views of anyone who would like to contribute. We will be holding a seminar at Green college, Oxford, this month to discuss the key issues, and we will continue consultation through further meetings and correspondence throughout the year. Organisations with an interest in transport are being fully involved in all these consultations.

Housing Overcrowding

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence his Department has of the extent of overcrowding in (a) owner-occupied properties and (b) low-cost home ownership schemes.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for housing and planning on 8 February 1993, Official Report, column 519, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones).

Ministers' Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 219, if he will give the dates between which all the stated Ministers held their appointments.

Mr. Robin Squire: The dates between which the stated Ministers held their appointments are:

Secretary of State
Mr. Michael Heseltine—May 1979 to 6 January 1983 and 28 November 1990 to 11 April 1992
Mr. Tom King—6 January 1983 to 8 June 1983
Mr. Patrick Jenkin—9 June 1983 to 2 September 1985
Mr. Kenneth Baker—2 September 1985 to 21 May 1986
Mr. Nicholas Ridley—21 May 1986 to 24 July 1989
Mr. Chris Patten—24 July 1989 to 28 November 1990
Mr. Michael Howard—11 April 1992 to

Minister of State
Mr. Tom King—May 1979 to 6 January 1983
Lord Bellwin—6 January 1983 to 10 September 1984
Mr. Kenneth Baker—10 September 1984 to 2 September 1985
Mr. John Patten—2 September 1985 to 15 June 1987
Dr. Rhodes Boyson—11 September 1986 to 15 June 1987
Mr. Michael Howard—15 June 1987 to 25 July 1988
Mr. John Gummer—25 July 1988 to 24 July 1989
David Hunt—25 July 1989 to 4 May 1990
Mr. Michael Portillo—4 May 1990 to 13 April 1992
Mr. John Redwood—14 April 1992 to

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Lord Bellwin—May 1979 to 6 January 1983
The Hon. William Waldegrave—9 June 1983 to 2 September 1985
Mrs. Angela Rumbold—2 September 1985 to 10 September 1986
Mr. Christopher Chope—11 September 1986 to 23 July 1990
The Hon. Colin Moynihan—15 June 1987 to 23 July 1990
Mrs. Virginia Bottomley—25 July 1988 to 27 October 1989
Lord Hesketh—1 February 1989 to 23 July 1990
Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory—27 October 1989 to 30 November 1990
Mr. Robert Atkins—23 July 1990 to 30 November 1990
Mr. Patrick Nicholls—23 July 1990 to 11 October 1990
Lady Blatch—7 September 1990 to 21 May 1991
Mr. Robert Key—11 October 1990 to 13 April 1992
Mr. Robin Squire—14 April 1992 to

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigation he has made into the causes of the change in the numbers of households recorded as homeless at home after acceptance by local authorities in England as homeless under part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) return.

In the second quarter of 1991 the return was revised to identify households who after acceptance remain temporarily in their existing accommodation until permanent accommodation can be found. Latest estimates of such "homeless at home" households at the end of each quarter are as follows:

	"Homeless at Home" households
Q2 1991	[1]10,020
Q3 1991	[1]9,970
Q4 1991	[1]8,700
Q1 1992	[1]8,460
Q2 1992	[1]11,080
Q3 1992	10,670

[1] Estimates for these quarters have been revised since first published.

The variations between quarters in these estimates are likely to represent both seasonal and other fluctuations in homeless acceptances and in the availability of permanent rehousing.

Flats over Shops

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the drop-out rate for schemes to promote increased residential use in town centres where the living over the shop database information has not been utilised.

Sir George Young: The flats over shops scheme is based on competitive bids submitted by local authorities. This Department does not monitor whether bids have been compiled using the local knowledge and experiences of authorities and their housing association partners or from information supplied by the living over the shop project or any other agency active in the field.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been allocated to promote the "living over the shop" project within his Department.

Sir George Young: Taking into account moneys provisionally allocated for 1993-94, some £113,075 has been made available by this Department and the Housing Corporation in support of the "living over the shop" project. The project has also received resources from other funding agencies and from its own income generation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many properties have been made available as a result of the flats over shops initiative; and if he will make a statement about its future; (2) what representations he has received about the flats over shops initiative;

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the value of the applications for funds in each (a) local authority and (b) region under the flats over shops initiative for England in 1992-93.

(2) how many properties have been made available as a result of the flats over shops initiative; and if he will make a statement about its future.

(3) what representations he has received about the flats over shops initiative.

Sir George Young: For 1992-93 we received applications worth over £41 million for the £5 million worth of supplementary credit approvals available under the flats over shops initiative. A list of all applications has been placed in the Library. The number of properties made available will not be clear until all end of year claims have been made. An announcement has already been made about the future of this scheme with 132 authorities receiving a share of the £10 million available in 1993-94. A further £10 million will be allocated for 1994-95. We are pleased with the progress made to date under this promotion scheme in an area which we believe has significant potential. We shall continue to review its development in the light of experiences to date and to this end have been in discussion with a wide range of interested parties.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was his Department's (a) publicity expenditure for each year from 1979 to 1992, (b) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (c) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: The information in respect of publicity expenditure and associated staff costs for my Department including agencies is:

	£ million
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	4·2
1987-88	4·8
1988-89	6·9
1989-90	31·5
1990-91	7·5
1991-92	8·1
1992-93	[1]18·3

[1] Estimate.

Information relating to financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85 inclusive is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

The budgets for publicity expenditure for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he will take his capping decisions for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to take his capping decisions for 1993-94 once he has considered all the budget information which authorities are required to submit to him no later than 16 March 1993.

However, on the basis of the information currently available to him it remains my right hon. and learned Friend's firm intention to adopt as the capping criteria for 1993-94 the provisional criteria which he announced on 26 November 1992. It is now open to any authority which has budgeted above the limit implied by those provisional criteria to set a new lower budget within that limit.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today issued and placed in the Library guidance on the implcations of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) ("TUPE") Regulations 1981 for the market testing of public services.

The principal provision of the TUPE Regulations is that where a "relevant transfer of an undertaking" has taken place, the new employer takes over responsibility for the employment contracts of the employees, who would transfer on their previous terms and conditions of service.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General, in a statement to the Standing Committee on the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill on 21 January, set out the principles regarding the "transfer of an undertaking" as follows:

"It is clear from the case law that under both the [EC Acquired Rights] Directive and the [TUPE] Regulations, [transfer of an undertaking] means the transfer of an economic entity which is capable of operating as a going concern and which retains its identity. The contracting out of service is not a transfer of an undertaking unless it involves enough of the elements of the original operation such as premises, staff, goodwill or customer base to constitute the transfer of a going concern."

"But no single one of these [elements] is essential for there to be a transfer. The case law makes clear that it is the overall sum of what is transferred which determines whether there has been a transfer of an undetaking."

I am aware from many complaints which I have received from hon. Members, local businesses and industry, that a number of local authorities have been including conditions in their CCT tender material which require the contractor to take on the employment of existing staff on the same terms and conditions.

This is a matter of concern, for the following reasons. The objective of CCT is to ensure that local authority services are provided in the best and most cost-effective way, for the benefit of local residents and council taxpayers. CCT gives both in-house teams and prospective private contractors the opportunity to develop and offer innovative and improved ways of providing services, enabling local authorities to choose the best option from all the possible approaches.

It is an essential part of the process of competition that local authorities are prepared to consider all possible options, without setting prior restrictions on the arrangements which prospective contractors or in-house teams must adopt, other than on matters relevant to the performance of the service.

The CCT legislation therefore requires that in seeking tenders for services, authorities must not act "in a matter having the effect or intended or likely to have effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition." [Local Government Act 1988, section 7(7)].

Where, therefore an authority seeks in a tender invitation to ensure that tenderers will be required to take over responsibility for all existing staff and observe existing terms and conditions of service, either by:

- specifying expressly that he should make offers of employment, without economic or operational justification; or
- specifying that TUPE must apply to the contract where it is not clear at the point of inviting tenders that this would necessarily be the case; or
- seeking to achieve the same purpose by specifying requirements relating to matters other than employment of staff, without economic or operational justification;

the effect of this action is to restrict the flexibility of prospective contractors and prevent them from offering alternative arrangements for providing the service.

In the Government's view, any such requirement may deter some prospective contractors from tendering and is likely to constitute a "restriction of competition" in the terms of the legislation, and the Secretary of State will, subject to the facts of each case, take action through the notice and direction powers provided in the legislation to require the authority to remove such restrictions.

In this way, we will ensure that all local authorities conduct compulsory competitive tendering in the manner which this House provided for in the legislation, and will ensure that all authorities, residents and taxpayers continue to secure the benefits of new, more flexible, and more economical ways of providing services.

ENVIRONMENT

New-build Properties

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what basis he calculates and allocates the numbers of new-build residential properties for which local authorities are asked to make provision within their local plans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has with (a) local authorities, (b) constituency members and (c) others prior to announcing the allocations of the numbers of new-build residential properties for which local authorities are asked to make provision within their local plans;

(3) if he will give a breakdown by local authority of the numbers of new-build residential properties for which those local authorities have currently been asked to make provision within their local plans.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Local plans have to be prepared by non-metropolitan districts and national parks in general conformity with structure plans. Their housing policies and proposals have to conform with the structure plan's housing allocation for each district. Structure plans are prepared by the county councils, having regard to the indicative housing allocations for each county contained in the Secretary of State's regional guidance where this has been published. All current county structure plans were approved by the Secretary of State, although revised arrangements will apply under the 1991 Act in respect of future reviews.

In drawing up regional guidance, the Secretary of State takes into account advice provided by local authority regional groupings. Both this advice and the subsequent draft guidance are subject to full public consultation.

The statutory procedures for drawing up and adopting development plans require full public consultation. They also provide an opportunity for objections to be made and for the issues and to be debated at an examination-in-public (EIP) before policies are adopted.

In Cheshire the structure plans allocation for each district between 1986 and 2001, to be taken into account in local plan preparation, is:

District	Number
Warrington	about 12,000
Halton	about 7,400
Ellesmere Port and Neston	about 3,600
Vale Royal	about 8,000
Macclesfield	about 7,600
Chester	about 6,100
Crewe and Nantwich	about 8,000
Congleton	about 6,000

This total includes both new units and conversions of existing buildings.

Because the structure plans have been prepared to cover different time scales, we cannot provide comparable data for other areas.

I will provide similar information for other counties if my hon. Friend would care to write to me.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Total expenditure by my Department (including the Building Research Establishment Agency, the Planning Inspectorate Agency, the Buying Agency and the Queen Elizabeth II Agency) was £0·096 million in 1991-92 and is estimated to be £0·122 million in 1992-93.

Radiation Leak, Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of the public were visiting Sellafield during the period of the recent radioactive leak; and whether they were examined to determine their contact with any radioactive material or informed of possible risks to their health or welfare.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 March 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The actual number of visitors at Sellafield is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc as operators of the site. The higher than normal discharges of radioactivity during the week ending on 13 February resulted in doses through inhalation to the most exposed persons of about 1 microsievert. The dose to a member of the public visiting Sellafield at the time would have been less than this and less than the dose received from background radiation during a visit to Cornwall for a comparable period. The very low levels of radioactivity involved meant that no special arrangements were appropriate for visitors. Radiation alarms are in place at Sellafield and appropriate action would have been taken if necessary.

EDUCATION

Pupils (Exclusion)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what education alternatives are available to pupils who have been permanently excluded from schools.

Mr. Forth: Once a pupil has been permanently excluded from a school, it is open to the parents to seek a place for their child at another school within a reasonable distance from their home. In most instances a school would not be able to refuse to admit the child unless by so doing it would exceed its standard number. LEAs also have the power under section 56 of the Education Act 1944 to provide education otherwise than at school where necessary to meet a pupil's needs. It is also open to the LEA to consider whether the child has special educational needs which call for the authority to determine the special educational provision that should be made for him.

Class Sizes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of single-teacher classes in (a) Birmingham and (b) England comprised more than 30 children in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is shown in the table.

Education Reform Act 1988

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints from parents under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 have been outstanding for (a) three months and (b) six months since their receipt.

Mr. Forth: Five complaints which have been considered by local education authorities or school governing bodies under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 are now before the Secretary of State.

Of these:

(a) Three have been outstanding at the Department for Education for between three and six months and
(b) Two have been outstanding for more than six months.

Most complaints call for lengthy consultation with interested parties.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in 1992 how many complaints from parents under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 were determined by the Secretary of State within (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months, (d) four months, (e) six months and (f) more than six months of receipt.

Mr. Forth: Of the 10 section 23 complaints that have been determined by my right hon. Friend since the Education Reform Act came into force:

(a) none was determined within one month,
(b) none was determined within two months,
(c) one was determined within three months,
(d) none was determined within four months,
(e) two were determined within six months, and
(f) seven took over six months to determine.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the target period in the citizens charter for the response time for him to decide upon complaints from parents under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Forth: The citizens charter does not state a target period for my right hon. Friend to dispose of such complaints.

Truancy

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, columns 147-48, if he will place in the Library each of the submissions being funded under the programme to reduce truancy out of the grants for education support and training scheme 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: No. The submissions included information supplied by LEAs in confidence. The Department will shortly be publishing a directory giving very brief details of each of the approved projects. I will arrange for a copy of that directory to be placed in the Library.

Special Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many places are available for children with special educational needs in (a) non-maintained and (b) independent special schools; and how many places are purchased by local education authorities in each type of school.

Mr. Forth: As at January 1992, there were some 7,100 places in non-maintained special schools and some 6,700 places in those independent schools catering wholly or mainly for pupils with special educational needs.

At that time, there were some 5,800 pupils occupying places at non-maintained special schools, the majority of whom were funded by local education authorities. Information is not kept centrally on the number of such independent school places funded by local education authorities.

Spending Statistics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of the national income has been spent on education in (a) each of the last five years and (b) 1978-79.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

United Kingdom general Government expenditure on education as percentage of GDP

Financial year	Per cent.
1978-79	5·4
1987-88	4·8
1988-89	4·6
1989-90	4·8
1990-91	4·8
1991-92	5·1

Source: Cm 2219 Public Expenditure Analyses to 1995-96, table 2.4.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of spending in maintained schools was met by his Department in (a) each of the last five years and (b) 1978-79.

Mr. Forth: Most central Government support for local authorities is in the form of revenue support grant, which is not hypothecated to individual services. Grants paid by the Department over the last five years to support expenditure in maintained schools as a percentage of total recurrent spending on maintained schools is given in the following table:

	Per cent.
1988-89	1·4
1989-90	1·9
1990-91	2·2
1991-92	2·8
1992-93	4·4

Notes:

i. Percentages calculated by expressing grants for education support and training (GEST), section 210 grant and grants to self governing state (grant-maintained) schools as a proportion of total net recurrent spending on LEA maintained and Self Governing State (Grant-maintained) schools.

ii. Net recurrent spending on schools includes institutional spending on LEA maintained and self-governing (grant-maintained) schools, and related central support services such as the school meals service, home to school transport, teacher centres, child guidance and pupil support. Also included is a pro rata share of LEA expenditure on central administration and recreational services and research. 1990-91 figure excludes balances held by schools and carried over into the 1991-92 financial year. Spending in 1991-92 and 1992-93 estimated and budgeted outturn respectively. Figures taken from 1993 DFE/OSTEND departmental report (ref: Cm 2210), except for those in respect of annual maintenance grant paid to self-governing state schools, which are taken from DFE records.

iii. Grants paid by other Government Departments to support expenditure in schools excluded from above calculations.

iv. Figures for 1978-79 not available on a comparable basis.

Cash Limits

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he plans to announce any further changes to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1992-93.

Dr. Patten [pursuant to his replies, 4 February 1993, cols. 275-76 and 15 February 1993, col. 52]: The cash limit for class XI, vote 1 will be changed as follows:

Class and vote	Curent cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XI.1	745,895,000	−108,000	745,787,000

The reduction in the cash limit for class XI, vote 1 is to offset wholly payment to the university of Hull in respect of a grant from the European regional development fund to be made in 1992-93 towards a project for the construction of a research centre in surface engineering. A net token subhead will be added to class XI, vote 2, with the agreement of Her Majesty's Treasury, in the appropriation accounts for 1992-93 in due course, to enable the transaction to be audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General. These changes will not add to the planned total for public expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Disturbance Claim

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the disturbance claim of Mr. and Mrs. Casey, Uplands, Landkey road, Barnstaple, lodged in January 1991, is to be resolved.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am writing to the hon. Member.

Road Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the scope and duration of the Transport Research Laboratory's study of the best methods for the signpostings of red light cameras for road safety purposes; and if he will indicate what conclusions have been reached in that study.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Studies are being undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory and by independent consultants into the effectiveness of red light camera signs. Early results indicate that the signs add to the effectiveness of the cameras. We hope to issue advice shortly which will enable these signs to be used more widely in conjunction with cameras.

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department;

(2) in which publication, speech or statement his Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department seeks to take account of the needs of all transport users, including families and those of different age groups. In particular, a clear priority within the Government's long-term programme of casualty reduction is to improve the safety of vulnerable road users such as children and the elderly. For example, we are continuing to encourage traffic calming measures, to keep speeds low and improve driver behaviour, especially in sensitive locations such as residential areas and near schools and shops.

Initiatives to improve family mobility include trials of low floor buses, due to begin later this year in London and north Tyneside, which will improve access for parents with young children.

The Department has issued various publications and launched a number of campaigns on these themes, including some aimed at specific age groups. The Department's national travel survey records both household travel and the age and sex of household members; it also records the relationship of household members to each other, allowing households of various kinds to be identified.

Motorways

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total number of motorway sites in the United Kingdom providing toilet facilities (a) in 1989, (b) currently and (c) planned for 1994.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Toilets are provided at all motorway service areas (MSAs), while other locations where toilets are available have also been signed from motorways from time to time. In 1989 there were 42 MSAs in England and three other facilities signed from motorways. Corresponding figures for March 1993 are 44 and five respectively. We expect at least three further MSAs to have opened by the end of 1994, and a number of others to be under construction. Since 6 August, development of future MSAs has been a matter for the private sector.

Motorway services in Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further action he will take to ensure that litter is removed from motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am determined to ensure that the standards and response times for litter clearance specified in the code of practice on litter and refuse are met. Motorway patrols are required to report accumulations of litter so that action can be put in hand to clear them quickly. More than £3 million will be spent on sweeping and removing litter from motorways this year.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about increasing the 70 mph limit on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I receive few representations for an increase in the motorway speed limit; most relate to the desirability of a lower limit or increased enforcement of the existing limit.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the suitability of the 70 mph speed limit in regard to safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Such an assessment was made as part of the speed limit review in July 1991, which concluded that the 70 mph limit continued to strike the right balance between the need for efficient travel and road safety. The policy document "Killing Speed and Saving Lives" published on 13 January 1993 provided information on the relationship between speed and road accidents on which that conclusion was based. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has commissioned on the possible effects of closing entrances and exits on the M25.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A major review carried out in 1988-89 considered the control of access to the M25 as a traffic management measure to maximise the operational efficiency of the motorway. It was concluded that, although closure of junctions might relieve congestion on the M25, the overall effect of increased traffic on local roads would be to create congestion, accidents and environmental disbenefits.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the length of the motorway where the M6 and M42 run in parallel.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The M6 and M42 motorways run in parallel for approximately two and a quarter miles.

Coaches and Buses (Safety)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 586-87, if he will make it his policy to reduce the maximum permitted speed for coaches and large buses which are not fitted with anti-lock brakes or seat belts on exposed seats and will not have to comply with European superstructure strength requirements from 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. There is no evidence that the current maximum speed for such vehicles constitutes a road safety risk.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Norris: None since the two cases to which I referred in my answer on 12 February, Official Report, columns 864-65; those cases were dealt with under the procedures which pre-dated the publication of "Competing for Quality" (Cm. 1730)).

Trunk Roads Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the planned trunk road schemes for Greater Manchester, (b) the construction costs at 1993 prices and (c) the expected date of commencement for each scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is given in the table.

Greater Manchester

[2] Details of next stage are given as timing of construction largely depends upon the outcome of that stage.

Cycling

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to set targets to increase cycle use.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It is for local authorities to decide what provision for cycling is appropriate in their areas.

Seat Belts

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made as to the effectiveness of rear seat belts of the half-belt type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Statistics on the effectiveness of rear lap belts in the United Kingdom are not available, but research in the United States indicates that lap belts reduce death and serious injury by 25 to 40 per cent. and three-point belts by 40 to 55 per cent. Although there is no current research specifically into lap belts, the Department is monitoring the effectiveness of all seat belts in its accident crash investigations.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure that rear seat belts in cars are all of the full-belt type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect agreement to be reached shortly in the European Community permitting member states to require the compulsory fitment of three point belts for the rear outer seats of new cars from 1 January 1995 and obliging them to do so from 1 January 1996. There are at present no plans to extend this requirement to three point belts for the centre rear seat as fitting such belts can be technically complex. I believe the quickest and most effective way forward is for manufacturers voluntarily to introduce three-point belts for centre rear seats wherever technically possible. I will continue to encourage this.

Road Mileage

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated mileage of (a) major trunk roads, (b) motorways, (c) local highways and (d) cycle routes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The latest available figures for Great Britain are for 1 April 1992 when there were 7,669 miles of major trunk road, 1,955 miles of motorway, 22,180 miles of other major roads and 193,338 miles of minor roads. Figures for cycle routes in Great Britain are not available, however, there were 512 miles of purpose-built cycleways.

Car Furnishings (Safety)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what materials are used in the air bags being installed in cars; what gas is used to inflate these bags; and what assessment has been made of the environmental and health effects of the release of gas in the event of a bag bursting or catching fire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A typical airbag is constructed of nylon coated with a rubber compound. The gas source is normally sodium azide, which is hermetically sealed within a strong metal container in the steering wheel hub. When the bag is deployed, the sodium azide converts into harmless nitrogen to inflate the bag; in some cases, there will be a small residue of sodium hydroxide present, which may cause skin irritation.

In the case of a fire, most systems are designed to inflate normally when the temperature reaches 300°F. There should be no risk of the inflator exploding.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what controls exist over the materials used in the interior furnishings of cars including sound proofing and foams used in car seats.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Motor Vehicles (Type Approval) (Great Britain) Regulations 1984 prescribe standards for interior fittings which all new cars must meet. These standards cover the minimum dimensional and/or energy absorbing properties of certain components.

Following consultation with the Department, the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders has made a number of recommendations to its members on fire risk. One of those recommendations covers the flammability of the materials used in the interior furnishings of cars.

Roads, West Yorkshire

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will monitor the air quality along the route of the M62 and the A1 through the Ferrybridge and Pontefract areas in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Measurements of air quality will be undertaken at selected locations along these routes as part of detailed scheme preparation for the upgrading of the A1 to motorway.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proposed distance between the new A1 route through Ferrybridge and the Ferrybridge junior and infants school.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On present plans the minimum distance of the proposed A1 motorway from the Ferrybridge junior and infants school would be about 250 yards. A proposed junction slip road would be located about 180 yards away.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice has been issued to local authorities in respect of submissions for transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are consulting the local authority associations about the drafting of this year's circular, which we expect to issue during April.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what share of the latest transport supplementary grant settlements was allocated to (a) road construction, (b) road maintenance, (c) bus priority measures, (d) measures specifically introduced to improve road safety, (e) improvements to rail services and (f) light rail.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Of the £1,046·7 million available for the local roads capital settlement for 1993-94, £659·5 million was allocated for road construction, £172·8 million for structural maintenance of principal roads, £4·7 million for bus measures, and £50 million for local safety schemes. No resources were allocated for rail or light rail, as transport supplementary grant is limited by statute in England to expenditure in connection with highways or the regulation of traffic.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require cycle route networks in all proposals submitted to transport supplementary grant approval.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It will be for local authorities to decide whether to include a specific section on cycling in their 1994-95 transport policies and programmes submission.

Hazardous Substances

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has commissioned or carried out in each of the last five years into the transportation of hazardous substances.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department commissioned surveys of the transport into and out of British ports of dangerous goods in packages, in 1989, and of bulk chemicals and gases, in 1992. It has commissioned, sometimes jointly with the Health and Safety Executive, a number of reports from the National Radiological Protection Board into aspects of the transport of radioactive material. My Department also took part in an important study, under the aegis of the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on dangerous substances, of the major hazards aspects of the transport of dangerous substances: its report was published in 1991. Copies of these reports are in the Library, except for those on the port movements, which contained commercially confidential information.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to apply the control of Major Accident Hazards regulations to the transportation of hazardous materials to and from existing CIMAH sites.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984 (CIMAH) implement EC directives on the major accident hazards of certain industrial activities. They apply where specific dangerous substances are stored in more than specified quantities and require the preparation of emergency plans by both the operator of the site and by local authorities. It would be inappropriate and confusing to attempt to apply the CIMAH regulations to transport operations.

Regulations for the transport of dangerous goods by road apply from the commencement of loading until the vehicle is unloaded and made safe. Furthermore, the wide ranging general requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 cover all aspects of interface activities including loading and unloading from all modes of transport, storage and arrangements for emergencies. The Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations 1987 apply in harbour areas.

The transport of dangerous goods internationally is covered by long established conventions, principally under United Kingdom aegis. The European Commission is currently considering the direct application of the international rail and road rules within member states. It would be for the Community to decide in due course whether supplementing transport requirements, similar to those under the CIMAH Regulations, might be needed.

A1 (Bypasses)

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the towns and villages that are planned to be bypassed in the route of the new A1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The sections of the A1 for which preferred routes have been announced, for upgrading to motorway, provide for the communities of Brotherton, Fairburn and Ferrybridge to be bypassed.

Mr. William: O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a breakdown of the estimated operational costs for the additional three quarters of a mile of motorway if the new A1 was diverted to bypass Knottingley in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The first year operational costs of £100 million in respect of a route for the A1 motorway from Redhouse to Hook Moor, including a bypass to the east of Knottingley, is broken down as follows:

Costs	£ millions
(i) time	29·827
(ii) fuel	18·013
(iii) other vehicle costs such as depreciation and maintenance	51·502
(iv) routine maintenance such as sign replacement, drainage-renovation and condition inspections	0·347
Total	[1]99·689

[1]Rounded to £100 million.

Heathrow Rail Link

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the earliest date, assuming the satisfactory completion of all procedures, that the Paddington to Heathrow rail link could be open to passenger traffic.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the earliest date at which the Paddington to Heathrow link could be open to passenger traffic is 1997.

Landscaping

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria for inviting people to become members of the landscape advisory committee; and if he will list the qualifications of each of the current members.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend has set no specific criteria for inviting members to serve on the landscape advisory committee. Appointments are made so as to maintain a wide range of interests and expertise in landscape matters. Some of the qualifications of the current members are as follows:

Professor David K. C. Jones, BSc, FRGS appointed Chairman 1993
Professor of physical geography at the London School of Economics; consultant geomorphologist specialising in engineering, geomorphological mapping and landslide studies.

Sir Henry E. Aubrey-Fletcher
Member of the council of Country Landowners Association; member of Agricultural Land Tribunal South East Area and the Bucks and Oxon Naturalist Trust Conservation Group.

Professor Mary Benwell B.A., PH.D., F.C.I.T.
Head of School of Business at Oxford Brookes University; previously a Reader in Transport at Cranfield and a Research Director of a transport consultancy.

Dr. John A. Bergg BSc phD C.ENG FICE
Recently retired from the post of County Engineer for Surrey County Council; currently a part time consultant for a civil enginering firm.

Professor Gordon E. Cherry BA DSc (Hon) FRICS
Recently retired from the post of Head of the Geography Department at the University of Birmingham; now an independent traffic/planning consultant.

Mr. Len J. Clark CBE
Chairman of the Youth Hostels Trust (Vice President Youth Hostel Association); member of Council for National Parks and Countryside Link; member of National Trust Council & Committees.

Professor Monica M. Cole BSc Phd FIMM FRGS FGS
Retired Professor of Geography and Director of Research in Geobotany, Terrain Analysis and related resource use at the Royal Holloway and Bedford New College, Surrey.

Mr. Geoffrey P. Crow BSc DipTE CEng FIHT MICE
Independent Transportation Planning Consultant and Senior Lecturer in Transport (part time) at the Imperial College of Science, Technology and Medicine.

Ms E. Evans AA Dipl (Hons) SADG RIBA TP
Partner in firm of architects; architect and town planner with experience in urban planning.

Mr John V S Evans Dip.Arch DipLA RIBA ALI
Registered architect; consultant to the Travers Morgan Group since 1991; Former Partner of Travers Morgan Planning and Chairman of Travers Morgan Landscape; member of the Landscape Institute External Affairs Committee.

Mr C Richard Ferens MA (CANTAB) FRICS
Fellow of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors; Consultant with firm of Surveyors & valuers; a Vice-President of the Royal Agricultural Society of England; valuer for the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation and the Lord Chancellor's panel of Agricultural Arbitrators.

Professor Peter J Fowler MA PHd FSA FRHistS MIFA
Professor of Archaeology, University of Newcastle Upon Tyne; former Secretary to the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England; currently Forestry Commission archaeological consultant; member of National Trust Council and Executive & Properties Committees.

Mrs Elizabeth J Garland BA
Secretary of the Council for the Protection of Rural England (Sheffield, Peak District and South Yorkshire Branch); executive member for Council of National Parks (CNP); Chair of Development Panel of CNP.

Mr Hugh J R Geddes MA RIBA MLA (USA)
Partner and director in firm of architects; Director Pilot Properties, specialising in housing schemes on derelict urban land.

Mr Arthur D Gill
Vice-President of the Petersfield Society; member of the executive Committee of the Gwent Farming, Forestry and Wild Life Advisory Group; Director of RAC and is the nominee of the Joint Standing Committee of the RAC, AA and RSAC on the National Executive of the Campaign for the Protection of Rural Wales (CPRW); member of the Executive Committee of the Gwent branch of the CPRW.

Mrs Janet Jack AA Dipl RIBA TP ALI
Former partner, now consultant to architect's practice; was responsible for the architectural and landscape proposals for the Channel Tunnel project.

Mrs Patricia E Lunn CGLI FRSA
Head of Horticulture, Derbyshire College of Agriculture and Horticulture; working Partner in landscape and nursery business; independent member of Horticultural Development Council and Convenor of its Levy Appeals Panel since its formation in 1986; former member of the Women's National Commission and past National President, UK Federation of Business and Professional Women.

Ms Wendy M Lutley MSc Adel (Econ Geol), BSc Lond (Geol)
Previously employed by the National Trust in management plan preparation for its open space properties and as a member of its biological survey team; more recently assistant general secretary of the Open Spaces Society working on common land, urban open space and community action in the environment; author of the society's book "Making Space —protecting and creating open space for local communities'; now Co-director of Folk South West.

Mr. Jim M. McCluskey BSc (Civil Engineering) MICE MISTRUCT MINT ALI
Director of McCluskey Associates, a landscape architectural and planning consultancy; experienced civil structural engineer and landscape architect; author of a number of books on environmental design including "Road Form and Townscape" and "Parking: An Environmental Design Handbook".

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the maintenance period for landscaping on new schemes should be 36 months and that statutory environmental and heritage bodies should be consulted at the project brief stage of a road proposal.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: It has been our policy for more than 10 years that the maintenance period for landscaping on new schemes should be 36 months. Consultation with the statutory environmental and heritage bodies already begins at a very early stage of scheme development.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make freely available to both statutory and non-statutory objectors to road schemes the recommendations of the landscape advisory committee.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Committee reports on individual road schemes have for many years been available to any objector at public inquiry. Reports are now available, on request, to any interested party following the announcement of a preferred route.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that environmental consultants should be appointed as part of the consultancy team on all major schemes at the point at which the head engineering consultant is appointed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Before we appoint consultants for major schemes we always ensure that they will have the necessary environmental expertise available.

Minibuses (Accidents)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 763, what are the numbers of minibus passengers and drivers killed and seriously injured in road accidents in Britain in each year since 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Police reports on personal injury road accidents classify minibuses together with motor caravans. Driver and passenger fatalities and serious casualties in this broad group are shown in table A. Casualties in vehicles with nine to 35 seats in the Hackney taxation class are shown in table B.

Table A
Casualties in vehicle type "Minibuses and Motor Caravans": Police reports

	Driver		Passenger
	Killed	Seriously injured	Killed	Seriously injured
1989	6	82	22	251
1990	2	79	23	216
1991	2	69	18	189

1. Includes other types of small bus and motor caravans.

Table B
Casualties in Hackney taxation class (9 to 35 seats): estimates based on DVLA data

	Driver		Passenger
	Killed	Seriously injured	Killed	Seriously injured
1989	1	6	1	67
1990	1	10	3	80
1991	0	18	3	80

1. Excludes non-public service vehicle buses (9-35 seats) which are taxed for private use, and are not separately identifiable.

Driver and Vehicle Office of Information Technology (Sale)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with KPMG Corporate Finance regarding the error in the advertisement for sale of the Driver and Vehicle Office of Information Technology in the Financial Times of Tuesday 16 February; what effect this error will have on the closing date for replies expressing an interest; and what consultations he has had in relation to the impact of the error on the rules of compliance of the European Commission for the advertisement of public procurement contracts in the Official Journal.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Consultations with KPMG Corporate Finance, and other advisers on the privatisation of DVOIT, have not revealed any error in the Financial Times advertisement, so there would be no effect on the closing date for replies, or doubt about compliance with EC requirements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Justice Act 1988

14. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the Criminal Justice Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We keep the workings of this Act under review, but we have no current plans to amend it.

Prison Population

15. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison population in England and Wales on Wednesday 10 March was 43,077.

Obscene Publications Acts

16. Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he had received concerning the Obscene Publications Act 1964; and what plans he has to seek to amend it.

Mr. Jack: I have received no representations specifically concerning the Obscene Publications Act 1964, which amended the Obscene Publications Act 1959 in order to create an additional offence of possessing an obscene article for publication for gain. We have received a variety of representations on the general subject of obscenity and we are currently considering what improvements might be made in the enforcement of both Acts.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the text of the letters which have been sent by his Department to representatives of the police inviting their comment on enforcement questions.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 February 1993]: As the hon. Member is aware, the Government are currently considering what measures might be taken to help improve the enforcement of the Obscene Publication Acts 1959 and 1964. This is not a matter for public consultation, but we have sought the views of members of the police service in order to assist in developing policy proposals in this area. We will make the results of our consideration public as soon as possible.

In the meantime, I can confirm that letters have been sent to the chairman of the crime committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers and to the heads of the obscene publications branch of two police forces. These letters sought views about the effectiveness of the provisions of the Obscene Publications Acts 1959 and 1964 about ways which the enforcements of those and other legal provisions relating to pornography might be improved. Correspondents were asked if they were aware of any particular aspects of law which give rise to difficulties, what those difficulties might be and, how widespread they seemed to be; and whether they had any views on how they might be overcome. They were also asked for their assessment of the extent of the problem posed by the availability of obscene material on computer disk and for any views they might have on procedural or legal changes which might alleviate any difficulties experienced in investigating offences involving such material.

Terrorism

17. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about IRA terrorism in mainland Britain.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government are determined to overcome terrorism in all its forms throughout the United Kingdom. The police have achieved a number of sucesses recently and they have my full support in their continuing efforts to ensure that those responsible for terrorist crime are brought to justice.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the security arrangements for those who are likely to be most at risk from terrorism.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Protective security arrangements are kept under constant review and adjusted as necessary to meet the assessed level of threat.

Immigration Services, Prestwick

18. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the provision of immigration services at Prestwick airport.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In addition to representations from the hon. Member, my right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie), the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe), the Lord Younger of Prestwick and the Earl of Selkirk. He has also received representations from the management of PIK, and various local community groups and representative bodies.

Immigration

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning his proposals to change expenditure under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Up to 9 March, some 266 letters had been received. As we have made clear, we remain fully committed to tackling the causes of disadvantage amongst ethnic minorities and section 11 grant will continue to play a major role in our programme to combat such disadvantage. It is with much regret, therefore, that due to general economic circumstances we shall be unable to sustain the level of expenditure over the next three years which had earlier been planned. We have also made it clear that we are anxious to work closely with local authorities and other interested parties to ensure that the available funding achieves maximum benefit for members of ethnic minorities, and we have invited them to let us have their observations by the end of March.

Electoral Register

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now in a position to announce changes in the election law in order to increase the numbers on the electoral register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I stated in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 11 February, we have set up a working group of Home Office officials and representatives of electoral registration officers and local authorities to look at all aspects of electoral registration. We shall consider the working group's findings once it has concluded its work.

Juvenile Crime

20. Mr. Morgan To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has in relation to the reduction of juvenile crime.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend said in his Statement to the House on 2 March, he and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Health have drawn up proposals to tackle juvenile crime on a broad front.

For the small hard core of persistent juvenile offenders who commit a disproportionate amount of crime we will be introducing a new secure training order for sentencing the juvenile offender who has not responded to supervision in the community.

23. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if will introduce legislation to allow magistrates to have access to the records of offences committed by juvenile offenders.

Mr. Jack: There is nothing in the existing law which prevents courts having access to the previous convictions of either juvenile or adult offenders.

Violent Crime

21. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he is currently considering in order to abate the incidence of violent crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government continue to pursue vigorously their existing policies, the objective of which is to reduce opportunities for violent crime, to ensure that the police have the necessary powers and resources to deter and apprehend violent offenders, to provide the courts with adequate powers to sentence them after conviction and to offer support to victims.

Custodial Sentences

22. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the proportion of sentences to be served in custody; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have received representations on all aspects of the sentencing framework introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991, including some about the new arrangements for the release from custody of sentenced prisoners under which no prisoner may now be released before he or she has served at least half of the sentence imposed by the court. The effects of these and other changes, introduced by the Act and brought into effect on 1 October 1992, are still being monitored.

Special Constables

24. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent studies have been made on the establishment of special constables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There have been no recent studies on this specific subject. The current publicity campaign, which was launched in 1991, responds to general concern about falling numbers of special constables. In the first year of the campaign numbers increased by 14 per cent. to 18,072 at 31 December 1991.

Crime (Inner-city Estates)

25. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the problems of crime on inner-city estates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Although my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the president of ACPO to discuss these particular matters at the moment, I am aware that chief officers of police have put additional resources into dealing with crime on many inner-city estates. This complements, of course, the significant work being undertaken by the government in preventing crime in these areas.

Car Crime

26. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to deal with car crime in Staffordshire.

Mr. Jack: The themes of our Car Crime Prevention Year 1992 campaign continue to play a significant part in all police areas in encouraging action to combat car crime. In Staffordshire, the police are engaged in a number of car crime prevention promotional activities and are participating in the national secured car parks initiative. A force-wide vehicle watch scheme is being planned.

30. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from residents of Nottinghamshire about actions taken to help reduce car crime.

Mr. Jack: I receive many representations on car crime from relevant organisations, hon. Members and members of the public, including a number from residents of Nottinghamshire.

27. Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 with regard to the referral of lenient sentences.

Mr. Jack: The power contained in the Act of 1988 under which the Attorney-General may refer to the Court of Appeal sentences which he considers to be unduly lenient is now widely accepted as important and necessary. The careful and discriminating use of this power by successive holders of that office has proved the wisdom of the Government's decision to introduce this provision.

Juvenile Offenders

28. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review whether police officers have sufficient powers to detain juvenile offenders between the time of arrest and their appearance in court.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied with the police powers to detain juveniles. The criteria for transferring juveniles to local authority accommodation will, however, be kept under review.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his proposals on juveniles in care and on juvenile offenders affect schemes like the Children's Society central London project.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-42, his proposals related to a current gap in courts' powers to deal with persistent juvenile offenders. They will complement rather than replace the policy of initially aiming to divert young people from the penal system. The Children's Society closed its central London project in September 1991 but similar schemes, planned by the Children's Society, in Bournemouth, Leeds and Manchester should play an important part in steering troublesome youngsters away from further offending and custody. The Children's Society are one of a number of children's charities with whom the Home Secretary will shortly be meeting to discuss his proposals on juvenile offenders.

Children In Care (Offences)

29. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide that a social services department will not be subject to a fine for acts committed by children in its care unless those acts are the result of proven negligence by the department.

Mr. Jack: The introduction of a power for the court to order a parent or guardian to pay their children's fines reflects the importance which the Government attach to ensuring that parents take responsibility for the behaviour of their children. When a local authority is in the position of a parent, we believe that it is right that the same principle should apply. But the power is permissive. A court is not required to make such an order if it considers that it would be unreasonable to do so in a particular case.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Thai Government concerning the prosecution in the United Kingdom of British tourists found committing child sexual abuse in Thailand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The Home Secretary (or Home Office) has had no direct discussion with the Thai Government on this matter.

Our courts have no jurisdiction to try those who commit child sexual abuse in Thailand, who properly fall to be dealt with by the Thai authorities under Thai law.

We are willing to assist in this by extraditing British nationals back to Thailand where appropriate, and also by offering other forms of legal assistance under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act (International Cooperation) Act 1990.

However, I understand that our ambassador in Bangkok has raised our concerns about the problem of prostitution recently with Thai Ministers, including the Prime Minister and the Interior Minister. They have assured him that the Thai Government are looking urgently at ways of combating this problem, particularly as it affects children.

Safer Cities Initiative

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those cities currently in receipt of safer cities funding, together with the budget for each designated safer city.

Mr. Jack: The following is a list of 20 local authority areas in which safer cities projects have been established, showing the grants budget allocated to each in 1993-94 to support local crime prevention activity:

Project	Grants budget in 1993-94 £
Birmingham	100,000
Bradford	100,000
Bristol	100,000
Coventry	100,000
Derby	250,000
Hammersmith and Fulham	250,000
Hartlepool	100,000
Hull	100,000
Islington	100,000
Leicester	250,000
Lewisham	100,000
Middlesborough	250,000
Nottingham	100,000
Rochdale	100,000
Salford	100,000
Sunderland	100,000
Tower Hamlets	100,000
Wandsworth	100,000
Wirral	100,000
Wolverhampton	100,000

Home Office funding is due to end in March 1994 for the 16 projects with grants budgets of £100,000. These projects will also have access to a central budget of £500,000 to assist the development of continuing structures for the maintenance of multi-agency crime prevention work. It is intended that the remaining four projects will continue to receive Home Office funding into 1995-96.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of his plans for crime prevention initiatives outside the scope of the safer cities initiative.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry) on 4 March 1993, Official Report, cols 274-75.

Correspondence

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to a letter dated 15 December 1992 from Mr. Rodgers on behalf of the Tyneside engineering branch of MSF with regard to the Winston Silcott case.

Mr. Jack: We have been unable to find any trace of a letter from Mr. Rodgers. My officials have tried to contact him but without success. I would be grateful if he would send me a copy of his letter so that I can ensure that it is dealt with quickly.

Family Perspective and Life Cycle

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in which publication, speech or statement the Department has described how it takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department;

(2) if he will make a statement on how his Department takes account of the family perspective and the life cycle in the targets, activities and statistics of his Department.

Mr. Jack: The objectives, activities and expenditure plans of the Department are set out in the annual report (Cm 2208). Based on what is known from research and statistics, full account is taken of the interests of families in developing and operating a wide range of policies and programmes. These include: crime prevention; penal policy; immigration and nationality; liquor licensing; reducing drugs misuse; and others. Account is taken also of the likely impact on families of policy changes. Through its programme development unit, the Home Office is currently funding projects in a number of local areas to develop innovative approaches to family violence and to work with young people and their families aimed at reducing criminality, from which lessons should be learned and disseminated widely.

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce daylight saving.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our current summer time arrangements already make some daylight saving. As I explained on 30 November in reply to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood, a review of its own position on summer time by the European Commission may affect the options for our future arrangements—including options for further extension of daylight hours at the end of the day—and we shall bring forward our own proposals when the Commission's approach is clear.

Attacks on Horses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to apprehend those who are or have been guilty of mutilating horses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend shares the abhorrence felt over these vicious attacks. The Hampshire Constabulary has set up a special squad of officers, which is co-operating with other forces, the RSPCA, veterinary surgeons and the Pony Club, in a determined effort to stop these crimes.

Police

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consultations his Department has undertaken on the future structure of police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering what reforms in police organisation and structure may be needed and will announce his proposals as soon as possible. The interested parties will be consulted before final decisions are reached.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter following his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 796, on civil action which results either in court awards or in out-of-court settlements against Metropolitan police officers, what action was taken against officers involved in the cases where either the settlement or damages amounted to £10,000 or more.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Disciplinary action taken against Metropolitan police officers is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he is currently considering to improve equal opportunities within the police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: HM inspectorate of constabularly continues to monitor the implementation by forces of guidance issued by the Home Office on equal opportunities policies, including career development and staff appraisal systems.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 March, Official Report, column 139, (1) if he will outline the regime that will be applied within the secure units;

(2) what estimate he has made of the weekly cost of a place in one of his proposed secure units; and who will meet that cost.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend indicated in his statement on 2 March, Official Report, columns 139-42, we are now working up detailed plans for the introduction of a new secure training order for persistent juvenile offenders between the ages of 12 and 15. It was intended that this statement should provide a basis for future detailed discussion and consultation with a wide range of interested parties. This process has begun, but it would be premature at this stage to attempt to describe in detail the regime which will be provided for persons made subject to secure training orders; it is also too early either to estimate or to apportion the weekly cost of a placement made for this purpose.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement to the House on 2 March, Official Report, column 139, what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of existing secure facilities for young people.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 March 1993]: The Government have concluded that existing court powers to make use of secure facilities have not proved to be effective in respect of a small group of persistent juvenile offenders. The recently announced decision to introduce a new secure training order reflects that view. The new secure places will build on what has proved most effective among existing and past facilities.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the figure of £294 million for the costs for magistrates courts identified in his 1992 publication, "Costs of the Criminal Justice System", includes value-added tax.

Mr. Jack: Yes, although only a small proportion of magistrates courts' expenses involves items which attract value added tax.

Defendants (No Fixed Abode)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many defendants brought before magistrates courts in Greater London were of no fixed abode in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Information in not collected centrally on the residential status of defendants brought before the magistrates courts in England and Wales.

In 1991, within the Metropolitan police district and the City of London, there were 1,497 defendants prosecuted for begging offences and five for sleeping rought offences under the Vagrancy Act 1824.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars and other advice issued by his Department concerning the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 8 March 1993]: We have issued no circulars nor general advice concerning the Transfer of Undertakings Regulations 1981 and the Acquired Rights Directive. We have given advice to managers on dealing with staff enquiries and a brief description of the effect of the regulations in introductory guidance for managers but this is internal management guidance which I do not intend to place in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Food

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 718, on EC surplus food, when he expects to complete his review of the operation of the distribution scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: After the Easter recess.

Flood Protection

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has for the funding of flood protection work in the vicinity of Maryport harbour;

(2) if he will carry out a review of flood prevention arrangements in the vicinity of Maryport harbour.

Mr. Curry: In the first instance, it is for the local flood or coastal defence authority concerned to consider the need for works in its area. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food makes grant available towards the cost of schemes which are technically sound, economically worthwhile and environmentally acceptable. In this case, I understand that Allerdale district council has indicated an intention to carry out work in 1993-94 in the Maryport area but as yet no formal application for grant has been received by MAFF. The Ministry is liaising with the council and any scheme put forward will be considered against the criteria mentioned earlier.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what moneys have been spent in West Cumbria on flood protection in the last five years.

Mr. Curry: In the last five years, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has grant aided some £4·7 million of capital expenditure incurred by local authorities and by the National Rivers Authority on flood defence and coast protection schemes in West Cumbria.

Training Board, Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further representations he has received regarding the future of the agriculture training board in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Representations have been made direct to Welsh Office both by ATB Cymru and by the national ATB chairman. We intend to make a statement on the future of the ATB shortly.

Area Aid Application Forms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to how many farmers he intends to distribute the area aid application form in England and Wales; and when he expects to distribute them.

Mr. Curry: The area aid application form, together with an explanatory booklet, will be distributed to some 240,000 farmers in England and Wales. I expect it to be distributed in early April.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he proposes to treat area aid application forms which are returned incomplete by reason of the inadequacy of Ordnance Survey map data for the farms in question.

Mr. Curry: The rules require farmers to lodge their area aid application forms by 15 May if they are to avoid financial penalty. If, exceptionally, they are genuinely unable to obtain all the mapping data, they will have a little longer provided that the application form including areas and locations of fields is received by 15 May.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek an extension of the EC's deadline of 15 May for farmers to return the area aid application form.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to seek such an extension.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of submitting an incorrect or incomplete area aid application form, before 15 May, on eligibility for area payments of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Curry: There will be an opportunity to correct or complete area aid applications before 15 May.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Ordnance Survey on the agency's ability to provide all the map data required by farmers in all parts of the country to complete the area aid application form by 15 May.

Mr. Curry: Officials have had a number of discussions with the Ordnance Survey, both before the mapping requirements were announced in September 1992, and subsequently in relation to the area aid application form.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what special arrangements he is making within his Department to respond to farmers' inquiries to assist them in completing the area aid application form by 15 May.

Mr. Curry: The responsibility for completing the area aid application form rests with individual farmers. The services of the nine regional service centres will, of course, be available to farmers and officials will offer what help they can.

Set-aside Land

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the position of the United Kingdom in order of rank among EC states in respect of the proportion of arable farmers who will have to put land into set-aside; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 22 February, Official Report, column 472.

Farmers in all member states must set aside 15 per cent. of the land on which they are claiming arable area payments, unless they join the simplified scheme for small producers. There is no set-aside requirement under the simplified scheme but area payments will only be made at the lowest rate. The majority of United Kingdom farmers are expected to join the main scheme, whereas in some member states a significantly higher proportion of farmers are likely to choose the simplified scheme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Heating

Ms Walley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will give details of the current heating maintenance undertaken by the engineers department; and what changes there have been in the last 12 months.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms, and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will give details of when the heating is turned on and off in each of the workplaces in the Palace of Westminster; and how many complaints have been received in each of the last 12 months relating to heating.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms, and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Light Fittings

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many infra-red detectors have been attached to light fittings in the Palace of Westminster to save electricity costs; what was the cost; and what is the country of manufacture.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms, and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Great Clock (Maintenance)

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what maintenance work is to be undertaken on the Great Clock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The Director of Works advises that routine inspection has revealed the need to replace a gear wheel on the chiming mechanism. This work will mean that the chimes of the Great Clock will be silenced for about eight weeks, commencing on 15 March. The hour strike will be unaffected.

Engineers Department

Ms Walley: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many stokers have been removed from the jobs of routine heating maintenance in the last year.

Mr. Beith: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Ms Walley: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list all the employment changes which have taken place in the engineers department, including redundancies, relocations and changes in working conditions.

Mr. Beith: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Export Contracts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the conclusions reached by the conference jointly organised on 24 February by his Department's Defence Export Services Organisation and the Electronics Engineering Association on (a) United Kingdom and (b) international export contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 8 March, Official Report, column 448.

Inflatable Model Tanks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) date, (b) location and (c) cost, for the last 24 months, the number of inflatable tanks that have been stolen; how many have been recovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 12 June 1992, Official Report, column 318.

Anti-ballistic Missiles (Defence System)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision on United Kingdom participation in an anti-ballistic missile defence system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that my hon. Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 11 November, Official Report, column 821.

Vulcan Bomber

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of training flights in the Vulcan bomber since September 1992; and what is the estimated cost of keeping the Vulcan in a flightworthy condition until September 1993.

Mr. Aitken: The additional cost of operating and maintaining the aircraft between 20 September 1992 (the date of its last display) and 26 February 1993 (its most recent flight) was approximately £3,600. The Vulcan would require a major service to continue display flying. This would cost at least £2·5 million and the aircraft would not be available for the 1993 display season.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, columns 538-40, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 25 February 1993]: My Department's current outturn estimate for 1992-93 and provisional budget for 1993-94 for centrally controlled expenditure on advertising, broken down into media categories, and on other promotional material are as follows:

£ million

	1992-93	1993-94
Television advertising	2·521	2·872
Radio advertising	0·001	Nil
Newspaper advertising	8·375	9·594
Other promotional material	4·577	5·114
Total	15·474	17·580

In addition, the outturn estimate of publicity expenditure (excluding staff and operating costs) by MOD press and public relations for 1992-93 is £2·98 million and the provisional budget for 1993-94 is £2·93 million broken down as follows:

£ million

	1992-93	1993-94
Films/TV	0·298	0·558
Exhibitions and displays	0·876	0·894
Publications	0·788	0·668
Equipment	0·152	0·104
Miscellaneous items	0·870	0·688

EMPLOYMENT

Deregulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list consultants advising her Department on the deregulation of the labour market.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department does not employ consultants to advise on the deregulation of the labour market. Consultation with a wide range of interested parties is carried out for individual deregulatory measures. In addition, the new deregulation task forces will examine interdepartmental deregulation issues, including those affecting the labour market.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the number of job vacancies registered with jobcentres as a result of the drive she announced on 13 August 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 11 March 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of vacancies notified to Jobcentres as a result of her announcement on 13 August 1992. This falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The national employer advertising campaign was designed to promote positive messages about ES services, and was aimed particularly at employers who had not used ES services before or in recent years. The intention was to attract vacancies from employers for our unemployed clients.

For the 1992-93 year from April 1992 to 5 February 1993 the total number of vacancies notified was 1,673,413 (90.3 per cent of the previous year).

Vacancies Notified

(Vacancy Date of Return)	1991-92	1992-93
September	211,562	164,046
October	183,830	184,774
November	204,396	203,211
December	148,880	154,993
January	78,492	105,984
TOTALS	827,160	813,008

It can be seen that there was a marginal reduction in the vacancies notified. This is disappointing but not really surprising when set against the current economic climate. Feedback from my offices around the country suggests that there has been a high proportion of contracts from new or lapsed employer users during the campaign. We hope that when employers start recruiting again the goodwill generated by the campaign will encourage them to give their vacancies to Jobcentres.

Regular tracking research has been carried out amongst employers. Employers were interviewed before and after the first phase of the campaign in the autumn of 1992.

Results showed that we achieved a significant improvement in employer attitudes:

Jobcentres were the only major source of recruitment to experience an increase in usage;

employer usage of Jobcentres rose by 4 per cent.—from 63 to 67 per cent.;

15 per cent. of non users said they were more likely to use Jobcentres having seen an advertisement; attitudes towards Jobcentres improved.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Burt: The following services have been contracted out without market testing an in-house bid:

Service	Contractor
Benefits Agency
Travel services to the Department	Wagons-Lite
Child Support Agency
Customer Services Training	Coopers and Lybrand
Specialist Interviewing Skills	Relate
Facilities Management Dudley Centre	Procord Ltd
Facilities Management Falkirk Centre	Drake and Scull Technical Services
Security and Reception Dudley Centre	Security Express Guards
Security and Reception Falkirk Centre	Centuryan Security Ltd
Catering Dudley Centre	Gardener Merchant
Day Care Nursery Dudley Centre	Kinderquest Ltd
Day Care Nursery Hastings Centre	Kinderquest Ltd
Typing and Secretarial Falkirk Centre	Manpower PLC
Messenger/Telephonists Falkirk Centre	Manpower PLC

No in-house bid was invited for Benefits Agency travel services because the few clerical staff involved could not provide the professional, accredited, national travel service to the Department for which tenders were being sought.

The child support agency, which will be operational from April 1993, is a completely new agency and services have been contracted out where in-house operations did not exist. Customer services training was contracted out because limited capacity was available in-house to develop and deliver the service required in the time available.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged 60 years and over have had the amount of invalidity benefit reduced on reaching the retirement age of 60 years in the latest year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available. For women aged 60-64, the rate of invalidity benefit (IVB) is based on their retirement pension entitlement. This may be higher or lower than the previous rate of IVB. As at 30 March 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 37,100 women between 60 and 64 were assessed for invalidity benefit at their pension rate.

Source: Information from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants as at 30 March 1991.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his reply of 16 March 1992, Official Report, column 896, of his estimate of the number of households, by tenure, whose housing benefit is reduced because of non-dependants' deductions, sub-divided into (a) those aged 16 and 17 years, (b) 18 to 24 years, and (c) 25 years and over.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Claimants whose housing benefit is reduced through non-dependant deductions: May 1991

Age of claimant	LA tenants	Private tenants	Total
(i) Housing benefit cases where income support is payable
16-17	—	0	—

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review tariff income levels for capital resources over £3,000 when assessing entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Mr. Scott: Although these levels are kept under review, we have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Child Support Act 1991

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he has made to exempt women resident in refuges for battered women from having to go through Child Support Act 1991 procedures in order to give evidence that harm and undue distress may result from the fathers of their children being pursued for maintenance.

Mr. Burt: Where a parent with care is in a women's refuge, this in itself will be sufficient to demonstrate that she has good cause to fear that she or her children may be harmed. However, it would be wrong to have a blanket exemption from the procedures of the Act for particular groups since some mothers may wish to pursue maintenance notwithstanding the circumstances surrounding the breakdown of their relationship. Each case will therefore be dealt with individually, but staff will be sensitive to the concerns of the parent with care and in no circumstances would her whereabouts be revealed to the father.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons without accommodation were income support recipients in England at May 1991 and at the latest available date, breaking down the figures by age and by whether or not they were unemployed at the time.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is in the table. It is not possible to provide figures which distinguish between those without accommodation for a significant period and those who may be only temporarily so.

Income Support recipients
Persons without accommodation (England)

Age of claimant	Total	Unemployed	Other
16-19	700	400	300
20-29	4,900	4,800	100
30-39	1,500	1,200	300

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons without accommodation were income support recipients at May 1991, and at the latest available date, in Birmingham, Bradford, Brighton, Bristol, Cambridge, Kingston upon Hull, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne, Nottingham, Oxford, Plymouth, Sheffield, Southampton, Stoke on Trent and each London borough.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what communication he has received from a constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich, national insurance No. YZ 83 86 39B; when it was received; and what was his response.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 10 March 1993

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking "what communication he has received from a constituent of the honourable Member for Woolwich, NI. No. YZ838639B; when it was received; and what was his response."

It may help if I explain that correspondence addressed to Ministers or the Chief Executive from customers concerning their individual circumstances is referred to the appropriate District Office for investigation and response.

Your constituent has addressed a number of such letters which have been passed to the appropriate. District for response. The papers in this case show without doubt that there has been unacceptable delay in the issuing of responses to your constituent. Indeed, more generally, it is very clear that the service provided by the Agency's office fell well short of the standard your constituent had every right to expect. For this I offer my sincere apologies.

District management has now contacted your constituent regarding his enquiries and apologised for the delay. A full summary of Income Support paid has been sent to him and a meeting with the Agency's Customer Service Manager, is to be arranged, to resolve any remaining issues.

I do regret the unsatisfactory standard of service that your constituent has received and add my apologies to those provided already. I trust that the response provided and any meeting with the Customer Services Manager will bring the issues to a satisfactory conclusion. I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 113, how many redundant workers have been refused income support by the Chesterfield and Worksop benefits agency within the past year under the deprivation of capital regulations after paying off part or all of their mortgage.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 10 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking, pursuant to his Answer of 2 March, column 113, how many redundant workers have been refused Income Support by the Chesterfield and Worksop Benefits Agency within the past year under the deprivation of capital regulations after paying off part or all of their mortgage.

The complete range of information requested could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics relating to the reason that benefit is refused are not normally collected.

However, information relating to British Coal redundancies, where former workers have been refused Income Support on grounds of deprivation of resources, has been collected nationally since November 1992. I am therefore able to let you know that, since 16 November 1992, there have been a total of five refusals on these grounds. All of these have been made at the Chesterfield and Worksop Benefits Agency offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by year for the last five years (a) the number of people employed by grade and (b) the annual cost of the contributory benefits section at his Department's offices at Castle house, Doncaster, classified by (i) sickness benefit, (ii) invalidity benefit, (iii) severe disablement allowance and (iv) maternity benefit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency and he will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 10 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list by year for the last five years (a) the number of people employed by grade and (b) the annual costs of the Contributory Benefits Section at his Department's offices at Castle House, Doncaster; classified by (i) sickness benefit, (ii) invalidity benefit, (iii) severe disablement allowance and (iv) maternity benefit.

For operational reasons it is not possible to identify separately staff on sickness benefit and invalidity benefit or between severe disablement allowance and maternity benefit because the work is merged within staff sections. Figures are also only available for 1991-92 and 1992-93 since the Benefits Agency was formed.

The information available is set out below:

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Severe Disablement Allowance and Maternity Benefit—1991-92 and 1992-93.

LO2 1.5 staff at a cost of £17,000.

Note: All totals are rounded to the nearest £1,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Pensions

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the savings to the national insurance fund if both men and women started to receive the state retirement pension at (a) 65 years, (b) 66 years, (c) 67 years, (d) 68 years, (e) 69 years and (f) 70 years.

Miss Widdecombe: On the same basis as the estimates set out in the discussion documents, "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", the savings to the national insurance fund from equalising state pension age at 65 and 67 are as follows:

	2025	2035
Age 65	5·1	4·3
Age 67	9·3	8·5

Estimates for the remaining ages are not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the proportion of pensioners receiving income from occupational pensions identified as (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners aged under 75 years, (c) single female pensioners aged under 75 years, (d) pensioner couples aged under 75 years, (e) single female pensioners aged 75 years or over, (f) single male pensioners aged 75 years or over and (g) couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years or over, and the median amount received.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates for 1989—the latest year for which information is available—are in the table.

	Per cent. with income from occupational pension	Median occupational pension for those in receipt £ per week
All pensioner units	56	27·20
Single male pensioners aged under 75	58	23·10
Single female pensioners aged under 75	59	27·40
Pensioner couples where both are aged under 75	77	35·90
Single female pensioners aged 75 or over	30	14·40
Single male pensioners aged 75 or over	50	21·80
Pensioner couples where at least one is aged 75	64	30·80

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1989 Family Expenditure Survey and the 1987 GAD Survey of Occupational Pensions.
2. A pensioner unit is defined to be a single person aged above State Pensionable Age (SPA) or a couple where the head is aged above SPA.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what impact denial of unemployment benefit to persons over the age of 55 years due to interaction with pension provision has on unemployment statistics.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 10 March 1993 to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

War Pensions

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase war pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: An amendment order, which increases in line with the retail prices index, war pensions and allowances in respect of ex-service men and women, and which introduces some changes which will help simplify the scheme, was made yesterday by the Privy Council. The order will be laid before Parliament for information on 22 March. Legislation to make similar amendments to the scheme for civilians was laid today. The main element of the changes is that, in addition to the uprating from 12 April, the basic war disablement pension has been increased by £5 a week; this change will result in considerable cash gains for some 200,000 pensioners.

Order Books

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give the cost of issuing a Department of Social Security additional order book;

(2) in what circumstances additional order books are issued in respect of one payment only; how many have been issued in the last 12 months in respect of payments of 35 pence or less; and what consideration is given to incorporating such payments into the main order book.

Mr. Burt: The administration and payments of benefits is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Joan Walley, dated 10 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what is the cost of issuing a Department of Social Security additional order book; in what circumstances additional order books are issued in respect of one payment only; how many have been issued in the last 12 months in respect of payments of 35 pence or less; and what consideration is given to incorporating such payments into the main order book.

Additional order books in respect of one payment only are sometimes necessary in connection with the uprating announcement.

Order books normally cover a period of 20 weeks and renewal books are issued some 4 or 5 weeks in advance of the first order. If uprating details are not available when books are prepared, any which span the uprating date will not include the new rates. When the uprating date coincides with the date of the last order in an order book, an additional book covering just one payment is necessary.

Normally, the number of additional books issued with one order is negligible but the date of the latest uprating announcement was such that a more significant number of additional Child Benefit books were issued. It is estimated that the number of order books issued in the last 12 months for payments of 35p or less is 110,000.

The decision to issue additional order books rather than include arrears in the next main book was based on customer service and economic grounds.

Issue of the additional book ensured that the correct rate of benefit was available to all customers on the due date. The child benefit computer system already has in place a facility to issue additional order books in such circumstances and to introduce a facility to include the increase in the next renewal book would have involved substantial computer reprogramming costs.

The estimated cost of issuing, centrally, an additional order book is estimated, from the latest available data, to be approximately 2p (two pence), plus the cost of second class postage. There are no figures currently available for the cost of a locally produced additional order book.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by year for the last five years (a) the number of persons employed by grade and (b) the annual cost of the pensions section at his Department's offices in Castle house, Doncaster, classified by (i) income support pension, (ii) retirement pension, (iii) widow's benefit and (iv) death grant.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, who will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 10 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list by year for the last five years (a) the number of persons employed by grade and (b) the annual cost of the Pensions Section at his Department's offices in Castle House, Doncaster, classified by (i) income support pension, (ii) retirement pension, (iii) widow's benefit and (iv) death grant.

For operational reasons it is not possible to identify separately staff on Retirement Pensions and Widow's Benefit because the work is merged within staff sections and figures are not available on the Death Grant because it has been abolished.

The figures available are only for 1991-1992 and 1992-93 since the Benefits Agency was formed.

HEALTH

Elderly People (Care)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance she has given to district health authorities regarding the contracting out of continuing elderly care; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how many health authorities have contracted out the provision of continuing elderly care in the last year; and if she will list them, stating the number of patients affected.

Mr. Yeo: In purchasing continuing care, health authorities are expected to consider the whole range of available services, including those in the independent sector. The extent of such provision, including any purchased from independent providers, is a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of local needs and priorities.

Cannabis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to investigate the use of cannabis for certain medical conditions.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Women

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women doctors were obstetricians and gynaecologists in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is set out in the table.

Women doctors (whole time equivalent England)

	All hospital doctors	Obstetricians and Gynaecologists	Obstetricians and gynaecologists as percentage of all hospital doctors
1987	9,049·9	805·5	8·9
1988	9,693·3	907·8	9·4
1989	10,126·6	912·8	9·0
1990	10,736·3	954·5	8·9
1991	11,232·8	1,000·9	8·9

Dental Treatment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of dental treatment in (a) the north west and (b) England for the latest year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the average payments for registered patients in the general dental services (GDS) in 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available.

	Gross payments 1991-92 in £ million[1]	Number of patients registered at 30 September 1991[2]	Average gross payments 1991-92 per registered patient £
North western region	108·20	1,881,311	57·51
England	1,210·06	21,570,226	56·10

Notes:

[1] The total of payments scheduled by the Dental Practice Board in respect of child and adult items of servie fees, continuing care and capitation payments, and weighted entry payments. Taken together, these payments represent about 95 per cent. of the total gross cost of the GDS. The figures include charge income collected from patients.

[2] The figures do not include patients who received "occasional treatment", that is, without registering with the dentist.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists are in practice in (a) Pendle, (b) the north-west standard region and (c) England who (i) take NHS patients, (ii) take private patients only and (iii) until 1990 took NHS patients but no longer do so.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information in not held centrally. The table shows the number of national health service dentists by family health service authority (FHSA), regional health authority (RHA) and for England as a whole.

	30 September 1990	30 September 1992
Lancashire FHSA	400	421
North West RHA	1,232	1,258
England	15,480	15,411

Dentists are independent contractors and are free to practice privately if they wish. Information is not held about those who decide to do so.

Prescription Errors

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the information held by her Department on the scale of general practitioners prescribing errors, together with the response of her Department.

Dr. Mawhinney This information is not collected.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the drugs in the British National Formulary containing chlorofluorocarbons.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested but records held by the Medicines Control Agency show there are 119 products containing chlorofluorocarbons, licensed under the Medicines Act for human use at present. A small number, which are listed, contain chlorofluorocarbons as active ingredients including inhalational and anaesthetic agents.

The remainder of the licensed products (104) contain chlorofluorocarbons used as excipients usually in the form of a propellant.

It is not normal practice to disclose excipients since to do so could prejudice companies' commercially sensitive information which they are required to provide to obtain a product licence.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the leaflet on passive smoking to become available again.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are four main booklets concerning passive smoking—the Department of the Environment's "Code of Practice on Smoking in Public Places"; the Health and Safety Executive's booklet "Passive Smoking at Work"; a booklet "Passive Smoking A Health Hazard" produced by a coalition of statutory and voluntary organisations; and "Passive Smoking Questions and Answers", published by the Health Education Authority (HEA).

The first three booklets are in print and copies are available from the Library. The HEA booklet "Passive Smoking Questions and Answers" is currently being reprinted and will be available again shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Meals

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she issues to national health service management regarding the minimal nutritional standards of meals in hospitals; what monitoring there is of in-patient meals to see whether they meet nutritional criteria; and when the guidelines were last reviewed.

Mr. Sackville: None. Hospitals and other national health service units are required to ensure that adequate meals are provided and that they meet the nutritional requirements of all their patients.

Aycliffe Secure Unit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the results of the inquiry into the Aycliffe local authority secure unit, the number of visits her inspectors have made to this unit in the last two years and the conclusions they reached; and how many children from Newcastle upon Tyne have been placed in the unit.

Mr. Yeo: Durham area child protection committee inquired into a number of allegations of child abuse at Aycliffe community home in 1992 and produced a report of their findings which was published in November 1992.

Formal inspections of Aycliffe were carried out by the social services inspectorate in March and July 1989 and in March 1991. Reports on these inspections were published in 1990 and 1991. Copies are available in the Library. A further visit, not resulting in a published report, to review the findings of the earlier inspections was made in March 1992.

Others visits are made to units such as Aycliffe. They are not inspections or assessments of practice and no reports are published.

Information about placements of children by local authorities in individual secure units is in the annual statistical publication "Children Accommodated in Secure Units during the year ending 31 March", copies of which are available in the Library.

Health Education Authority Leaflets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what charges are made for Health Education Authority leaflets.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Health Education Authority's policy is to produce and distribute leaflets free of charge to the general public, through local health promotion units, to general practitioners' waiting rooms for example. Charges on a cost-recovery basis only are made to non-national health service organisations seeking bulk orders.

Local Authority Homes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what will be the payment made to voluntary and private sector residential and nursing homes for the aged made in respect of individual residents each week from 1 April;

(2) what account she takes of the capital costs incurred by private and voluntary sector residential care and nursing homes in calculating the payments for the care of residents in those homes.

Mr. Yeo: The price paid by local authorities for places in residential care and nursing homes is a matter for negotiation between the homes and authorities locally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what will be the payment to local authority homes for the aged made in respect of individual residents each week from 1 April;

(2) what account she takes of the capital costs incurred in construction of local authorities' residential care homes in calculating the payments for the care of residents in those homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Each local social services authority sets a standard rate for the provision of residential care in its own homes which it is required to seek to recover from each resident, subject to their ability to pay. The standard rate takes into account local factors, including capital expenditure, and is based upon a formula produced by the local authority associations. From 1 April 1993 local authorities will be required, by section 22(2) of the National Assistance Act 1948, to set the standard rate at an amount which represents the full cost to the authority of providing the accommodation. In addition to income from charges, resources for local social services authorities for these purposes are available through the revenue support grant, the business rate and the council tax, when introduced.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the research currently being funded by her Department on the incidence of mental disorder in ethnic minority groups;

(2) what research is being funded by her Department into the provision of mental health services to meet the needs of black and ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 23 February at column 544.

Psychotropic Medicines

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of prescriptions for psychotropic medicines were issued to women in the last available year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not held centrally on the gender of patients for whom prescriptions are issued.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to ensure that users of mental health services are actively involved in discussions about who should be their care manager.

Mr. Yeo: The White Paper, "Caring for People" stresses the importance of consulting mentally ill people, their relatives and carers about their care. The "Caring for People" policy guidance (HMSO ISBN 0 11 321338 7) specifies that the individual service user, and with his or her agreement any carers, should be involved throughout the assessment and care management process.

The "Health of the Nation" mental illness key area handbook for health and social services managers published in January this year gives managers practical advice on involving users and seeking their views. Copies of all the documents are available in the Library.

Hospital Travel Costs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hospital travel costs scheme was established; what are the arrangements for payments to claimants; and what records there are of the number of claimants for travel costs under the scheme for each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: There have been arrangements for the reimbursement of national health service travel costs to hospital since 1948. Under the current scheme, which has been in place since 1988, assistance with the costs of travel to hospital for treatment is available to patients on income support or family credit or who are otherwise assessed to be on a low income. Patients who can demonstrate entitlement are usually able to obtain their travel expenses at the hospital when they attend for treatment; otherwise payment is subject to confirmation of entitlement. Information on the number of claims made is not held centrally.

Low Income Scheme

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are planned in the future administration of the NHS low income scheme and the health benefits unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The future of the health benefits unit at Newcastle which assesses claims for charge remission under the national health service low income scheme has been under consideration for some time in parallel with a wide ranging review of the scheme itself. I have now concluded that the best option for improving administration is to transfer responsibility for the scheme to the Prescription Pricing Authority (PPA), a special health authority within the NHS. This transfer will take effect on 1 April 1993. Some 360 Department of Social Security (DSS) staff currently employed at the unit and who handle approximately 1·2 million claims per annum on behalf of the Department of Health will be seconded to the PPA from that date. Thereafter, they will be given the opportunity either to transfer to the NHS on a permanent basis or return to DSS as vacancies arise. There are no plans for either voluntary or compulsory redundancy. DSS Ministers have agreed the planned transfer.

Transferring responsibility to the PPA generates significant opportunities for improving the administration of the scheme, and will enable progress to be made towards computerisation of both record keeping and the claims assessment process. The extent to which the recommendations made following the review of the scheme's administration, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 22 May 1991, might contribute to these opportunities is receiving careful study. In reaching final decisions we shall need to take account of current public expenditure constraints, but I hope to make a further announcement soon.

Arrangements have been made with the Scottish and Welsh Offices that claims from these countries should, for the present, continue to be handled by the PPA.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in establishing the national blood authority.

Mr. Sackville: I have today laid before the House an order to establish the national blood authority from 1 April 1993. From that date it will replace the Central Blood Laboratories Authority and the national directorate of the National Blood Transfusion Service. We propose that the new authority should assume responsibility for managing the regional transfusion centres from 1 April 1994.

I am pleased to announce that Mr. Lawrence Banks, a director of Robert Fleming Holdings Limited and Mr. Dennis Allison, general manager of the North Western regional health authority have agreed to serve as non-executive members of the new national blood authority. Mr. John Adey, former managing director of Baxter Healthcare Ltd, has been appointed to be the chief executive of the new authority. Additional appointments will be made shortly.

Medical Advisers

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of family health service authority medical advisers in post; and what is the total salary cost for the financial year 1991-92 and the projected cost for the current financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 10 March 1993.

Suicide

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many suicides there have been by (a) women and (b) women in rural areas in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The exact information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for the years 1979, 1983, 1985, 1987, 1989 and 1991 however are available and are shown in the table.

Number of female suicides and undetermined deaths[1] (E950-E959, E980-E989 combined) in England and Wales and, in remoter, largely rural areas (normal area of residence) for the years 1979, 1983, 1985, 1987, 1989, 1991.

	England and Wales	Rural areas
1979	2,335	207
1983	2,109	195
1985	2,170	214
1987	1,859	195
1989	1,686	179
1991	1,585	153

[1] Undetermined deaths (whether accidentally or purposely inflicted).

One of the ways in which OPCS classifies areas is in terms of an urban/rural distinction. County districts are classified in the following groups.

Greater London:
- Inner London
- Outer London

Metropolitan Districts:
- Principal Cities
- Others

Non-Metropolitan:
- Cities
- Industrial
- With new towns
- Resort and seaside retirement
- Mixed urban rural
- Remoter largely rural

Further details are available in appendix 5 of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication "Key population and vital statistics" series VS no.17, PP1 no.13; a copy of which is in the Library.

Health Promotion Clinics

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health promotion clinics were functioning on 1 June 1992; what was their annual cost; and if she will publish a breakdown of the services and therapies being provided through those clinics at that time.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the number of health promotion clinics is not collected centrally in the form requested. The number of claims made by partnerships in England for health promotion clinic sessions in the preceding 12 months at 1 April 1992 was 1,331,277. The forecast total expenditure on health promotion clinics in 1992-93 is £74·448 million. Information on services and therapies provided through health promotion clinics are not collected centrally.

Insulin Needles

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has completed her Department's consideration of the supply of suitable needles on NHS prescription for pen-type insulin injections.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 10 March.

Private Sector Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all those NHS projects which have been financed by private sector money over the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement will increase the scope for national health service use of private finance to improve and extend services. We aim to ensure that NHS patients will benefit from these new freedoms to the greatest possible extent. NHS directors of finance have been encouraged to use private finance if this is cost-effective.

NHS projects using private finance need approval by the Department of Health and the Treasury if the capital assets involved have a value of £250,000 or more. Projects which have been approved in the last 12 months are shown in the table.

NHS projects using private capital worth over £0·25 million approved in the 12 months to end of February 1993

1. Sheffield Northern General Hospital NHS Trust: contracting for the provision of satellite dialysis facilities at Rotherham Hospital.
2. NHS Supplies Authority: lease of offices for HQ in Reading.
3. NHS Supplies Authority: lease of offices for North East Divisional HQ in Harrogate.
4. Newcastle Royal Victoria Infirmary NHS Trust: lease of magnetic resonance imager.
5. Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical Education: lease of offices in London.
6. South East London Commissioning Agency: lease of offices in London.
7. King's College Hospital, Camberwell: new clinical waste incineration facilities.
8. The Royal Oldham Hospital NHS Trust: new clinical waste incineration facilities.
9. Royal Liverpool University Hospital NHS Trust: proposed joint venture patient hotel.

Nursing and Midwifery Board

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the present members of the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Sackville: Present members of the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting are as follows:

Mr. R. G. Adams
Prof. J. A. Akinsanya
Mr. C. J. Allison
Mrs. A. Ashton
Mr. R. D. Atlay
Mrs. C. Atwell

Ms B. S. Bailey
Miss S. Barlow
Mrs. Y. E. Baxter
Miss J. A. Beak
Mrs. A. P. Burrows
Mrs. J. A. Byrne
Ms V. Chapman
Mrs. C. A. Christophe
Mrs. J. M. Collacott
Mrs. L. Cutler
Ms E. Davenhall
Ms S. Downe
Ms H. Foale
Mrs E. H. Fradd
Miss C. Gilling
Mrs. J. Green
Ms M. Gribbin
Mr. A. Grocott
Ms W. E. R. Harris
Mr. S. J. Holder
Prof. J. E. Hooper, CBE
Miss N. Hunt
Miss B. I. Hyde
Mr. J. James
Mr. K. Jarrold
Ms R. Lowe
Mr. J. McIntegart
Mrs. S. Moore
Ms G. D. Quick
Miss S. E. G. Roch
Prof. P. Seager
Mr. P. Tuddenham
Prof. A. L. Webb
Prof. J. Wilson-Barnett
Mrs. L. S. Worthington
Dr. P. Yerrell

Drinamyl

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information has been received, and what guidance has been issued, by her Department regarding the side-effects of the drug, Drinamyl.

Dr. Mawhinney: Drinamyl is the proprietary name for a product containing dexamphetamine and amylobarbitone. This was indicated for mild temporary emotional disturbances but was withdrawn from the market in 1978. The Committee on Safety of Medicines received nine reports of suspected adverse reactions to Drinamyl. A report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily mean that the reaction was caused by the drug. The most important side effects of Drinamyl are dependence and psychosis, and the abuse potential of this type of drug is well recognised. The Department has not issued any specific guidance about the side-effects of Drinamyl.

General Practitioners

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the total number of general practitioners and the whole-time equivalent and (b) the total number of, and the amount paid to, general practitioners receiving deprivation payments in each of the low, medium and high categories for 1991-92 and 1993-94; and what are the comparable figures in each case for fund holding general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: (a) The total number of general practitioners and the whole time equivalents for England in 1991-92 and 1992-93 is as follows:

	Number of GPs	Whole Time Equivalent
1 October 1991	25,686	25,039·05
1 April 1992	25,823	25,108·25

(b) The total number of GPs receiving deprivation payments in each of the low, medium and high categories in England for 1991-92 and 1992-93 is as follows:

	Low	Medium	High	Total
1 October 1991	10,035	6,200	4,272	11,485
1 April 1992	10,363	6,431	4,584	11,833

It is possible for a GP to have patients in a combination of deprived areas. The sum of the three areas is not, therefore, equal to the total number of GPs. The figure given in the "Total" column is the number of GPs with patients in any deprived area.

The total amounts of deprivation payments in each of these categories for 1991-92 is as follows:

Lower	8,341,614·68
Medium	8,749,245·27
High	13,803,269·91

Notes:
Figures are not yet available for 1992-93.
Separate figures are not available for fundholding GPs.

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the total number and list the names of those organisations and individuals who have made submissions (a) in favour of a tobacco advertising ban and (b) against a tobacco advertising ban, in relation to the publication "Effect of Tobacco Advertising on Tobacco Consumption", a discussion document reviewing the evidence.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 8 March 1993]: Comments were invited on the overall analysis, methodology and original pieces of work in the Department of Health discussion document. Respondents were not asked to indicate their position on a tobacco advertising ban. A total of 275 representations have been received which make reference to the discussion document. Of these 232 include statements in favour of a ban and 13 include statements against a ban. A copy of the list of names of organisations and individuals who have made representations has been placed in the Library.

Contracting-out

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of cumulative savings to the national health service from the contracting-out of support services; and what plans she has to extend contracting-out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 16 February 1993, column 160]: The national health service has since its early days been a substantial purchaser of supplies from commercial contractors. Building construction, building maintenance, computer and medical equipment maintenance, for example, have been bought in from external sources and subjected to market testing procedures. Since 1983, the market testing of NHS support services has been extended by the introduction of the management requirement for regular market testing of domestic cleaning, catering and linen and laundry services. More than 20 other support services have also been market tested, resulting in a saving in 1990-91 in excess of £125 million in NHS overhead costs. Market testing in the NHS is being further extended to all areas of support services as set out in the November 1991 White Paper "Competing for Quality".

My right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is today placing in the Library guidance on the implications for market testing of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. In some cases where work is awarded to an outside contractor following market testing that may constitute the transfer of an undertaking in the terms of the regulations. If so, the regulations provide that the new employer takes over responsibility for the employment contracts of the employees, who would transfer on their previous terms and condition of service. The guidance sets out circumstances in which the regulations are, and are not, likely to apply, and explains their effect where they do.

This guidance will be equally relevant to the NHS market testing programme and I hope that national health service managers and contractors will find the guidance helpful.

The NHS will press ahead with its challenging programme of market testing in the expectation that this will lead to both improvements in quality of service and financial savings, thereby releasing resources for direct patient care.

SCOTLAND

Legal Aid

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the legal aid budget is taken up by civil legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Civil legal aid payments represented 20·8 per cent. of the total amounts paid to solicitors and counsel by the Scottish Legal Aid Board in 1991-92.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of legal aid applications have been granted in each district court, sheriff court, and the high court in Scotland for each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the proportion of successful legal aid applications for summary criminal proceedings in the sheriff and district courts and for civil proceedings in the sheriff court is set out in the table. Criminal legal aid in solemn procedures is granted directly by the courts and that information is not held centrally.

Proportion of legal aid applications granted:

Tayside Health Services

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the number of job losses in each hospital following the implementation of current Tayside health board acute services review.

Mr. Stewart: Following Tayside health board's acute services review the number of job losses at each hospital in each area has been assessed as follows:

(a) Perth and Kinross

About 20 whole time equivalent posts will be lost when services transfer from Bridge of Earn hospital to the new Perth royal infirmary in June 1993. These changes are independent of the board's acute services review.

(b) Angus

The exact number of job losses will not be known until the public consultation period is complete and decisions reached.

The maximum reductions in whole-time equivalent staff are expected to be:

	Number
Forfar Infirmary	18·7
Stracathro Hospital	9·2
Arbroath Infirmary	12·6
Total	40.5

(c) Dundee

The impact on jobs is dependent on the extent of development required at Ninewells hospital to replace Dundee royal infirmary. Until decisions are reached on the board's review it is not possible to begin detailed work on assessing the implications for that hospital. As a result, the board is not yet able to assess future staff numbers in Dundee.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the capital allocations made to Tayside health board in each of the past four years and the amount of additional allocation made this year; and what is their relationship to Scottish health services revenue equalisation parity.

Mr. Stewart: The capital allocation to Tayside health board in each of the last four years was:

	£ million
1989-90	11·144
1990-91	11·856
1991-92	16·607
1992-93	18·928

In 1992-93 a supplementary allocation was made to health boards and, of this, Tayside was allocated £600,000.

Unlike revenue allocations to health boards capital allocations are not distributed on a "SHARE" formula basis. Health boards and NHS trusts submit their proposals for capital projects to the Scottish Office Home and Health Department. These are reviewed and allocations are made, primarily on the basis of local and national strategic objectives and priorities. The total capital programme for the NHS in Scotland in 1992-93 was £229·588 million.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current numbers of ambulances and ambulance staff serving the Angus area; and what increases are planned to meet the changes in hospital services proposed by Tayside health board.

Mr. Stewart: There are currently 17 ambulances and 35 ambulance staff serving the Angus area.

Until the board has made a decision on the future of acute services in the area it is not possible to determine what changes might be required to the ambulance service.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had or plans to have with Tayside health board regarding provision of ambulance services in consequence of proposed changes in Angus hospital services.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Health and Home Affairs met the chairman and general manager of Tayside health board on 29 January. During the meeting, the board outlined the remaining work programme for its review of acute services, inlcuding its plans to hold discussions with the Scottish ambulance service. These were to establish the implications for the ambulance service in Angus of the board's options for acute services in that area.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the services closed and reduced at (a) Stracathro and (b) Arbroath infirmary over the past 10 years, stating the reduction in manpower and buildings.

Mr. Stewart: The following changes have been introduced at Stracathro hospital and Arbroath infirmary during the last 10 years.

Stracathro Hospital

In 1987 in-patient gynaecology services were withdrawn and replaced by a day-case only service. The resources were reallocated to another speciality and there was no effect on staff or buildings.

During 1990 surgical paediatric bed numbers were reduced by eight; orthopaedic surgery decreased by four to 96; and general surgery from 41 to 37. The changes had no effect on staff or buildings.

In 1991, Grampian health board ceased referring patients to the orthopaedic service at Stracathro. This resulted in a reduction of 49 available orthopaedic beds at the hospital. This service change resulted in the following staff reductions:

	Reduction per cent.
Physiotherapy	0·5
Catering	3·0
Cleaning	2·6
Nursing	[1]36·7

[1]Whole-time equivalents

Arbroath Infirmary

In August 1989, gynaecology day surgery services were withdrawn, but this had no effect on staff numbers.

In 1990 the number of maternity beds were reduced from 18 to 9, reflecting actual usage. There was no effect on staff numbers.

Between 1985 and 1987 specialist gynaecology, general surgery and medical paediatrics services transferred to Dundee or Stracathro hospital and a day ward was created for minor surgery. The surgical bed complement was also reduced from 34 to 13 day beds.

Some staff transferred to Stracathro along with general surgical beds, while others were redeployed at Little Cairnie, or lost through natural wastage.

All the above changes were carried out by redeployment of staff.

Local Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the budget for each local enterprise company in Scotland for 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart: The allocation of resources to the local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to my hon. Friend.

Edinburgh University Dental School

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has received regarding the future of the University of Edinburgh dental school; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements have been made for specialist care and continuing education following the closure of the University of Edinburgh dental school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Discussions between the University of Edinburgh and Lothian health board and the Scottish Office Home and Health Department about the proposed new Edinburgh dental hospital continue. My right hon. Friend remains fully committed to providing such capital investment as is necessary to establish the dental hospital. It will be for the Edinburgh royal infirmary NHS trust, if its application for trust status is approved, to take forward plans for a new dental hospital and for continuing dental education and to negotiate contracts for the provision of specialised dental services with prospective purchasing health boards.

Market Testing

Mr Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the market testing of public services in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today placed in the Library guidance on the implications for market testing of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. I also refer my hon. Friend to the separate statements which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health are making on specific issues raised by the application of the regulations to their areas of responsibility.

I hope that the guidance and statements will be helpful to all those involved in market testing, including compulsory competitive tendering, to the extent that they set out circumstances in which the regulations are, and are not, likely to apply, and explain their effect where they do. My Departments and the NHS in Scotland are pressing ahead with their extensive programmes of market testing. I am confident that innovative proposals will be produced, offering good value for money, whether or not the regulations apply.

Local authorities, of course, must conduct compulsory competitive tendering according to the relevant legislation. If in the light of all the circumstances of any individual case, it appears to me that a local authority has behaved so as to unlawfully restrict, distort or prevent competition, I will consider taking statutory action.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions since 1991 compensation has been paid in respect of not planting conifers in sites of special scientific interest; and what has been the sum paid out in each year.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The information supplied by Scottish Natural Heritage is as follows:

Year[1]	Agreements involving lump sum payments		Agreements involving annual payments		Interest paid[2]	Total
	No.	Amount £	No.	Amount £	£	£
1991-92	15	1,085,773	2	18,060	450,159	1,553,992
[3]1992-93	5	674,014	3	8,800	158,298	841,112

[1] Financial year, April to March inclusive.
[2] Interest on the agreed compensation is payable over the period during which the arbitration agreement is concluded.
[3] Year to date. The final outturn is not expected to be substantially different.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inmates have escaped from Scottish prisons each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of inmates escaped
1979	38
1980	41
1981	61
1982	45
1983	39

[1] to 28 February.
Note: Figures from 1979-87 are for calendar years. The 1988-89 figure represents a transitional period of 15 months.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the prisons in Scotland, giving the number of inmates and prison officers at each for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: [holding answer 2 March 1993]: The information requested is included in reports "Prisons in Scotland" and for 1991-92 "Scottish Prison Service" presented to Parliament annually by my right hon. Friend. Details are as follows:

Year	Command No.	Average Daily Number of Prisoners or Inmates	Staff (Full-Time and Part-Time)

Potatoes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to obtain comparative information about EC member state intervention into the potato market; and if he will give figures showing assisted purchases of potatoes in 1992 for the United Kingdom, France and Spain.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Information about EC member state intervention in the potato market is not formally obtained by my Department.

We are aware that certain other member states—for example, France, Italy, Spain and Portugal—may operate ad hoc intervention and other support measures in times of over-supply. In addition, the Netherlands operates a seed support scheme. Specific figures of assisted purchases by France and Spain are not however available.

The amount of the United Kingdom Government contribution towards the Potato Marketing Board's joint support buying scheme during 1992-93 has not yet been determined, but a contribution will be made in accordance with the terms of the Government's financial agreement with the board.

Winter Deaths

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of excess winter deaths in Scotland in each year since 1987.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: The information available is given in the table.

Number of deaths by quarter, Scotland, 1987-92

Year (Quarters)		Number of deaths
1987	1	16,881
	2	14,925

The 1992 figures are still provisional.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to amend the advice offered by his Department on 1 December 1992 to Ayrshire and Arran health board in connection with the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981;

(2) what advice he has given to health boards on the effect of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 in relation to the transfer of services to opt-out trusts.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 March 1993]: Advice was given on 1 December by the central legal office for the national health service in Scotland, which is a division of the Common Services Agency. That advice was given to Ayrshire and Arran health board and was intended to offer general guidance in relation to the regulations.

The National Health Service Act (Scotland) 1978, as amended, makes express provision in relation to the transfer of health board staff to NHS trust on existing terms and conditions of their employment.

Forestry

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount spent in each of the last 10 years on supporting British forestry in both cash and real terms; what is his estimate of future costs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The bulk of public funding for forestry is channelled through the Forestry Commission. Figures showing the Commission's total net expenditure for the past 10 years, and estimates for the next four years, are given in the table. These include the net cost of managing the commission's forests, the net cost of forestry research, and grants paid to private forest owners. They do not take account of the Government's support for forestry through tax relief, which will no longer be available after the end of the current tax year, nor the income from disposals of Forestry Commission land.

Hazardous Waste

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with other member states of the European Community concerning the draft directive on the incineration of hazardous waste; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 March 1993]: None. In accordance with normal practice it is my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment who has the lead in discussions and negotiations with other member states in connection with this directive.

Qualifications and Skills

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation, the Confederation of British Industry, or the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance to discuss ways in which his policies can more effectively encourage individuals in Scotland to improve their qualifications and skills.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend will continue to hold frequent meetings with industry representatives to discuss policies relating to skills and qualifications, and the way individuals might make best use of them.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement giving the details of those policies which have been introduced by his Department in each of the last five years in order positively to encourage individuals in Scotland to improve their skills and qualifications.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The Government have taken a number of significant steps in the last five years to encourage individuals to improve their skills and qualifications.

These steps include: introduction of youth training and youth credits; introduction of employment training which merges, with employment action, into training for work from 1 April 1993; continued rapid development of the system of Scottish vocational qualifications and other measures to secure parity of esteem with academic qualifications; and introduction of Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their networks of local enterprise companies.

Further details for each year can be found in the relevant departmental reports and from the period from April 1991 from the annual reports of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been (a) the tonnage of landings for first sale and importing and (b) the levy collected by the Sea Fish Industry Authority on these landings in respect of (i) white fish, (ii) pelagic fish, (iii) shellfish and (iv) roe and other fish products at Peterhead in each of the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The information on landings by fishing vessels and imports into Peterhead is set out in the following tables:

	Tonnes
	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Landings
Whitefish	87,012	75,858	69,481	71,592	64,828
Pelagic	29,922	24,329	33,092	46,853	45,043
Shellfish	196	607	633	762	860
Livers/Roes	42	53	36	48	51
Imports
Whitefish	314	704	103	121	267
Pelagic	—	—	—	3,119	2,709
Shellfish	—	—	—	—	153
Livers/Roes	—	—	—	—	—

The question of the levy collected by the Sea Fish Industry Authority on these landings and imports is a matter for the chief executive of the authority and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Legal Aid and Advice

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the proportion of the adult population of Scotland which after 1 April will be eligible for (a) legal advice and assistance and (b) legal aid, for civil purposes on a nil contribution; what is his current estimate of the proportion of the adult population of Scotland which after 1 April will be eligible for (i) legal advice and assistance and (ii) legal aid for civil purposes irrespective of the level of contribution; what is the current proportion of the adult population of Scotland currently eligible for (1) legal advice and assistance and (2) legal aid for civil purposes on a nil contribution; and what current proportion of the adult population of Scotland is eligible for (y) legal advice and assistance and (z) legal aid, for civil purposes irrespective of the level of contribution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Given the variations over time in individuals' circumstances it is not possible to estimate with any precision the proportion of the adult population eligible for legal aid.

Further analyses of data from the family expenditure survey have been undertaken since my reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 228, to the hon. and learned Member. These suggest that in Scotland the percentage of households which would be eligible for civil legal aid under the new proposed changes to eligibility criteria, as announced in my reply of 17 February, Official Report, column 226, to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson), would be in the range of 50 to 60 per cent., with between 15 to 25 per cent. free of contributions. A similar number would be eligible for advice and assistance, with between 25 to 30 per cent. free of contributions. This represents no substantive change in the total numbers eligible, but a drop of between 5 and 10 per cent. of households currently eligible for free civil legal aid or advice and assistance.

Community Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements and decisions remain to be finalised in connection with the transfer of community care responsibilities to social work departments.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly make statutory directions on consultations on plans and on choice of residential accommodation. He will issue the following regulations relating to the funding arrangements for people in residential care and nursing homes:

1. The National Assistance (Sums for Personal Requirements) Regulations 1993.
2. The Residential Accommodation (Relevant Premises, Ordinary Residence and Exceptions) Regulations 1993.
3. The Charging Order (Residential Accommodation) (Scotland) Order 1993.

My right hon. Friend will also issue guidance on these regulations and on sections 21 to 24 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983 and the successor arrangements to the independent living fund.

Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of young people eligible for the Government's youth training guarantee in each local enterprise company area; and what is the number of young people receiving youth training.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Information about the number of young people eligible for the youth training guarantee in each local enterprise company area is unavailable. Local enterprise companies estimate demand in their areas for the purpose of planning provision and keep in touch with demand through liaison with the careers service, so that supply can be adjusted to ensure that the guarantee is met. The number of young people receiving youth training in Scotland as at December 1992 was 34,332.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish information on the meeting of the youth training guarantee by local enterprise company area.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise have assured Ministers that within their respective networks each local enterprise company is meeting the youth training guarantee; and will continue to meet it. More detailed information about supply and demand in relation to youth training is being refined, in consultation with Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the careers service. It is my intention that appropriate information should be published once that process is complete.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people qualify for employment training; and how many are receiving employment training in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Given that the unemployed are eligible for a wide range of assistance from Government-funded sources, within which employment training is one option, it would not be meaningful to seek to identify the number of people in Scotland who qualify for employment training. As at December 1992 there were 14,813 people receiving employment training in Scotland.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has conducted into the quality and range of youth training and employment training schemes in Scotland; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: The Scottish Office does not conduct such research at its own hand. The long-running evaluation studies of the effectiveness of youth training and employment training organised by the Department of Employment continue to cover Scotland. In addition it has been, since 1991, the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to keep under continuous review the suitability and adequacy of training provided under these schemes.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the comparative expenditure per youth training and employment training place in each year since the commencement of these schemes.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Expenditure in Scotland per youth training and employment training participant is as follows:

	1991-92 (actual)	1992-93 (estimated outturn)
	£	£
Youth Training	2,671	2,791
Employment Training	5,902	6,291

Note: No separate Scottish data exist prior to 1991-92.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what citizens charter provisions apply to the rights of youth training, employment training and employment action participants.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise have drawn up statements of charter standards which they aim to apply to all their dealings with members of the public; and local enterprise companies have either adopted statements of charter standards or are considering doing so. In addition, the Government have stated clearly their commitment to fulfilling the youth training and employment training guarantees and to ensuring that those groups at which the training for work scheme is aimed receive an appropriate standard of treatment.

Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reported staphylococcus aureus cases have occurred in each health board area in the past five years; and what advice his Department gives as to how cases should be dealt with.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The number of cases of multiple-resistant staphylococcus aureus confirmed by microbiological testing and reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit in each of the last five years was as follows:

Health Board	Number of cases reported
	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Argyll and Clyde	2	4	8	33	43

The hospital infection manual, which has been made available for use in both the national health service and the private sector in Scotland, includes detailed guidance on procedures for dealing with any outbreak of this infection in hospitals. I have arranged for copies of the manual to be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the deployment of forces in the Bosnia region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I informed the House on 14 January at column 1057 that in order to enhance the safety of our troops in Bosnia I was authorising the deployment of additional forces to the region. These included HMS Ark Royal and her carrier group, with a light gun battery and associated support units embarked. I made clear that these deployments did not mark any change in our policy in the area. The carrier group reached the Adriatic on 26 January.

We have kept this deployment under continuous review. We judge it still to be essential that the carrier group remains on station in the Adriatic to carry out the role for which it was orginally deployed, and that the associated personnel remain in a high state of readiness. In the light of current circumstances, we are satisfied that this readiness can now be achieved by moving most of the Army personnel concerned, who have been embarked on ships in the Adriatic, to the United Kingdom where they will be able to resume normal training. They will be available to rejoin their equipment by air at very short notice if this becomes necessary.

Vulcan Bomber

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason training flights for the remaining Vulcan bomber have been continued; and when has been the cost of continuing training from September 1992 to the present.

Mr. Aitken: The Vulcan is flown occasionally to maintain aircrew currency for a delivery flight to its eventual purchaser. The additional cost of operating and maintaining the aircraft between 20 September 1992—the date of its last display—and 26 February 1993—its most recent continuation flight—was approximately £3,600.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the exact role (a) Brown and Root, (b) Hunting plc and (c) Atomic Energy Authority Technology would play in the day-to-day management of the AWEs.

Mr. Aitken: Brown and Root, Hunting plc and AEA Technology have formed Hunting BRAE Ltd. as a joint venture company, which has been selected as the winner of the competition to appoint a contractor to operate the Atomic Weapons Establishment from 1 April 1993. It is Hunting BRAE Ltd., rather than its parent organisation, which will have the responsibility and authority for day-to-day management of the establishment after that date, subject of course to MOD's stringent operating requirements.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD properties were (a) offered for sale and (b) sold under their discount scheme in 1992, 1991 and 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Offered for sale	Sold
1992	321	385
1991	460	525
1990	721	715

Some of the properties sold were dwellings which were offered for sale in the previous year.

Service Personnel (Housing)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has had with local authority associations concerning the housing needs of personnel leaving the services;

(2) what discussions he has had with local authorities in areas covering MOD sites concerning the housing needs of personnel leaving the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Officials from my Department are in regular contact with local authorities. The Department of the Environment circular 54/75 gives local authorities advice about the housing requirements of ex-service personnel. My officials have been considering with Environment Department officials the revision and re-issue of that guidance. The Department of the Environment will be consulting local authority associations on the draft text of a replacement circular shortly.

Inhumane Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the defence implications of the delay in ratification of the 1981 inhumane weapons convention by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the defence implications of the delay in ratification of the 1977 additional protocols to the Geneva convention by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no defence implications. Our armed forces already adhere to the principles laid down in both the additional protocols to the Geneva conventions and the United Nations weaponry convention.

Secondary Medical Care

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 February to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), Official Report, column 740, what estimate his Department has made of the cost of building a new joint RAF-NHS hospital in East Anglia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to build a new joint hospital.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 February to the hon. Member for Woodspring, (Dr. Fox) Official Report, column 740, what estimate his Department has made of the cost of modernising and expanding the Princess Alexandra hospital, Wroughton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is commercial-in-confidence.

Princess Mary Hospital, Halton

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the costs of closing the Princess Mary hospital, Halton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This will depend on the future use of the hospital site.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with (a) Oxford regional health authority, (b) Buckinghamshire Purchasing Agency, (c) Aylesbury Vale community health council, (d) Buckinghamshire family health services authority and (e) Stoke Mandeville hospital concerning his decision to close the Princess Mary hospital, Halton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exploratory meetings have taken place between Royal Air Force staff and representatives of the Oxford regional health authority, the Buckinghamshire Purchasing Agency, and the Stoke Mandeville hospital to discuss our proposals for the reorganisation of RAF secondary medical care. We will be seeking the views of all local health bodies affected by our plans.

Stoke Mandeville Hospital

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposals for the establishment of an MOD-funded wing at Stoke Mandeville hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of potential sites for the proposed joint MOD/NHS venture to cover our requirements in East Anglia are being considered. A final decision on location has not yet been made.

Civil Servants (Redundancies)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many central London-based administrative level civil servants in his Department of administration trainee level and above have been made redundant or warned for redundancy in the past 18 months; and if he will classify these by rank.

Mr. Aitken: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Aitken: Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The services contracted out since November 1991 have, however, included some cases where a substantive in-house bid was not tested against external competition, but not necessarily because an in-house bid was "excluded". The reasons for these include the requirement being for a short-term contract making in-house provision impracticable, and the in-house operation being invited to bid but declining to do so.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in the Land Registry since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Land Registry it is my responsibility to answer questions on operational matters. The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has therefore asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to him concerning HM Registry's market testing programme.

Since November 1991, market testing projects relating to the following services have been initiated:—

- Building Management/Maintenance and Estate Services
- Legal Services
- Catering
- Security Guarding
- Land Registry Surveys
- Land Registry Property Inspections
- Printing and Graphic Design
- Records Management

These projects are at varying stages of development but none that involve existing in-house provision have reached the point at which a contract has been awarded. The Registry will continue to participate in the service-wide initiative to market test appropriate services. The market testing programme is one component of the Registry's commitment to improve the quality of the service it provides and ensure that its customers receive best value for money.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff in the Land Registry are assigned to the market-testing programme; how much the programme has cost the Land Registry since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 March 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Land Registry it is my responsibility to answer questions on operational matters. The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has therefore asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to him concerning resources used in HM Land Registry's market testing programme.

The Registry has appointed a Project Board to oversee its market testing programme. Staff involved with the programme report, via Project Managers, to the Project Board. The equivalent of approximately 6 full time staff are engaged on this work. From November 1991 to date, the total staff and non-staff costs associated with the programme is estimated to be £250,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff in the Lord Chancellor's Department are assigned to the market-testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are 12 staff assigned to the market testing programme in the Lord Chancellor's Department. The programme has cost £375,000 since November 1991. These figures include those engaged on the review of enforcement agents and their cost, as well as the costs of those consultants engaged to assist with managing the programme.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in the Lord Chancellor's Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; and what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since November 1991 the Lord Chancellor's Department has put out to tender the professional services required to manage its accommodation and development of new court buildings. Prior to that date these services were provided by PSA Services.

Lists of the commissions which have been let are as follows:

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the firms of consultants used by the Land Registry as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Land Registry it is my responsibility to answer questions on operational matters. The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has therefore asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to him concerning the use of consultants as part of HM Land Registry's market testing programme.

The Land Registry has used the following consultants to assist in carrying through its market testing programme:—

Building Management/Maintenance and Estate Services—Acer Consultants Limited

Catering—Touche Ross

The estimated total cost in the current financial year is £152,000. The Registry employs external consultants for market testing purposes when there is a need to supplement the expertise and experience of its own staff. That policy will continue to be applied to future market testing programmes.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the firms of consultants used by the Lord Chancellor's Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The firms of consultants used by the Lord Chancellor's Department as part of the market-testing programme since November 1991 are:

PE International
AMTEC Consulting
DM Management Consultants Ltd.
Kyte and Co.
Coopers and Lybrand
Price Waterhouse
MBA Consultants

The total cost as at 1 March 1993 is £152,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from the Land Registry since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 March 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Land Registry it is my responsibility to answer questions on operational matters. The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has therefore asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to him concerning services contracted out from HM Land Registry.

Since November 1991 no further services or functions have been contracted out from the Land Registry. In-house bids are being invited in respect of each of the internal services currently included in the Land Registry's market testing programme.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the House Library.

Contract Law

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) of 10 February, Official Report, column 623, if he will list the representations he has received on the Law Commission's proposals to abolish the principle of privity of contract distinguishing between those in favour of those opposed to the proposals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No, it would not be practicable to do so. The Lord Chancellor has received a large number of representations from commercial landlords and tenants on the Law Commission's proposals. Although in general the former oppose and the latter support them, there is no uniformity of view within each group; for example, there are differing opinions among landlords as to whether the proposals should extend to future leases and among tenants as to whether they should extend to existing leases.

Legal Aid

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the total legal aid budget is accounted for by the cost of compulsory attendance and cover to police stations by solicitors 365 days per year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total cost of the duty solicitor police station scheme in 1991-92, which provides for an initial telephone service as well as attendance at police stations, was £53·6 million. This accounted for 5·9 per cent. of the total net expenditure on legal aid. Information on the detailed breakdown of the overall figure is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Rural Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many units were provided by housing associations in rural areas for each year since 1979; and what proportion this represented of the total provision for housing associations for that year.

Sir George Young: Figures are readily available only for schemes supported by the Housing Corporation since 1989-90. Information for earlier years cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. The numbers of approvals granted by the Housing Corporation since 1989-90 in settlements with populations of 3,000 or fewer and the proportion of total approvals these represent are as follows:

	Approvals in settlements of 3,000 or fewer	Proportion of total approvals Per cent.
1989-90	578	2·7
1990-91	348	2·8
1991-92	2,345	5·5
1992-93	1,788	3·7

The 1992-93 figures are to 28 February 1993, and exclude approvals given under the housing market package.

Council Tax

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a 50 per cent. reduction in council tax for single householders in place of the current reduction.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. The existing 25 per cent. discount for single adult households is reasonable.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to improve the performance of the Docklands light railway.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman of the Docklands light railway yesterday announced the signing of a contract with Brown and Root Projects Ltd. to deliver improved performance and equipment reliability for the railway. The contractor will take responsibility for completing and commissioning the new extension to Beckton, for introducing new rolling stock and an advanced new signalling and control centre. The contract is based on specified levels of performance and system reliability which will provide direct benefits to the quality of service offered to the DLR's customers.

Local Government, Derbyshire

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Local Government Commission to publish draft recommendations for local government structure in Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The draft recommendations were due on 21 March. However, the commission has asked for more time to consider the many representations made to it, particularly on community identity. I have today issued a direction which extends this stage of the process until 16 May 1993.

This extension will not effect the time allowed for public consultation on the draft recommendations. There will however be a corresponding reduction in the time allowed for the commission to prepare the final report, so it is still due on 19 September.

Light Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has carried out or commissioned in relation to minimising light pollution; what information his Department has on the use in Spain of lighting designed to restrict light shining skywards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

My Department is participating in the work of the Commission Internationale de l'Eclairage (CIE) to provide international guidelines to minimise light pollution from road lighting. The CIE is also considering light pollution from other sources of external light. We have no information on specific lighting schemes in Spain.

Practices are being developed to curb light pollution as far as possible. Guidance will be published this year on the environmental aspects of good lighting practice; this will be followed by the Department on its trunk roads, and I hope other highway authorities will do the same. Designs to minimise light pollution will be used whenever lighting is being planned for trunk roads in rural areas. Research has been commissioned into lighting at rural roundabouts to minimise light pollution.

EDUCATION

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications have been received for the building of new voluntary-aided schools in the last 15 years.

Mr. Forth: Full information in the form requested is not readily available. However, the Department's records show that since November 1988 the Secretary of State has considered proposals under section 13 of the Education Act 1980 to establish 33 new voluntary aided schools of which six would have required the provision of new school buildings.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money has so far been spent by his Department on the promotion of grant-maintained status, including advertisements for the GM Helpline; how much has been budgeted for future expenditure in this same area; and if he will make a statement on the application of the rules on the use of advertising to promote Government policies.

Mr. Forth: Information about expenditure on disseminating information about grant-maintained status is circa:

Publications
(from 1 April 1991)	282,000
Conferences
Accommodation	57,000
Specialised support	52,000
Helpline
Advertising	200,000
Operation	25,000

Publication costs prior to 1991 and mailing costs, which form only part of a contract, cannot be dissagregated without incurring disproportionate costs.

For the future 10 further conferences are planned at a total cost of circa £136,000. The Helpline is a pilot scheme only. Expenditure on publications in 1993-94 has been planned on the basis of current demand. In issuing information about self-governing status, officials are subject to the guidelines sent to the Society for Education Officers on 3 March 1993 as a proposed code of conduct for local authorities.

Further Education Staff

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the effect of clause 10 in the proposed new contract for further education staff on the applicability of the Wages Act 1986; and what are the reasons for the inclusion of this clause in the contract.

Mr. Boswell: This is the responsibility of the college employers' forum which drew up the model contract to which the hon. Member refers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the British Government are taking to ensure the implementation of the United Nations resolutions on Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Neither India nor Pakistan fully implemented the UN resolutions of 1948 and 1949, which Britain supported and they have, to some extent, been overtaken by events. We believe the Kashmir dispute can ultimately be solved only by peaceful agreement between India and Pakistan as provided for under the 1972 Simla agreement.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) of 7 December, Official Report, column 461, what action the British Government have taken to encourage Pakistan and India to agree a means of settling their dispute over Kashmir as provided for in the Simla agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have taken every opportunity in our discussions with the Indian and Pakistan Governments to encourage them to agree a means of settling their dispute over Kashmir as provided for under the 1972 Simla agreement.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Open Government

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the principles and criteria which will be used to determine to what areas and matters openness will apply in relation to his open government initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: The aim of this initiative is to ensure that we reach the right balance between greater openness and the need to preserve confidentiality and privacy where this is justified.

The Government will be publishing a White Paper later this Session with further proposals on these issues.

Release of Documents

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 303, which specified retained documents mentioned in the representations to him by historians following his invitation of June 1992 are (a) now released, (b) to be released and (c) to remain closed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following documents, mentioned in representations to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster following his invitation to historians in June 1992,

(a) have now been released:—
Papers relating to:
Shingle Street
German Occupation of the Channel Islands
Derek Bentley
John Christie and Timothy Evans
Suez (in addition to those released in 1987)
WM (40) 171, 172 (previously withheld extracts from Cabinet Minutes)
JIC papers and minutes 1939-41
CAB134—Future Policy Committee papers for 1959-61
CAB121—Cabinet Office papers on the Dieppe Raid
PR(56)3—Cabinet Committee paper—Policy Review
D(52)26—Cabinet Committee paper—Defence Policy and Global Strategy
JIC(45)55—Resistance in Norway
JIC(45)76(0)—Resistance in Norway
FO371/72215—Foreign Office file relating to the murder of an American in Greece in 1948
JPS/COS—papers and minutes of the Joint Planning Staff and Chief of Staff (38 out of 51 documents requested)
W071/1240—file relating to the court martial and execution of Josef Jakobs
F0800/256—previously withheld extracts relating to Austen Chamberlain
PES—advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils 1990-91

(b) Will remain closed:—
Court martial records containing sensitive personal information
Domestic files of security and intelligence agencies
1 Joint Planning Staff paper 1948
5 extracts from Chief of Staff minutes 1949-50

All other documents mentioned are under review for possible release.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 2 March, Official Report, column 139, what consideration he has given to location of the secure units; and what factors will be taken into account;

(2) pursuant to his oral statement of 2 March, Official Report, column 139, how much he is setting aside in each of the next five years for the running costs of secure units.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. and learned Friend indicated in his statement on 2 March, cols. 139-42, we are now working up detailed plans for the introduction of a new secure training order for persistent juvenile offenders between the ages of 12 and 15. At this stage, when the necessary discussions have not been concluded, it is not possible to provide the details sought by the hon. Member.

Prison Education

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria have been used in deciding to whom to award tenders for prison education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Contracts have been and will be offered to those providers which offer the best combination of quality and price.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a condition of a successful bid for contracts for market-tested jobs in his Department that they comply with existing conditions which guarantee equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All bidders will be required to comply with statutory obligations relating to equal opportunities for women.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to investigate Wickham Research Laboratories in respect of the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office inspectorate is investigating the allegations made by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection against Wickham Research Laboratories in respect of the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department takes to ensure that non-animal alternative tests are available before he grants any licence for test on live animals for particular purposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office inspectorate, in considering applications for project licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, requires applicants to show that they have considered whether the purpose of the research programme could be achieved by methods not involving living animals.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each prosecution under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 since 1990, the organisation involved and the level of fine.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since 1990 there has been one prosecution under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. In 1991 Chilham Rabbits Ltd. was prosecuted for supplying rabbits for use in scientific procedures, although not designated under section 7 of the Act as a breeding and supplying establishment. The company was fined £75 with £42 costs.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for an independent review of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is kept under review by the independent statutory Animal Procedures Committee.

Hostels

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the shortfall in income underlying the increase in class IX, vote 1, sub-head B1, "probation and bail hostels", in the spring supplementary estimates.

Mr. Jack: Approved probation and bail hostels derive income from payments by, and on behalf of, residents.

The shortfall in income arises because industrial action by the National Association of Probation Officers from March 1992 until January 1993 reduced the numbers of residents in hostels for much of 1992-93.

Police Baton

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 76, what information he has concerning trials outside the metropolitan area of an expandable baton and variants of a straight baton for use by the police service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to allow the prosecution of British citizens who have committed child sexual abuse in Thailand.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 March 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 18 February at column 296.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Mates: The services or functions contracted out from Northern Ireland Departments since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition were:

Department of Health and Social Services

The Child Support Agency contracted out keyholding, catering and cleaning services in August 1992, October 1992 and August 1993 respectively in preparation for the launch of the agency. There was no in-house bid as these are new services and were contracted out in line with the White Paper "Competing for Quality: Buying Better Services".

Department of Economic Development

The facilities management of the Training and Employment Agency's computer systems for Transit, Training Centre Administration and MIS interface was contracted out in September/October 1992. The computer installation was damaged in the explosion at the Forensic Science Laboratories at Belfast and the tight timescale in restoring a full transit service from a contingency site precluded the necessary effort in mounting an in-house bid. Investment appraisal indicated that contractors would be able to find economies of scale which would not be matched in-house. There would also have been substantial additional costs attached to an in-house bid as the computer site had been seriously damaged in the explosion and would have required extensive and expensive refurbishing.

In the unique circumstances of Northern Ireland I would not wish to disclose the names of successful contractors.

National Insurance Inspectors

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many national insurance inspectors are employed in Northern Ireland; and of these how many are trained for this task.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 12 March 1993.

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of National National Inspectors has been passed to me for reply.

There are at present 52 National Insurance Inspectors in Northern Ireland. With the exception of a recently appointed Inspector who is currently undergoing training, all other Inspectors have been given the appropriate training.

I hope this is helpful.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the amounts of revenue support grant to local authorities in Wales for each year from 1990-91 to 1992-93;

(2) what were the total amounts of rate support grant to local authorities in Wales for each of its last three years of operation.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available is shown in table 7.5 of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what were the figures for non-domestic rate payments to local authorities in Wales for each of the last five years;

(2) what were the total amounts of central Government grants to local authorities in Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available is shown in table 1.3 of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total amounts of central Government capital provision to local authorities in Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the following table.

Local authority capital provision[1]

	£ million
1988-89	416·1
1989-90	450·1
1990-91	474·9
1991-92	527·9
1992-93	630·7

[1] The figures shown from 1988-89 and 1989-90 are PES provision. For 1990-91 to 1992-93 they are Assumed Gross Expenditure (AGE) and are not strictly comparable to earlier years. This is the sum of central government's New Planning Total and that expenditure which local authorities are assumed to finance from their own resources.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh local authority income was represented by central Government support, including the transfer of non-domestic rates in 1990 and the switch from local taxation to VAT in 1991, for each financial year since 1979-80; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available is as follows.

[6]1992-93	2,684	1,891	536	240	70	20	9

[1] This table provides a general indication of the trend in the financing of revenue expenditure. Comparisons between the rates (prior to 1990-91) and community charge (1990-91 onwards) systems must be made with caution since expenditure definitions and categories differ. For example specific and supplementary grants within Aggregate Exchequer Grant (included under Government grants prior to 1990-91) are not comparable in coverage to those within Aggregate External Finance (included 1990-91 onwards). Also the split between domestic and non-domestic rates (and rebates relating to each) prior to 1990-91 has been estimated.

The percentages do not add to 100 per cent. for technical reasons: these include rounding and authorities' use of balances.

[2] Local authority revenue expenditure is defined here (i) prior to 1990-91 as "relevant" expenditure plus expenditure on certain non-relevant items such as net expenditure on mandatory student awards (ii) for 1990-91 onwards as revenue expenditure "on a Total Standard Spending basis".

[3] Prior to 1990-91 comprises Rate Suport Grant, specific and supplementary grants within Aggregate Exchequer Grant, domestic rate relief grant and rate rebate grants. For 1990-91 onwards comprises Revenue Support Grant, specific and supplementary grants within Aggregate External Finance, Community Charge Benefit Grant, Transitional Relief/Community Charge Reduction Scheme grants and Community Charge Grant (1991-92).

[4] Prior to 1990-91 estimated non-domestic rate income, net of rebates. For 1990-91 onwards the Distributable Amount.

[5] Prior to 1990-91 estimated domestic rate income, net of domestic rate relief grant and rate rebates. For 1990-91 onwards net of Community Charge Benefit Grant, Transitional Relief/Community Charge Reduction Scheme grants and Community Charge Grant (1991-92) but including community council precepts.

Local Government Employees

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of full-time equivalent local authority employees in Wales, in each financial year since 1979-80, stating separately how many of the total were teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available is shown in the following table.

Local authority staffing[1]

	Total all services Thousands[2]	Lecturers and teachers[3] Thousands[2]
1980	127·9	34·7
1981	125·1	34·0

Clwydian Hospital Trust

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the annual salary of the chairman of the Clwydian hospital trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The chairman of the Clwydian hospital trust receives remuneration at the rate of £19,285 per annum.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from his Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

The Attorney-General: There have been no services or functions contracted out in the circumstances described in the Departments for which I am responsible.

SCOTLAND

Drugs-related Deaths

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a public inquiry into drug-related deaths in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1993]: I understand that the procurator fiscal at Glasgow is currently conducting a detailed series of inquiries into a number of apparently drug-related deaths of young adults in the Glasgow area. The possibility of holding an inquiry under the Fatal Accidents and Sudden Deaths Inquiry (Scotland) Act 1970 is presently being considered by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each block of Forestry Commission land that has been sold since 1979, together with its size and location; and what has been the total revenue from these sales.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 March 1993]: Lists giving details including size and location of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. Records of individual areas sold before July 1981 are not available. The lists are restricted to forest land because information on the sale of other categories of land, such as agricultural land, houses, gardens and minor boundary adjustments, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A total of £171·2 million was realised from sales of all types of Forestry Commission land and property between 1 April 1979 and 31 March 1992.

EMPLOYMENT

Wig Makers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has for improving the quality of training for wig makers in England.

Mr. McLoughlin: The quality of training is primarily the responsibility of employers. However, the Department does assist industry-led quality initiatives through industry training organisations and industry-led bodies. Consideration is being given by industry-led bodies with an interest in wig-making to the development of Scottish and national vocational qualifications.

Women Returners

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on (a) Government incentives and programmes relating to women returners for the last five years, including funding and (b) EC initiatives for women returners which have been implemented or have received funding from the EC in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department supported the "Back to the Future" initiative which provided information and practical assistance to women returners in 1990. Training and enterprise councils deliver a variety of provision to meet the needs of women returners. Employment training and its successor programme, training for work, include a special eligibility route, part-time participation and support with the cost of childcare. Women returners have always been able to make use of job clubs and employment service programme development funds are available to meet the needs of specific groups.

The European social fund supports many projects providing vocational training for women returners and the Community initiative, "New Opportunities for Women", provides for transnational exchange of training opportunities for women.

Our "New Horizons for Women" initiative promotes a whole range of opportunities for women, whatever their circumstances and our new out-of-school child care grant will benefit women who wish to return to work after their children start school.

Training Centres

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the skill centres at Swindon, Deptford, Cardiff, Slough, Manchester regional office, Edinburgh regional office, Enfield annex, St. Helens, Cumbria, East Lancashire, Edinburgh. Lambeth, Leicester, Liverpool, Slough and Wakefield are still functioning as training centres.

Mr. McLoughlin: The training centres at Cardiff, Deptford, Enfield (Annex), St. Helens, East Lancashire, Edinburgh, Lambeth, Liverpool and Wakefield are still functioning as training centres. The training centres at Slough and Swindon are also still functioning but not at their original locations.

The training centre at Leicester is now no longer functioning. The training centre at Cumbria was sold to Training for Industry and Commerce Company Ltd, who are believed to be no longer trading.

Manchester regional office and Edinburgh regional office were Skills Tranining Agency regional offices (RO) and not training centres.

Trade Unions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members can act on behalf of full-time trade union officers as well as members of trade unions; and whether officers are included in the scope of the commission.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members may grant assistance to anyone contemplating or taking proceedings against a union, its officials or trustees, for failure to give effect to the statutory rights of members, or for breach of union rules on certain matters. Provided they can bring the relevant proceedings, full-time trade union officers may apply to the Commissioner for such assistance.

Information Technology

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women, and what percentage of the total, are employed in the information technology industry, excluding word processor operators; how many women, and what percentage of the total, are employed in information technology posts within Government Departments and operations; and which industry employs the highest number of women in information technology-related posts.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information available from the "Labour Force Survey Summer 1992" (June-August) is as follows.

Women Employees and Self-employed in Main occupations most directly related to Information Technology Great Britain (Thousands—not seasonally adjusted)

Occupation[2] [3]	All industry sectors		Public Administration (SIC 91)[4]
	Number	Percentage of total	Number	Percentage of total

[1] Under 10,000 and therefore not shown.
[2] It is not possible to separately identify and exclude word processor operators.
[3] Other people who do some work with computers eg "filing, computer and other records clerks" have not been included.
[4] SIC 91 includes public administration, national defence, police, fire services and justice.
Note: Comparable information for each industry could only be provided at disproportionate cost, but is available via the Quantime LFS Service in the House of Commons Library.

Unemployment, Southampton

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the travel-to-work areas with lower levels of unemployment than those including Southampton, Itchen in (a) development areas (b) intermediate areas, (c) covered wholly or partly by enterprise zones, (d) urban programme partnership authorities or (e) urban programme authorities.

Mr. McLoughlin: Travel-to-work areas which are in development areas or intermediate areas or covered wholly or partly by enterprise zones, urban programme partnership authorities or urban programme areas are listed. The claimant unemployment information requested for these areas can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the long-term unemployed is made up of persons aged over 40 years; and what has been the percentage increase in this proportion over the last three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: In January 1993, 13 per cent. of people who were claimant unemployed for over a year were aged over 40, compared with 17 per cent. in January 1990. This represents a decrease of 4 percentage points.

Restart

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many unemployed people were referred to Restart courses by employment service counsellors (a) between April 1991 and March 1992 and (b) from April 1992 to the latest available date, showing for each period how many of them were unemployed for over two years, how many attended and completed the course, what were the outcomes of the participants and how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the Restart course; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 12 March 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about Restart Courses. These are matters which fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

As you will know from our previous correspondence, Restart Courses are short courses aimed at helping people who are having the most difficulty returning to work. They are not an alternative to regular job search or other employment or training programmes. Essentially they provide people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them confidence to take the next step back to work.

Since 1990, people who have been unemployed for 2 years or more who refuse or fail to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme at their Restart interview, are asked to attend a Restart Course.

As your question has raised a number of specific points, I am setting out the information you have asked for in the four tables attached. Tables 1 and 2 deal with all Restart Course attenders, and tables 3 and 4 refer to those covered by the requirement to attend. As explained in previous replies, we collect at a Regional level the number of people who are referred to the course who are also unemployed for 2 years or more. We have not, however, felt it necessary to keep similar figures for all those referred. The Benefits Agency (BA) make the decision on whether an individual's benefit should be reduced for failure to attend or complete the course. Their figures are compiled by BA Districts which have different boundaries to our own Regions. To avoid confusion, I have given the national figure only.

I hope that this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Gas Tanks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will introduce regulations to require physical barriers to be placed between sites where high-pressure gas tanks are stored and residential areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no such plans.

Older Workers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence she has on the relative levels of difficulty being experienced by persons aged over 55 years in the securing of employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment rates are lower for those aged 56 and over than for younger people, and they have been falling over recent years, so older people who wish to work are more successful than others in securing employment.

Many employers recognise the qualities, experience and reliability of older people. We have recently set up an advisory group on older workers which I chair, to seek out examples of good practice and persuade other employers that it is worth their while to follow suit. The advisory group met for the first time in February, and I am pleased with the progress made.

Worker Protection

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to provide protection for workers against practices which fall below acceptable standards.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 March 1993]: There is already in existence a comprehensive statutory framework of employment protection rights. That will be further enhanced by provisions in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, which is currently before Parliament.

In general, however, terms and conditions of employment are a matter for agreement between employers and employees according to their own priorities, needs and circumstances, without Government intervention.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent on official entertainment in her Department in 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 March 1993]: For 1991-92 I refer the hon. Member to the oral reply I gave him on 16 February 1993, Official Report column 121.

The equivalent figures for 1992-93, to the latest available date of the end of January were £14,215, £8,028, £16,078, £18,450 and £6,410 respectively.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the amount of overpayment made by her Department to TECs in each year for which information is available; how much has been recovered; and how many TECs are still holding money which has been overpaid.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 March 1993]: The information currently available shows overpayments amounting to £3,366,550 and £8,820,016 were made to training and enterprise councils (TECs) in England in 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively.

Of these overpayments, a total of £6,704,068 has been recovered to date. Forty-four TECs still hold overpayment moneys.

Information about overpayments to TECs in Wales is held by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1992, Official Report, column 911, if she will give a regional breakdown of the figures given in the answer.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 11 March 1993]: This information could be provided from the "Labour Force Survey" only at a disproportionate cost. The data may be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answers of 4 March, Official Report, columns 272-73, on skill centre closures, and 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 337-38, on Skills Training Agency properties, what action was taken in respect of the Coventry skill centre when the Skills Training Agency was sold.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 11 March 1993]: When the Skills Training Agency was sold, the business of the Coventry skillcentre was sold to Astra Training Services Ltd. The property was held on a 21-year lease which expires on 30 June 1993. The lease was assigned to Astra Training Services Ltd. for the remainder of its term.

Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will undertake a survey of all offices and agencies for which she has responsibility to ascertain to what extent staff supplying a service to the public are curtailing their work on a Friday afternoon earlier than other days of the week; and if she will make a statement on her policy on hours of staff working each week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 March 1993]: The Department's policy is to ensure that all arrangements relating to the hours of work of staff maintain the overall efficiency of the Department and its services to the public. Recent customer satisfaction surveys in the employment service show high levels of overall satisfaction with the services provided by their offices, the opening hours of which are tailored by management to meet the needs of the local community. We are, nonetheless, happy to arrange for a sample survey to be undertaken.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of persons without accommodation who were income support recipients in England at May 1991 and at the latest available date (a) by local benefit agency office, (b) by DSS region and (c) for England as a whole by age and whether or not they were unemployed at the time.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what discussions his Department has had with the Post Office about the contents of the three new forms for new pensioners currently under trial;

(2) when the current trial of new forms for new pensioners will be completed; and if he will make the results public;

(3) if he will make it his policy for all new pensioners to continue to be equally informed about all the methods of pension payment available to them;

(4) how long before the date on which someone becomes eligible for a state pension he or she is sent the form which asks which method of payment is preferred;

(5) how many people have been sent each type of form in the current trial of new forms for new pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: Our policy is to encourage the use of automated credit transfer which is more secure, reliable and cost effective than order books. Nevertheless the Department will continue to make available to all new pensioners information about all methods of pension payment. Forms are sent to future pensioners approximately four months before the expected date of eligibility.

The three forms being trialled at present are being sent to 8,000 people each. The last of these forms will be sent out on 16 March. The contents of the forms are not a matter for the Post Office, but Post Office Counters Ltd. was made aware of the trial.

The results of the trial will inform our decision on what kind of form to use in future; and that form will of course be published.

Pensioners

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 840, if he will give a breakdown by age of the pensioners with an income of less than £5,000 per year.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates for 1988—the year in respect of which information was given in my reply of 12 February, Official Report, column 840—are given in the table.

Percentage of all pensioner units with gross income under £5,000 per annum

Age	Per cent.
60-64	7
65-69	25
70-74	17
75-79	29
80+	22

Notes:

(a) A pensioner unit is a single person aged over state pensionable age (SPA) or a couple where the head of the unit is over SPA, regardless of whether they are drawing state pension.

(b) The age of a pensioner couple is taken to be the age of the head of unit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cathedrals

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what grants his Department has made towards the preservation of cathedrals.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Sir A. Durant) on 25 January at col. 557.

Durham Cathedral

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to visit Durham city in 1993 for the 9th centenary of Durham cathedral.

Mr. Brooke: I have no present plans to visit Durham this year, but I should be delighted to do so if an appropriate opportunity were to arise.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Fish Imports

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the autonomous tariff quotas, with the duties applied, for the importing of fish into the EC for each category of fish, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: The EC autonomous tariff quotas for fishery products for the past five years were published in EC regulations 785/88, 542/89, 4043/89, 3921/90, 3902/91. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalophathy

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to revise the guidance given to farmers and vets when handling cattle with suspected BSE in relation to the hazard of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease.

Mr. Soames: None. Existing advice, issued by this Ministry and the Health and Safety Executive and agreed with the Department of Health, on the safe handling of suspect cases of BSE remains valid.

HEALTH

NHS Employees

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed full-time and part-time in the NHS in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1984.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available centrally is shown in the table. From 1990, figures are not held centrally for sub-regional levels.

Hospital and community health services (HCHS) staff working in the national health service within Cambridgeshire

All HCHS Staff	Full Time	Part Time	Total
1984	7,210	2,200	9,410
1985	7,270	2,190	9,460
1986	7,200	2,270	9,460
1987	7,180	2,290	9,470
1988	7,370	2,350	9,720
1989	7,440	2,440	9,880
1990	7,520	2,630	10,140

Note:

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.
2. Some totals may not add due to rounding.
3. Figures exclude agency nurse staff.
4. Does not include family health service professionals ie general practioners and general dental practitioners.
5. Does not include regional health authority Headquarters staff.
6. Does not include that part of West Norfolk and Wishbech DHA that is within Cambridgeshire.

HIV Positive Children

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many babies were born to mothers who were HIV positive in the last 10 years; how many of these became HIV positive; and what are the projected figures for the next 10 years;

(2) how many children at each age from birth to 18 years have (a) become HIV positive or (b) died from AIDS in the last 10 years; and what are the projected figures for the next 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: For HIV reports and AIDS cases, children are defined as those under the age of 15 at diagnosis.

By 31 October 1992, 448 children had been born to women known to be HIV infected in the United Kingdom. Of these, 151 have been confirmed as infected with HIV and 133 are not infected. The infection status of the remaining 164 has yet to be determined. The rate of transmission cannot be calculated from these figures because it is likely that not all HIV infected childbearing women will have been identified.

Also by 31 October 1992, there had been an overall total of 422 reports of confirmed HIV infection in children of whom 108 had been diagnosed with AIDS. Fifty-six children with HIV infections were known to have died.

The most recently published projections for AIDS and HIV infection in England and Wales did not give projections for children.

Salmonellosis

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of cases of (a) salmonellosis in all forms and (b) salmonellosis caused by salmonella enteriditis phage type 4 for the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows totals of laboratory reports of all salmonellas and S.enteritidis PT4 made to the public health laboratory service (PHLS).

Salmonella in humans
England and Wales
Annual totals 1988-1992

Year	All Salmonellas	S. Enteritidis PT4
1988	27,478	12,522
1989	29,998	12,931
1990	30,112	16,151
1991	27,693	14,693
[1]1992	31,352	16,981

Source: PHLS/SVS Update on Salmonella Infection.

[1] 1992 data are not directly comparable with previous years because of the introduction from 1 January 1992 of a new PHLS reporting system for human salmonellosis.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people qualified for free prescriptions on the grounds of low income during the year 1991-92; and, of these, how many were in receipt of (a) invalidity benefit, (b) industrial injuries disablement benefit, (c) severe disablement allowance, (d) statutory sick pay, (e) sickness benefit, (f) invalid care allowance and (g) unemployment benefit.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991-92 about 4 million people were estimated to be entitled to free prescriptions on the ground of low income. The information requested on those included in this figure who were in receipt of the benefits listed is in the table.

Estimated number of people in England in receipt of (a) invalidity benefit, (b) industrial injuries disablement benefit, (c) severe disablement allowance, (d) statutory sick pay, (e) sickness benefit, (f) invalid care allowance and (g) unemployment benefit, and their partners, entitled to free prescriptions on grounds of low income in 1991-92

1991-92 ('000s)

Benefit[1]	Number of recipients and their partners, entitled to free prescriptions[2]
(a) Invalidity benefit	126
(b) Industrial injuries disablement benefit	7
(c) Severe disablement allowance	132
(d) Statutory sick pay	8
(e) Sickness benefit	24
(f) Invalid care allowance	33
(g) Unemployment benefit	112

[1] These benefits are not mutually exclusive and people receiving more than one are included in the figures for each benefit they receive.

[2] May include partners over pension age who are exempt from prescription charges on age grounds.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the number of people eligible for free prescriptions; and how many of these exemptions are (a) income related and (b) status related.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1992 over 24 million people were estimated to be eligible for free prescriptions, of which about 20 million were exempt from charges on grounds of status and some 4 million were entitled to remission of charges on grounds of low income. Estimates of the number of people exempt from charges on medical grounds are not available.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from her Department since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Sackville: Since the publication of "Competing For Quality," the Department of Health has contracted out a number of building services—all in its new headquarters building at 80 London road—without entering an in-house bid against the external competition. These are listed with the names of the successful contractors:

—Facilities management: Procord
—Mechanical and electrical: Haden Maintenance Ltd
—Maintenance of lifts: Kone Lifts
—Cleaning: Pall Mall Cleaning Services
—Security: Reliance Security Group
—Waste disposal: Bywater (Leyton) Ltd
—Pest control: Rentokil Environmental Services Ltd.

In the case of Facilities Management, no in-house bid was made as there were insufficient in-house technical skills and expertise to manage a new, high technology building. No in-house bids were made in the other areas because these services were not previously provided by civil servants.

Youth Treatment Centres

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of places in, the occupancy rate in, the cost of and the location of youth treatment centres under her control over the last five years; and whether she has any plans to add to the provision.

Mr. Yeo: The youth treatment service consists of two residential centres—St. Charles in Brentwood, Essex and Glenthorne in Erdington, Birmingham, which have 30 and 40 places respectively. Information on the number of places in the centres occupied, the occupancy rate and the cost of the service over the last five years is shown in the table:

Year	Average Occupancy Numbers	Per cent. Occupancy	Gross Cost £ Thousands
1988-89	63	90	Not Available
1989-90	61	86	5,559
1990-91	61	87	6,467
1991-92	59	84	7,223
1992-93	53	76	[1]7,867

[1] Estimated.
Note: Costs include depreciation rather than gross capital expenditure.

There are no plans to expand the service at present.

Secure Units

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what offer she made to the local authorities on Tyneside for support for the capital costs of the provision of additional local authority secure unit provision; what total level of support for capital costs would be made available from Government sources; and what offer of assistance has been made in respect of revenue costs.

Mr. Yeo: No such offer has been made to local authorities on Tyneside. The Government have identified the need for an additional 12 secure places to be provided within the north-east region, and will meet the full capital costs. Revenue costs will be considered in the appropriate public expenditure survey.

Psychotherapists

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychotherapists are provided on the national health service per head of the population.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps her Department has taken to ensure that there is an easily accessible pool of professional interpreters for approved social workers and doctors, in accordance with 2.35 of the code of practice of the Mental Health Act 1983;

(2) how many local authorities and health authorities have drafted guidance on the use of interpreters in accordance with paragraph 2.35 of the code of practice to the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Yeo: The code offers guidance on good practice. It is for health and local authorities to decide on their joint needs and provide accordingly in the light of particular local circumstances. Information on the number of authorities which have drafted guidance on the use of interpreters is not available centrally.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government have taken to set and monitor targets for recruitment and promotion of mental health staff from black and ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Yeo: Arrangements to monitor progressively all groups of national health service staff recruited from black and ethnic minorities were introduced earlier this year.

Women Smokers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the percentage of women who are (a) employed, (b) on income support and (c) unemployed who smoke.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information relating to the percentage of women aged 16 to 59 in Great Britain who smoke cigarettes is available from the "1990 General Household Survey" by economic status as follows:

All working – 31 per cent.
Unemployed – 54 per cent.

Available analyses do not separately identify those on income support who smoke.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for lowering the smoking rate among low-income females; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The White Paper "The Health of the Nation" sets a target of 20 per cent. for women smoking by the year 2000. In view of their higher smoking rates, it is clearly essential to reach women on low incomes if this is to be achieved.

This will be done through the comprehensive programme set out in the White Paper, including health education, action on price, advice from general practitioners and other health professionals and proper controls on advertising and promotion.

NHS Procurement

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the name and description of all statutory instruments laid before the House on matters relating to NHS procurement in the last 12 months and which are the subject of annual or other renewal.

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware that any statutory instruments of this description have been laid before the House during the last 12 months.

Women's Mental Health

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to address women's specific mental health needs and to minimise their drug dependency by ensuring that they are offered alternatives to drug treatment.

Mr. Yeo: Women's mental health needs, including alternatives to drug treatment, are addressed in the "Health of the Nation Key Area Handbook on Mental Illness" published in January and "First Steps for the National Health Service", which was published in November 1992, copies of which are available in the Library.

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken by the Committee on Monitoring the Agreement on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship to respond to complaints to it about apparent breaches of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the application of restrictions on generic advertisements for smoking of advertising campaigns containing visual clues to, but no reference to, the name of the brand being advertised; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Complaints about the content of advertisements in relation to the cigarette advertising code of practice, part of the British code of advertising practice, are a matter for the Advertising Standards Authority.

Joint Nutrition Task force

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the four working groups of the joint nutrition task force.

Mr. Sackville: The nutrition task force at its first meeting set up working groups in four important areas. Details of the initial membership are shown in the tables. The members of each working group will be expected to consult widely within their areas of expertise and invite others who have particular interest or knowledge in the specific subjects under discussion to contribute as appropriate.

Nursing Homes

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to ensure that all elderly residents in nursing homes are registered with a local general practitioner.

Mr. Yeo: Regulations under the Registered Homes Act 1984 require the person in charge of a nursing home to make adequate arrangements for residents, where necessary, to receive general medical and dental services.

Prescriptions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many items available on a prescription only basis now cost less than the cost of the prescription itself; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 10 March at column 609.

Health Authority Personnel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many candidates for appointment to chairmanship or non-executive directorships of health authorities or trusts were not appointed as a result of their refusal to accept emoluments.

Dr. Mawhinney: None, so far as is known centrally.

Helicopters

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford concerning the landing of the London helicopter emergency medical service on the playground of Monson primary school on 20 January.

Mr. Sackville: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 February explaining that this matter was being thoroughly investigated and that I would write again once inquiries were complete. Officials are meeting the appropriate authorities on Monday 15 March. I will reply fully once the outcome of that meeting is known.

Community Care

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the present funding for care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: We have fully honoured our commitment to fund community care fairly. We have made available £565 million by way of a ring-fenced special transitional grant for English local authorities in 1993-94. This amount includes an additional 35 per cent. over and above the transfer of funds from social security for authorities' new community care responsibilities, and a further substantial sum for responsibilities for severely disabled people. Total resources for personal social services including community care for 1993-94 will be £5,585 million. This represents a 15 per cent. increase on 1992-93, and a real terms increase of more than 33 per cent. over the three year-period from 1990-91.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for publication of data from the maternity hospital episode system.

Mr. Sackville: Some data relating to key items connected with delivery episodes were published for the year 1989-90 in the evidence given to the House of Commons Health Committee, Session 1991-92. The 1990-91 data are still being examined for quality and completeness, but it is expected that at least the same number of data items will be published as for 1989-90. Until this analysis is complete, it will not be possible to give a firm date for publication.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those services or functions that have been contracted out from the Inland Revenue since November 1991 without market testing an in-house bid against external competition, with, in each instance, the successful contractor and the reasons for the decision to exclude an in-house bid.

Mr. Dorrell: Where services have been contracted out since November 1991 by the Inland Revenue, there has been in each case an in-house bid or a full comparison with the cost of providing the service in-house; in the case of the valuation banding of properties for council tax, work was contracted out because the Valuation Office Agency's available resources were limited.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in the Inland Revenue since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is set out in the following table. In the case of catering and estate management it includes market testing of work done by civil servants in other Departments.

Market testing activity	Result	Name of contractor
Records management (off-site store at Nottingham)	Contracted out	Rockall Data Services Ltd.
Valuation banding for council tax	Some work contracted out, some retained in-house	Various private sector firms (337 in total)
Bulk mailing (employers' budget pack)	Contracted out	Mailforce Ltd.
Bulk mailing (employers' annual pack)	Contracted out	Mailforce Ltd., Mail Marketing, Character Mailing and Scotmail
Typing, secretarial and office support services (Nottingham)	Contracted out	Blue Arrow Personnel Services Ltd.
Catering (St. Albans)	Contracted out	Sutcliffe Catering
Catering (South Wales group)	Retained in-house (forward)
Catering (Telford)	Contracted out	Gardner Merchant
Estate management (South Yorkshire and north regions)	Retained in-house (PSA Building Management)
Estate management (Greater Manchester, North West, Northern Ireland and Telford)	Retained in-house (PSA Building Management)
Estate management (South East, Wales)	Contracted out	Symonds FM Plc
Estate management (Scotland)	Contracted out	Faithful and Gould
Estate management (West Midlands, East)	Contracted out	W. Torpy and Partners
Estate management (London and headquarters)	Contracted out	Ferguson, Bucknall and Austin)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff in the Inland Revenue are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost the Inland Revenue since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: At present 40 staff are assigned to market testing in the Inland Revenue. The estimated cost of the programme since November 1991 is approximately £2·7 million.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the firms of consultants used by the Inland Revenue as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The following firms have been used:

Allied Accountancy Services
Coopers and Lybrand
Ernst and Young
Lucidus Ltd.
P-E International
Theordore Goddard
Touche Ross

The total cost of the services of these firms to date is approximately £1·1 million.

Pension Funds

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to protect pension fund surpluses following privatisation.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government will make appropriate arrangements for pension funds in the particular circumstances of individual privatisations.

Bank Notes

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the present arrangements for printing bank notes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The printing of Bank of England bank notes is a responsibility of the Bank. There are no present plans to change the existing arrangements.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many landowners nationally have been granted exemption from part of inheritance tax under agreements to allow access to land or other public benefits; and what was the total cost of that concession.

Mr. Dorrell: There have been 126 designations of land for conditional exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax in England and Wales and 26 designations in Scotland. In addition, there have been 109 designations of historic buildings in England and Wales and 37 designations in Scotland. Some of the designations of historic buildings will have extended to surrounding land. Some designations of historic buildings have been for the purposes of the tax exemptions for maintenance funds rather than for exemption of the buildings themselves.

The annual average cost of inheritance tax conditional exemption for land and buildings is estimated to have been between £5 million and £10 million over the period 1983-84 to 1992-93.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many landowners in north Warwickshire have been granted exemption from portions of inheritance tax under agreements to allow access to land and other public benefits; and what was the total value of that concession.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures are not available on a constituency basis, but, in Warwickshire, fewer than five properties benefited from exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax. The normal rules of taxpayer confidentiality prevent me from giving more precise information.

The national estimates of the cost of conditional exemption represent a broad judgment of the overall cost and are subject to a large margin of error. Where exemption is given, it is not necessary to establish the value of individual properties and it is not possible to estimate the cost of the small number of exemptions in Warwickshire.

EC Tax Laws

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the tax laws in other EC states in force to reduce tax avoidance and evasion as to their applicability to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: Officers of the Inland Revenue regularly meet their counterparts from other EC states to discuss tax compliance matters.

National Savings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the fee payment structure for national savings transactions paid to post offices in each of the last three years; and what was the total payment to post offices in the last two years, and projected for the current year.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is covered by the Post Offices's contractual arrangements with Sub Postmasters and contractual agreement with the Department for National Savings, and is therefore commercially confidential.

TRANSPORT

Road Building and Management

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many full-time and part-time workers, giving each as a percentage of the total establishment of his Department are employed in matters relating to road building.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are 1,298 full-time and two part-time staff employed in directorates of the Department directly concerned with roads construction and highways policy—but excluding the management and maintenance of the motorway and trunk road network—on matters relating to road building. This is 8 per cent. of the Department's total staff of 16,027.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each major trunk road scheme approved for each of the last five years, together with start date, estimated completion date and actual completion date giving details of how he arrived at (a) the justification for the road and (b) the environmental impact assessment carried out in each case; and what alternatives to road building were considered by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Schemes approved, constructed or under construction during the last five years are as listed.

Further information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, once approval has been given and funds are made available, schemes take about 18 months to two years to build on average. An environmental assessment was carried out for each scheme and the justification for each scheme is set out in the decision letter. Since 1988 where appropriate an environmental statement has been published. Copies of these documents are held by the relevant regional offices of the Department of Transport.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received since 1 March on the transport of plutonium nitrate from Dounreay to Sellafield by sea.

(2) what representations he has received from (a) councillors of the Highland regional council and (b) others on the recent sea shipment of plutonium nitrate from Dounreay to Sellafield.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Two letters from one councillor of the Highland regional council, three letters and one inquiry from others and two parliamentary questions.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the safety standards set out by the International Atomic Energy Authority for how long a flask carrying plutonium should remain unbreached by a fire, is sufficient when compared to the statistics provided by the International Maritime Organisation on the average ship fire.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 March 1993]: The IMO statistics are considered insufficient, taken alone, to determine adequately the risk of such transport. The United Kingdom is therefore actively participating in the joint IAEA/IMO/UNEP working group charged to evaluate the adequacy of the existing provisions and to assess the probabilities of such casualties occurring.

Railway Rolling Stock

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new passenger rail vehicles, including locomotives, rolling stock, and multiple units are scheduled for delivery to the British Railways Board during financial years (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Freeman: The following passenger rolling stock are currently scheduled for delivery:

	Calendar year
	1993	1994	1995	1996
Diesel and electric multiple units.	395	188	—	—
Trainset vehicles (power cars, trailer units and coaches) for Channel Tunnel services	200	—	241	—

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Railways personnel are employed on the maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 18,753 as at 27 February 1993.

European Time

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the average number of deaths and serious injuries during each week of Greenwich mean time that would be avoided by introducing common European time.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Estimates for 1991 are that some 140 deaths, 520 seriously injured and 2,000 casualties in total could be saved by adopting double British summer time. It is estimated that approximately three quarters of these savings accrue in the 22 weeks during winter when Greenwich mean time is currently in force.

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates have been made of the likely proceeds from the first, second and third wave of trust port sales.

Mr. Norris: The total of the sale prices for the five ports privatised last year under the Ports Act 1991 is £380 million. No estimate has been made of the likely proceeds from the sales of any further trust ports.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the announcement will be made for the next wave of trust ports for privatisation.

Mr. Norris: The powers which the Secretary of State has under the Ports Act 1991 to require trust ports with a turnover above a specified threshold to privatise themselves will become available on 25 July 1993. The Secretary of State has not yet decided which ports he shall consult, under the terms of the Act, concerning their privatisation.

Train Drivers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hours were worked per week on average by British Railways Board train drivers during the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the week ended 27 February 1993 railway train drivers, excluding those absent through sickness or for other reasons for all or part of the week, worked an average of 47·9 hours.

Concessionary Rail Travel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are currently in receipt of British Railways privilege ticket facilities.

Mr. Freeman: About 600,000 serving, former and retired British Rail staff and their dependants.

Traffic Congestion

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the environmental costs of traffic congestion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have no estimate of the environmental costs of traffic congestion. The Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment was asked to investigate methods for the monetary valuation of the environmental effects of road transport in 1989. Its report published in March 1992 recommended, and the Department accepted, that a substantial research programme would be required to develop reliable monetary values. This will clearly take considerable time to complete.

DVLA

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for the three financial years ending with 1991-92, what sums were recovered by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency enforcement staff in Swansea in respect of (a) alternative payments and (b) recovered licence discs; what sums in penalties were awarded as a result of prosecutions; what were the comparable figures for Post Office Counters Ltd. in 1992-93; and what was the cost of closing the returned cheques operation in Swansea.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The sums recovered by Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency enforcement staff in respect of dishonoured vehicle excise duty cheques in each of the last three financial years were as follows:

	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
Alternative Payments (for example, cash banker's draft)	5,227,829	6,550,755	7,279,615
Recovered licence discs	1,346,129	1,760,073	2,015,949
Amounts awarded in fines and penalties as a result of prosecutions over the same period were	1,192,645	1,798,426	2,616,925

The sums recovered by Post Office Counters Ltd. between April 1992 and January 1993 were:

Alternative payments	4,529,707
Recovered licence discs	645,379

Note: DVLA remain responsible for prosecution work.

These figures cannot be used to compare performance levels since POCL took on the work on a phased basis from April 1992. Details of the financial contract between DVLA and POCL are commercially sensitive.

Lorries, London

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available to him of the total costs and the total number of rejected applications of the London lorry ban exemption scheme.

Mr. Norris: The London lorry ban is the responsibility of the London boroughs transport scheme. It applies only to local roads. The information requested is not readily available to my Department.

Rail Freight

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what date he has set for the completion of the upgrading process of British Rail's existing freight loading gauge to the SB1 loading gauge.

Mr. Freeman: This is an operational matter for British Rail. I understand that BR has set itself the objective of completing the upgrading in time for the opening of the channel tunnel.

Waterloo Station

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to facilitate transfer of people with mobility handicaps between Waterloo and Waterloo East stations.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has provided a high-level pedestrian bridge over the road between the two stations. Access to the bridge from Waterloo station is by stairs and escalators. There is also a customer-operated lift for people with mobility handicaps. From the bridge to the platforms in Waterloo East all routes are either level or ramped.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the quality of performance of Post Office Counters Ltd. in respect of the contract on dishonoured cheques in payment of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: During negotiations toward the current contract for vehicle relicensing, Post Office Counters Ltd. offered to take over responsibility for following up dishonoured cheques made payable to it. This work had previously been carried out by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency but the POCL price was significantly lower. The contract provides for financial penalties to be payable by POCL from 1 January 1993 for any failure to meet performance levels previously achieved by DVLA's staff.

Rail Travel (Cyclists)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities will be available to cyclists on railways after rail privatisation; and what encouragement will be given to private operators to facilitate the travel of cyclists, both at stations and on trains.

Mr. Freeman: Provision for cyclists following privatisation will be a matter for railway operators, as it is now for British Rail. We believe private sector operators will wish to seize the opportunity to provide a better service and improved facilities, in order to attract more passengers, including cyclists, to the railway.

New Drivers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to (a) introducing restrictions on the power of cars which newly qualified drivers can drive and (b) compulsory motorway driving training and testing either as part of, or post, L tests; and what measures he proposes to tighten the requirements of driver testing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend is considering various options for reducing the high accident rate associated with newly qualified drivers. We hope to issue a consultation paper shortly.

Twyford Down

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 699, on how many people papers were served by Brays detective agency in connection with Twyford Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Brays Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. has served papers on three people in respect of trespass on the Department's land at Twyford Down.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of discharges of noxious substances controlled under the MARPOL regulations in United Kingdom coastal waters occurred in the latest year for which figures are available; and how many prosecutions have been brought relating to discharges of noxious substances from ships in United Kingdom coastal waters in violation of the MARPOL regulations.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 March 1993]: In 1991, the latest year for which details are available, there were 195 reported discharges from ships into United Kingdom waters, which resulted in two successful prosecutions being brought. This excludes prosecutions brought by members of the now defunct British Ports Federation for which no figures are available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Protection of Trading Interests Act

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria are used for assessing the desirability of making statutory instruments under the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980; and if he will list all such statutory instruments which have been made.

Mr. Needham: In general, successive Governments have sought to minimise potential conflicts with our trading partners by seeking to resolve issues through discussion and consultation; they have, however, been prepared to use the powers under the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980 when doing so appeared to be the best way to protect the trading interests of the United Kingdom in particular cases. Since the Act was passed in 1980, the Secretary of State has made statutory instruments in only four cases:

(i) On 30 June 1982, a section 1(1) Order (S.I. 1982 No. 885) was applied to the United States West Siberian pipeline re-export controls.

(ii) On 23 June 1983 a section 1(1) Order (S.I. 1983 No. 900) was applied to sections 1 and 2 of the United States Sherman Act and sections 4 and 4A of the United States Clayton Act in cases where United Kingdom airlines designated under the Bermuda 2 agreement concerning air services are parties to agreements, or other acts, concerning tariffs or which otherwise relate to the operation of an air service authorised under the Bermuda 2 agreement.

(iii) On 23 March 1988, a section 5(4) Order (S.I. 1988 No. 569) was made applying section 5(2)(b) of the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980 to section 81(1A) of the Trade Practices Act 1974 of Australia, making unenforceable in the United Kingdom an overseas judgment under the Australian Act ordering divestment of assets acquired in contravention of that Act's merger control provisions.

(iv) On 14 October 1992 a section 1(1) Order (S.I. 1992 No. 2449) was applied to those provisions of part 515 (entitled Cuban Assets Control Regulations) of title 31 of the Code of Federal Regulations which affect trading activities carried on in the United Kingdom or the import of goods to or the export of goods from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980 has been invoked; against whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Secretary of State has made the following orders and directions under the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980:

On 3 March 1981, a section 2 direction was issued to a United Kingdom company to prohibit compliance with a demand by the United States Commodity Futures Trading Commission to provide it with commercial information located outside the United States.

On 30 June 1982, a section 1(1) order, (S.I. 1982 No. 885), was applied to the United States West Siberian pipeline re-export controls. Such an order brings into operation the Secretary of State's powers under sections 1(2), 1(3), and 2 of the PTIA.

On 2 August 1982, section 1(3) directions were issued to AFF Ltd., Baker Oil Tools (United Kingdom) Ltd., John Brown Engineering Ltd., and Smith International (North Sea) Ltd., to prohibit compliance with the United States West Siberian pipeline re-export controls.

On 10 September 1982, section 1(3) directions were issued to Andrew Corporation and the Walter Kidde Company Ltd., to prohibit compliance with the United States West Siberian pipeline re-export controls.

On 2 November 1982, a section 1(3) direction was issued to Seaco Sales and Service (North Sea) Ltd. to prohibit compliance with the United States West Siberian pipeline re-export controls.

On 23 June 1983, a section 1(1) order (S.I. 1983 No. 900) was applied to sections 1 and 2 of the United States Sherman Act and sections 4 and 4A of the United States Clayton Act in cases where United Kingdom airlines designated under the Bermuda 2 agreement concerning air services are parties to agreements, or other acts, concerning tariffs or which otherwise relate to the operation of an air service authorised under the Bermuda 2 agreement.

On 23 June 1983, a section 1(3) general direction was issued prohibiting any person in the United Kingdom carrying on business from complying with the United States anti-trust measures in relation to the cases described in the section 1(1) order of 23 June 1983.

On 23 June 1983, a section 2 general direction was issued prohibiting any person in the United Kingdom from complying with any requirement from the United States Department of Justice or the grand jury to produce commercial documents located in the United Kingdom or any information concerning possible violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by United Kingdom-designated airlines. The direction also applied to any requirement from the United States district court of Columbia concerning similar matters, which were subject to civil anti-trust proceedings.

On 1 July 1983, a further section 2 general direction was made to clarify the scope of the section 2 general direction issued on 23 June 1983.

On 16 July 1984, a general direction under section 2 was issued prohibiting any person in the United Kingdom from complying with any requirement from the United States district court of Columbia to produce commercial documents in the United Kingdom, or any commercial information in respect of further United States civil anti-trust proceedings against United Kingdom-designated airlines.

On 20 March 1986, general directions under section 2 were issued prohibiting any person in the United Kingdom from complying with any requirement from the United States district court of Columbia and the district court for the central district of California to produce commercial documents in the United Kingdom, or any commercial information in respect of further United States civil anti-trust proceedings against United Kingdom designated airlines.

On 23 March 1988, a section 5(4) order (S.I. 1988 No. 569) was made applying section 5(2)(b) of the PTIA to section 81(1A) of the Trade Practices Act 1974 of Australia, making unenforceable in the United Kingdom an overseas judgment under the Australian Act ordering divestment of assets acquired in contravention of that Act's merger control provisions.

On 12 July 1991, a section 2 direction was issued to a company to prohibit compliance with a court order made by a court in the United States of America.

On 14 October 1992, a section 1(1) order (S.I. 1992 No. 2449) was applied to those provisions of part 515 (entitled Cuban Assets Control Regulations) of title 31 of the United States Code of Federal Regulations which affect trading activities carried on in the United Kingdom or the import of goods to or the export of goods from the United Kingdom.

On 14 October 1992, a general direction under section 1(3) was issued prohibiting any persons in the United Kingdom from complying, except with the consent of the Secretary of State, with the prohibitions imposed by the Cuban Assets Control Regulations cited in the section 1(1) order of 14 March 1992.

Illegal Practices Investigations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by year for the last five years the cost of his Department's investigations into alleged illegal trade practices that have resulted in the allegations not being proved; and if he will show the cost by type of investigation carried out.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Telecommunications Act 1984

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the various target investment limits on Government voting rights imposed under section 65 of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and whether any further changes are under review.

Mr. Leigh: Under the terms of the Telecommunications Act 1984 (Government Shareholding) Order 1992, (Statutory Instrument number 631 of 1992), the target investment limit for the Government shareholding in British Telecommunications plc is set at 22·209 per cent. of the voting rights exercisable in all circumstances at general meetings of the company. This replaces the earlier limit, set out in the Telecommunications Act 1984 (Government Shareholding) Order 1985, of 49·803 per cent. of such voting rights. The Government plan to sell a part of their remaining shareholding in BT in 1993-94. They may wish to further revise the target investment limit again in the light of any sale of shares which takes place.

Coal Imports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of coal imports in tonnes to South Wales ports in each year since 1987; what estimates he has made of the annual tonnage of coal imports into these ports until 1997; and what assessment he has made of the future markets for this imported coal.

Mr. Eggar: The amounts of coal imported to South Wales ports since 1987 were:

Year	Thousand tonnes
1987	2,184
1988	2,499
1989	3,111
1990	3,587
1991	3,680
1992[1]	3,275

[1] Provisional
Source: HM Customs and Excise

We do not make estimates of future imports of coal.

Joint Ventures

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the EC's revised rules for vetting joint ventures and the effects of a warning letter on ongoing joint venture discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The United Kingdom was consulted during the drawing up of the EC Commission's notice concerning the assessment of co-operative joint ventures under article 85 of the EC treaty. We welcome the Commission's commitment to improving its procedures and speeding up the handling of article 85 cases. It is too early to assess the effects of the new procedures, but we hope they will benefit companies by clarifying the criteria against which joint ventures will be assessed and offering earlier guidance on their compatibility with the EC competition rules.

Post Office Pension Fund

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the trustees of the Post Office pension fund; and what plans he has for a further meeting.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has had no meeting with the trustees of either the Post Office's pension schemes, the Post Office staff superannuation scheme and the Post Office pension scheme, and he has no present plans for such a meeting.

Post Office Services

Mr. Stephen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will bring forward proposals to make the services of post offices available to their customers on Saturday afternoons.

Mr. Leigh: Opening hours of post offices are an operational matter for the Post Office.

Electricity

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage the regional electricity companies to continue to purchase electricity sources from renewables after 1998.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 2 March 1993, Official Report, columns 106-07.

Cycles

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the volume of cycles or cycle parts now imported into the Community; what replies he has received; and if he will place those representations and responses in the Library.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the first of the two answers on this subject which I gave on 16 February to the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) Official Report, column 126.

Connah's Quay Power Station

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade further to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, (Mr. Morgan) on 9 March, what assessment he has made of the effect of a delay in taking a decision on the proposed Connah's Quay gas-fired power station on the development of the gas fields off the north Wales coast and in Liverpool bay.

Mr. Eggar: In my answer of 9 March to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) at column 502, I assured him that all relevant factors were being carefully considered. The question posed by the hon. Member is one such factor.

Business Failures

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many businesses ceased trading in (a) Pendle and (b) the north-west in each year since 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The best available guide to trends in business starts and closures comes from VAT data. The number of businesses registered and deregistered for VAT in Pendle and the north-west in each year since 1987 is given in the table:

Registrations and deregistrations: 1987-1991

	Pendle		North West
	Registration	Deregistrations	Registrations	Deregistrations
1987	218	209	18,916	17,852
1988	309	219	21,757	17,797
1989	308	265	24,159	17,797

	Pendle		North West
	Registration	Deregistrations	Registrations	Deregistrations
1990	321	244	24,012	17,917
1991	269	285	21,028	19,533

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many properties have been disposed of by the liquidation of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International at less than the market value; what was the sum raised; and what steps are being taken to advertise the individual values achieved.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Realisation of the assets of any company in liquidation is a matter for the liquidators, whose duty it is to achieve the best possible outcome for the creditors.

Credit Marketing

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to make regulations to implement the proposals contained in his Department's consultation document on revised proposals for legislation on credit marketing; how those proposals have been amended in the light of his Department's consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 March 1993]: The proposals for legislation on credit marketing are being reconsidered. A statement will be made when that reconsideration has been completed.

Consumer Credit Act 1974

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to seek to amend the Consumer Credit Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 March 1993]: In December my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms asked the Director General of Fair Trading to review consumer credit legislation and the proposals for amending it. The proposals will be reconsidered in the light of the Director General's advice.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those local authorities which have made representations seeking assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 March 1993]: It is my intention to issue a complete list of those individuals and organisations which have put forward views under the consultation arrangements, when the announcement of the new assisted areas map is made. The only exceptions will be any views put forward to us in confidence.

Defence Retraining

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to support a European defence retraining and readaption programme to fund retraining programmes for redundant defence industry workers and provide readaption aid for affected parts of the community.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 March 1993]: At the initiative of the European Parliament 130 mecu was entered into the EC budget for 1993 for a programme of assistance to defence-dependent areas to be called KONVER. We are currently awaiting the Commission's proposals for implementing this programme.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 220

SESSION 1992–93

1st March, 1993—12th March, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes a cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
